Trustee Goodheart rose to withdraw his motion. He said he had been aware that his associates were followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, and that their daily lives were governed entirely by Christian motivs. Had he been aware, however, that they were so peculiarly sensitiv on the subject of Sunday observance he would not hav dared put in his impertinent and sacrilegious plea for giving pleasure and instruction to the poor.

There being no further business Chairman Narrowmind offered up a prayer and the meeting adjourned after singing the hymn which begins:

This is the day the Lord hath made,
Let young and old rejoice.

Laws of the Unco Guid.

The following is a copy of some of the laws which hav been enforced in the good old state of Vermont:

"No one shall be a freeman or giv a vote unless he is converted and a member of one of the churches allowed in the dominion."

"Each freeman shall swear by the blessed God to bear true allegiance to this dominion, and that Jesus is the only king."

"No dissenter from the essential worship of this dominion shall be allowed to giv a vote for electing of magistrates or any officer."

"No food or lodging shall be offered to a heretic."

"No one shall cross a river on the Sabbath but authorized clergymen."

"No one shall travel, cook victuals, make beds, sweep houses, cut hair, or shave on the Sabbath day."

"No one shall kiss his or her children on the Sabbath day or fasting days."

"The Sabbath day shall begin at sunset, Saturday."

"A man who strikes his wife shall be fined ten pounds."

"A woman who strikes her husband shall be punished as the law directs."

"No man shall court a maid in person or by letter without obtaining the consent of her parents; five pounds penalty for the first offense, ten for the second, and for the third, imprisonment during the pleasure of the court."

Lectures and Meetings.

MAY 1st George Francis Train will explain the Italian Embroglio to the members of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

W. S BELL lectured in Denver, Col., April 18th and 19th, and is now in Iowa. Liberals of that state may address him at Clinton, in care of James A. Greenhill.

DURING the last six months J. E. Remsburg has visited thirty-six states and territories, traveling twenty thousand miles and delivering one hundred and fifty lectures.

MISS ADA CAMPBELL, of New York, will lecture before the Newark Liberal League, 177 Halsey street, on Sunday, May 3d, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Subject, "The Real Atonement; or, Man's True Savior."

SOME amiable individual in the Tennessee legislature endeavored recently to repeal the statue depriving unbelievers in Christianity of their standing in court, but the legislature refused to pass the bill he introduced for that purpose. It seems that the lawmakers of that state regard freight trains on Sunday as of more importance than human equality and justice, for a bill prohibiting such running was also defeated.

Communications.

The True Currency.

On Jan. 1, 1881, a convention was held in Independence Hall—a convention not of men or women, but a convention of representativs of that form of life that exists in the mineral and vegetable kingdoms. There were representativs of Gold, Silver, Iron, Cotton, Sugar, Corn, Rice, and many other of the various forms of life as it exists in these kingdoms.

The occasion was this: For a long time previous to the year 1860, by the decrees and customs of men Gold and Silver were the sovereigns of all other substances. That is to say, while in this country all persons are supposed to be sovereigns, in a kingdom the sovereignty is in a king, the rest being subjects, so Gold and Silver represented the sovereignty of all other substances, while they in turn were subjected to them. In the year 1860, however, a fearful epidemic called civil war broke out amongst mankind in this United States and for four years raged with great fury. The sponsors of Gold and Silver were alarmed. They felt that these sovereigns were too precious to stand the hazard of war, and imitating the example of a certain French king who always ran away when there was danger, Gold was spirited away across the ocean to junket with the sovereigns of the Old World, while Silver found a more convenient refuge across the Canadian border, and for twenty years they were both aliens to our country. In the mean time the disease of war had spent its force. Peace once more reigned throughout the land. Gold and Silver still tarried—were not with us, or at least in their sovereign capacity. After a while, however, there came to be clamorings for their reinthronement. Mutterings were heard that matters were going wrong. Coal was too dear for the buyer and too cheap for the seller. Butter was strong and cheese was mitey. Peas would mix with coffee and glucose would pass itself off for sugar. These and a thousand other equally potent reasons were given why Gold and Silver should be reinstated in their sovereign capacity, and after much counseling it was enacted that on and after Jan. 1, 1881, Gold and Silver should again assume the form of royalty over all other substances.

When the announcement was made that Gold and Silver were to be reinstated in their sovereignty, there was a commotion in the various forms of mineral and vegetable life. It was decided by them to hold a convention on the day this was to take place, and we hav undertaken in the briefest manner to giv the main points expressed at that gathering. Iron was elected to preside, and on taking the chair spoke as follows: "I am profoundly grateful for your kindness in selecting me as your chairman, though I am obliged to confess myself somewhat rusty as to the duties of a presiding officer. The business of the meeting is of a dual character. You are to receive and giv due reverence to the sovereigns who hav returned to reign over you, also to giv expression to any thoughts that may hav come to you during your last twenty years' experience. It is the statement of an eminent philosopher among men that the same law of mechanical action governs all life from man down to the lowest forms of organized matter. Reasoning from these premises we can infer that whatever is good for man might be good for us. Now, mankind in this country declared themselvs free sovereigns, while they left us subject to the sovereignty of Gold and Silver. It is for you to consider whether the two cases are analogous. At all events, when men desire to accomplish certain results they hold conventions, and this is what this body has decided to do. In order to insure harmony in the proceedings I hav taken advantage of the prerogativs of the chair, and hav selected Sugar to giv the welcoming speech. As Gold has arrived we will now proceed."

Sugar, putting on its sweetest smiles, said: "Your most golden majesty, it is with profound admiration and gratitude that we once more behold you among us in your sovereign capacity. We hav long felt our need of you and trust you hav returned nevermore to leave us. Will you pardon my presumption in saying that I hav sometimes thought myself related to you? Before I hav been subjected to the work of those misnamed refiners, it is well known that I possess that golden color similar to yourself. Should it ever again become necessary for you to leave this country, would it be asking too much that you should abdicate in my favor as your next of kin? In behalf of this assembly I am happy to welcome you once more to your subjects."

"My friends and subjects, it is with mingled feelings of pride and pleasure that I assume the role of sovereignty once more among you. Notwithstanding the long period of my absence it is creditable to your honor and patriotism that you turn once more to your true sovereign, and I trust this feeling will be a lasting one. I understand that Silver is putting forward the claim that it is to be equal to me and that we are to be joint sovereigns over you. I assure you that is not in accordance with the latest ideas of sovereignty in the Old World, or the best informed in this. It is proper that Silver should assume the position of sovereignty in a limited sense; but quite out of character that it should be fully equal to myself. I must also administer a rebuke to you, Sugar, for suggesting that possibly you might be a relation of mine. I hav no relativs, but stand completely by myself. Therefore dismiss all dreams of royalty, and perform the duties assigned you by nature. I am proud, however, to consider you one of the best of my subjects. I assure you, Miss Sugar, you are very sweet."

Silver, in the mean time, had arrived, and was incensed at the design of Gold to partially ignore it in the reconstruction. It said: "My friends, whatever view Gold may hav about sovereignty in the Old World, it may rest assured that it will not be accepted here. If Gold is not satisfied with an equal division of power with me, to use the vernacular of the camp, 'It can git.' Am I not the Dollar of the Daddies? And if it comes to a question of a survival of the fittest, I do not fear the result. Let Gold go back to the Old World and mingle with the sovereigns there. I am fully able to reign over you in the New World in the most complete and royal manner."

Cotton was announced as the next speaker, and said: "Where were Gold and Silver in times that tried men's souls? Junketing in foreign climes, skulking in Canada, or perchance hiding in old ladies' stockings. In those days it was Cotton that was king. It was Cotton only that brought Gold and Silver from their hiding-places, but at my command they came forth. Besides, I belong to that section of country where mankind believes that white is by divine permission the ruling power. Now, it is well known to all that I am the whitest of the white. I express the hope that this convention will echo the sentiment that 'Cotton is king.'"

Coal was the next speaker, and ridiculed the idea that Cotton was king, when with one touch of its hot breath it could burn it to powder. Cotton comes from that section of country that is afflicted with secession, state rights, colorphobia, and yellow fever. Coal became red with heat, and declared it could melt Iron, but the chair ironically asked, "In melting me what becomes of you?" This was a poser for Coal, and turning to an ashy paleness, he subsided.

There was one representativ in the body, young, but vigorous and lusty, of a greasy and uncouth appearance, which essayed to be heard. The chair recognized a familiar acquaintance by announcing that Petroleum had the floor. "My friends, I am the light of the world; notwithstanding the claims of Gas and Electricity I am still to be found in the homes and among the delvers in all parts of the industrial hive. As a sovereign I ought to succeed, as I am skilled in pipe-laying and know well how to oil the machinery of life. I trust my claims for promotion will be fully considered."

There was a decided feeling of contempt when Yeast rose to speak. It said that good Yeast was always on the rise. It had been associated for a long time with the staff of life, and wished to say a good word for it. In any future deliberations of this body for the selection of a king it trusted that it would not overlook the flower (flour) of the family.

There were other speeches, but as the drift of them was somewhat similar, we will spare our readers a further infliction in this connection, and introduce, by way of biography, another participant in the proceedings of the convention. Soon after the departure of Gold and Silver in 1860, there appeared a new substance known as the Greenback. Wise men from the West had prophesied its coming, and on its arrival had fallen down and worshiped it. Like the baby in the manger, its physical composition was of the most humble character, and in its formativ process was first baptized in water. Born in troublesome times, it received the baptism of fire. In a miraculous way it escaped the tyrannical Herods who sought to destroy it. It was subject to abuse, and, in derision, was called the Rag Baby. Like the youthful Nazarene, it disputed with the learned and those in authority, and overthrew the money-changers in the financial temple. It went about doing many wonderful works. It was a messenger bringing glad tidings to the sick and in distress, and joy to the needy. Had a record been kept of all its wonderful works no building would hav contained them. Like the savior of the world, it was crucified by the government at the demand of its chief priests and scribes, but rose again and appeared before the convention, and to such portions of them as had ears to hear it spoke as follows: "Of myself I am nothing, not even a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal—a mere worthless rag—but with your indorsement I am of more value than all the gold and silver in the world. As your representativ I can level mountains and span rivers. I can restore life to the financially dead and feed a multitude without diminution. As partakers of that life which belongs to all, welcome Gold and Silver to that mutual sovereignty, which of right is equally yours and theirs, but do not bow down before any image whether it be in the form of golden calves or golden dollars. Make me your servant, but not master. In peace I am with you; in war, unlike Gold, I will not desert you. Investing Gold and Silver with special sovereignty over yourselvs, is only a fit accompaniment to that monarchy that still clings to the Old World, and is entirely out of place in a republic."

There was a disturbance in the audience at the speech of Greenback, and Gold, true to its instincts, quietly stole away. But the convention was finally adjourned to meet at the hustings.

Letters to Workingmen.

I hav sought to show that man, being in ignorance, began wrong. That he was influenced in his thoughts and actions by false ideas. That religion enslaved him by establishing an authority debasing in its character, engendering in his mind a belief that he was created by a God as a puppet, a plaything; that he had no rights this God was bound to respect; that his nature was vile—so very bad, in fact, that it was almost a mercy in God to damn him to never-ending flame. I hav sought to show that man is the highest result of the slow process of evolution which is summed up in the phrases, "struggle for existence," the "survival of the fittest," and the "law of differentiation." I know how inadequate these expressions are to convey to your mind any answer to the question of how things hav come to be as they are. The wonderful adaptation, the beauty and harmony, of things about you, all suggest that there must be intelligence at work somewhere or somehow, and while you may be, and no doubt are, disgusted with the pretensions of those who claim to know something of the will of this power and seek to control or direct your actions as agents of this intelligence; while you hav outgrown creeds and biblical authority, believing the book was written by priests to keep the people in ignorance and themselvs in office, still the idea of no God is shocking, and, like Voltaire, you think the idea of a God a necessity of man's nature. But could Voltaire hav had the evidence we now possess of the origin of the God idea, and hav been familiar with the facts that form the evolution hypothesis, I believe his theory of God would hav been considerably modified. I advise you, friends, to get and carefully read Darwin's "Origin of Species." The Humboldt Library has it in a cheap edition, as well as his later work, "The Descent of Man." Read them carefully, as well as Huxley on "Man's Place in Nature," and "The Physical Basis of Life;" Romanes's "Evidence of Organic Evolution;" and the four essays of Th. Ribot, "Diseases of Memory," "of the Will," "of Personality," and "The Psychology of Attention." These, if carefully perused with a determination to know all that it is possible to know of the truth of our origin, will awaken such an interest in your mind as no work of romance ever possessed. You will be convinced that "truth is stranger than fiction."

But the story of biology is no more wonderful than that of astronomy, geology, and chemistry. Read Balfour Stewart's "Conservation of Energy," Kingsley's "Town Geology," and Proctor's "Essays on Astronomy." Read Miller's "Romance of Astronomy," and you will agree with me that it discounts any work of fiction ever penned. You will find the study of science wonderful, grand, and interesting, but you will find no evidence of a plan or design, no evidence of any intelligence adapting ways to means; nothing but the workings of force on lines of least resistance. Science has demonstrated beyond dispute the utter impossibility of anything to indicate that there is in nature any will or desire or beneficent intention looking to the particular good of any species or kind. True exposition shows that the whole course of nature is one gigantic warfare. If we look upon it in any other light than as the working of unconscious force, of blind, impartial law, "it is bad," as Gunning says, "shockingly bad. A female buries her jaws in the gills of a fish and hangs there every moment of her life sucking the life of her host. The male buries his jaws in the body of the female, sucking from his mate the life she is sucking from the fish. We stand aghast before the pangs inflicted on all ranks of conscious life with no compensating good to the victim, and no enjoyment to the parasite. . . . The flea that bites you is itself bitten. The flea that bites the flea is bitten by a biter still smaller. We hav taken a musketo gorged with our own blood and found her body covered with parasites which were sucking from her the blood she had drawn from us. . . . Organic nature is the war of each against all." Notwithstanding the bias of belief in favor of establishing the proof that everything was designed, it has failed, utterly failed to do so, and the course of science is now to the opposit extreme. Even Spencer's "Great Unknown" is becoming more and more unknown and undemonstrable.

And yet the old desire for a God is pervading much of our scientific literature to-day. And who can wonder, when from the great past comes

> The shudders of restraining awe,
> The slow-wept tears of contrite memory;
> Faith's prayerful labor, and the food divine
> Of fast ecstatic,

and the fact of man's limited knowledge, his utter ignorance of matter and its forces, of the how and the why of its action? He may trace the evolution of the various organs; the complicated and wonderful mechanism of the eye, the ear, and the whole nervous system, and acknowledge, as he must, his utter ignorance of why the light of the sun and the necessity of the animal should start pigment cells upon the skin which in course of generations develop organs of sight, of hearing, and all the sensatory apparatus of the nervous system. It is indeed wonderful, and the wonder is not lessened to know that a little intelligence applied at any stage of the process could hasten and improve the organization; that a little "infinit wisdom" might prevent the faults and imperfections and diseases of parents being transmitted to the children, even to the fourth generation; to know that the most perfect organ contains many imperfections, which infinit goodness would never hav allowed. Our wonder and amazement is not lessened. But the awesome fear which filled our minds in contemplating a creator is gone, and we are left to enjoy the beauty and harmony, and feel that our increasing intelligence will enable us to right many of the wrongs about us; and, better than this, to feel there is no one to blame—that things are as they are because, under the circumstances, they could be no other.

But the ego of man introduces a new factor in evolution. Man, being possessed of the highest intelligence, is master of the situation. No longer subservient to any higher being, he can pursue his investigation in no fear of intruding upon the domain of a God. And although in regard to any knowledge of infinity we are but there is really no necessity that we should know the why and wherefore of matter and its laws. The fact of their existence, their indestructible and uncreatable qualities, warrant us in asserting that their beginning or end is an absurd and unthinkable proposition. I hav sought to show that whatever is, is but a modification of what was; that nature is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and human nature is no exception to the rule. Intelligence is the dial that marks the progress of the ages, and shows the difference between ourselvs and the "gentleman in the dug-out." We are as selfish in our way as he. We love our liberty no more and hate oppression no less. Ignorance prevented him, as it still prevents us, from grasping true principles. But as the darkness of ignorance and superstition fades, the light of science and right reason enables us to act more and more from correct principles. This is the "data of ethics," the science of right conduct. Yet the change is almost unconscious. We still cling to theories which in practice we abandon. We are continually acting upon principles which in themselvs we repudiate, and loudly applaud others which we dare not practice. We talk of the beauty and utility of truth, yet deliberately lie to our own children. We are continually denouncing the tyrants of church and state, while playing the tyrant in our own family. We are continually singing the praises of liberty, yet are continually enacting laws for its suppression. We talk of the degradation of slavery, and yet hold our wives and rear our children in its baneful bonds. We declaim against the evil influence of street and saloon in the education of our young, yet allow them to receive from thence the most important instruction of their lives. We claim that knowledge is power and recount the beauties and utilities of an education, yet fear to enlighten our children on some of the most important truths pertaining to their welfare.

> An infant crying in the night,
> An infant crying for the light,

I hav sought to show—and this is the essence of my argument—the non-existence of authority higher than man's will. That, coming up as we hav from a common origin, there is no such thing as man acquiring rights over his fellow-man except by physical force; that one excels another only by force of circumstances; that our existence implies no obligation on our part, as our preference in regard to being was never consulted; that centered in ourselvs is "God and king and law." All institutions of authority hav come into existence by and through man's endeavor to rob and enslave his fellow-men. Yet the robber was no worse than the slave. Ignorance and superstition directed alike the actions of both. And man is ever better than his institutions. He means well, but he creates a soulless monster which is forever defeating its own object. Introduced as a necessity, the idea becomes ingrained. A reformer may be tolerated, but an abolitionist must be damned. And this is the reason for our reverent feelings for a deity even though his recorded acts we hold in abhorrence. And this is why we are submitting to the outrageous system of robbery perpetrated by civil government. And thus I end my letter as I began. Man, being in ignorance, began wrong. And his institutions were wrong. Yet he clings to them still—to his early faith and necessary institutions, while admitting their manifold evil and degrading influence.

Let Us Pray.

O thou mighty devil! thou horny-headed and skinny-boned devil with a long tail and double hoof, thou eater of brimstone and saltpeter who breathest flames and smoke, thou chief of ten thousand imps who wadest through all the fires of the inferno with impunity—listen, we pray thee, to our earnest supplication and hav mercy upon us! Thou who didst tempt our Lord and savior Jesus Christ and set him up on the lightning-rod of the holy temple and dare him to jump down, wilt thou kindly spare us from a similar experience at thy hands? We beseech thee, O Satan! not to offer us any of the kingdoms of the world or any considerable portion thereof, lest we be tempted to either take it or slay thee. Hast thou not already had sufficient revenge upon us by robbing our dear old grandmother Eve of her virtue and causing her and our other ancestor to be abused and run out of that beautiful garden with its extraordinary and unheard-of rivers by an angry God who is noted for taking great offense at small things? Think of all the misery thou hast caused since the beginning of the world—think of the manual labor we hav performed for thy sake! "The sweat of our brows" would fill the oceans, and if the real truth was known and the statistics published in a Prohibition tract, it would be found that we hav sweat all the water on the earth through the pores of our skins several times. Be contented, we pray thee, to ease up on us a little space. And, O Beelzebub! we wish to ask one more great favor of thee, and we ask it with bowed head and bended knees. We know of a little curly-headed, blue-eyed baby boy who is (according to the creed and confessions of faith) at this moment in thy realm of torment. He is suffering excruciating agony and screaming with terror and pain. He is calling in pitiable accents to his papa and mamma for only one little drop of water to relieve him if for but a second. And, oh, we pray thee, Satan, please grant this one request and giv him a glass of cold water for the love his parents bear him. We pray thee to do this one little act of kindness, because the dear little innocent fellow never did a bad act during the short space of his life. If it is strictly the command of God and thou canst not do this trifling favor, then, O Satan! can not his father (who is to blame for not having him baptized with holy water) take his place in torment? His father, who loves and pities him, would willingly suffer tortures forever, if he who is so innocent and so young and so sweet could be saved from this terrible torment and his dear little eyes could be dried. O dear devil! wilt thou not hear and grant this our humble prayer for his sake, and we will serve thee and praise thy name forever. Amen. F. H. H.

Liberals in Convention.

From the Denison Sunday Gazetteer.

The second state meeting of the Liberal Association of Texas, took place in San Antonio, commencing Friday, April 10th, at 10 o'clock A M., and continuing three days. There were about fifty members present from nearly as many portions of the state. The sessions took place in the hall of the local Liberal Association, and the first meeting was called to order by its president, Col. George W. Sweet, who, after a few prefatory remarks, introduced the president of the Association, J. D. Shaw, of Waco. Mr. Shaw delivered a short and appropriate address. He stated the Association now numbered a little over five hundred members. He outlined the progress made the past year and reported the organization of six auxiliary societies. Through him the executiv committee made a report showing the Association to be in a healthy condition financially. After the address and the report the Association proceeded at once with the business before it. The secretary being absent, Mr. A. Chapman, of San Antonio, was elected secretary pro tempore. The president was authorized to appoint a committee of seven on organization, and he announced that he would name the committee in the evening. The Association was informed that an informal reception would be tendered the delegates at St. Leonard Hotel at 8 o'clock. The convention then took a recess.

At 3 o'clock the convention reconvened. The president announced the committee on organization as follows: Judge J. P. Richardson, of Austin; W. J. Allen, of San Antonio; B. C. Murray, of Denison; J. A. Handley, of Moscow; George Bondies, of Forney; C. F. Dunn, of Uvalde, and N. Chaddock. Col. G. W. Sweet was added to the committee. The report of the executiv committee was referred to the committee on organization. On motion the president appointed the following committee on resolutions: Messrs. A. L. Teagarden, of Austin; A. Chapman, of San Antonio; M. Parish, of Moscow; Dr. L. J. Russell, of Bell county, and Dr. W. W. Graves, of Whitesboro. The remainder of the two hours' session was taken up in discussing various suggestions for the advancement of the objects of the Association, and especially that of having the Association chartered, with power to charter subordinate societies.

The convention met Saturday at 11:30 and got down to steady work. The committee on organization submitted majority and minority reports. The majority report was signed by five of the seven members of the committee. The report was as follows:

> We recommend that this Association formally adopt the Nine Demands of Liberalism.
> We further recommend that the first and most important object of this Association is to firmly establish the base of operations which has been commenced by Mr. Shaw of Waco. Following the action of the meeting in the summer of 1890, we hereby direct that the funds of the Association be applied to pay the debt and interest on the lot now held by Mr. Shaw, and to the building of a permanent office for the Independent Pulpit.

The minority report was tabled. The majority report was then taken up. A motion was adopted that it be discussed by sections. The first section, relating to the Nine Demands of Liberalism, was approved. A prolonged debate followed a motion to adopt the section relating to the disposition of the funds. Mr. Shaw argued against this section. He represented that the report put him in a false light, as he did not wish the Association to assume his debts. The discussion was also participated in by Messrs. Allen, Richardson, Temple, Graves, Becking, Sweet, Copeland, Sevier, and Murray. On a final vote this section was rejected.

The committee on resolutions submitted a report on the statement furnished by the executiv committee. It was recommended that the funds now on hand be applied toward strengthening the Liberal base at Waco. This report was laid over for action at the afternoon session.

At the afternoon session the report of the committee on resolutions was taken up, and after a short discussion the report was adopted.

The following resolution was offered and unanimously adopted:

> Resolved, That a committee of three members, one of whom shall be a lawyer, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to draft and hav printed a form of a last will and testament, for the use of Liberals. The provisions of this will shall be so set forth as to prevent priests or parsons from making themselvs obnoxious at our death-beds and from holding funeral obsequies at our graves.

President Shaw called the attention of the convention to the challenge of Elder L. S. Scott, a Campbellite minister, who wanted a debate on religious topics with any champion the Liberals might put up.

It was the general opinion that nothing should be allowed to interfere with the regular business of the Association, that the debate would keep, and that after adjournment, if Mr. Scott wanted to hav a tilt with a Freethinker he would be accommodated. It was subsequently announced that the debate would take place at the Opera House between Elder Scott and Mr. A. O. Phelps, commencing Monday night. Colonel Sweet tendered the use of Liberal Hall free to any speaker who would do battle with the Christian. The annual election of officers was announced as the next thing in order. Judge J. P. Richardson, of Austin, was placed in nomination for the office of president and was elected unanimously. A. L. Teagarden, also of Austin, was nominated and elected secretary. B. C. Murray was nominated for treasurer, but by his request his name was withdrawn in favor of the present treasurer, Mr. T. V. Munson, of Denison, who was elected.

Mr. Shaw, in a few graceful remarks, relinquished the gavel to his successor. A vote of thanks was tendered by the convention to the retiring officers. A motion that the secretary be instructed to hav printed one thousand copies of the proceedings for distribution, was adopted. The convention then adjourned to meet at Mission Garden at 7:30 o'clock P M. At the evening session the following resolutions were submitted by the committee on resolutions and unanimously adopted: The thanks of the Association were given to A. O. Phelps, S. P. Putnam, Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, and others, for their labors in Texas; resolutions of respect to the memory of Chas. Bradlaugh and J. P. Mendum were passed; a resolution encouraging the work of the Independent Pulpit, and a resolution opposing the movement to hav the Chicago World's Fair closed on Sundays, adopted. Also, that the thanks of this convention be tendered to the press of San Antonio for its full and accurate reports of the meetings.

Friday night the Association was addressed at Mission Garden by Judge Richardson, of Austin, and Ex-Rev. M. Sevier, of Vernon; Saturday night, at the same place, by the president, Mr. J. D. Shaw, and Colonel Sweet of the local Association; Sunday night, by Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel and others. After the lecture Saturday night the delegates were tendered a reception by the San Antonio Liberal Association at the Garden, where an excellent supper was served, followed by a dance.

The meetings on the whole were as harmonious as such gatherings usually are, and after the work was over, general good feeling prevailed. The local press gave the Association courteous notices, and the Express published very full and impartial reports every morning during the session. The place of the next meeting will be announced later by the executiv committee.

We need more subscribers to the paper. We giv more than any other Freethought journal for the money, and consequently it costs more to publish the paper. The pictures alone cost some fifteen hundred dollars annually; yet they are a feature that all would dislike to hav discontinued. They are forcible weapons against superstition, and do their work well. But our friends should not forget that they cost a good deal.

All of It is Good.

From Watts's Literary Guide.

The contents of THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL FOR 1891 are excellent. Miss Ida C. Craddock writes charmingly on "Some Alaskan Myths;" Mr. T. B. Wakeman discourses eloquently "Anent Spooks: Where are They?" while Mr. Watson Heston contributes a humorous sketch entitled "Shoutin' Joe," being the history of a local Methodist preacher. The illustrations are, as usual, remarkably good.

Liberty in Literature.

From the Madisonensis, Hamilton, N. Y.

An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1890, by Robert G. Ingersoll as a testimonial to Walt Whitman. That which has endeared the aged poet to so many is here brought out with all the force and beauty of the renowned orator. His chief characteristics are revealed and explained in a way that cannot fail to attract. Several poems of Whitman's are given special attention.

The Evils of Sunday Mail.

Mr. H. R. Schramm, of Bellbuckle, Tenn., without doubt a reverend, contributes to the Baptist and Reflector a paper on the "Evils of Sunday Mail," of so unique a character that some of its paragraphs are worth reproducing for the amusement of Freethinkers. The first reason advanced why Sunday mails are evil is this:

"1. The temptation for Christians to set a bad example, and influence sinners to lose regard for the Sabbath; for if mail is opened on Sunday many Christians will be found at the post-office getting their mail, and we should set good examples before the world."

That is to say, Christians are of such weak natures, and their religion sits upon them so lightly, that they could not remain at home if they knew the post-office doors were open. Poor things!

The second reason is thus outlined:

"2. It is injurious to the spirituality of the Christian to secularize his mind with Sunday mail. His Sunday paper is the leech that fastens himself to the Christian and draws out what spirituality there is in his mind, and secular things crowd into the mind.

"If he is a superintendent he is so engrossed with the things of the world that he is not in such a condition as he should be before his school, or perhaps his mail has made him late, and the scholars must learn from him the lesson of getting late to Sunday-school.

"The same is true with the teacher. On account of this delay he can't hav a word with his scholars, and he, too, is perhaps thinking about other things than the lesson. And the scholars perhaps hav been after their mail and filled their minds with the Sunday paper, and it unfits them for reciting.

"The others are business men, and they perhaps get orders for goods, and while the preaching is in progress that has been prepared by earnest prayer and labor to benefit those persons, their minds are on filling these orders the next day, and so preaching is a noise, but does not edify them, and thus many merchants become careless and cold, lose their interest in the church, and are led off into temptation because they were not spiritually minded enough on Sunday. The mail was the serpent that poisoned them."

So, then, the Sunday paper is more powerful than the word of God, the word of the preacher, and the will of the Christian combined! It knocks his spirituality higher than a kite, and so the law must come in and suppress the paper!

Poor superintendent, poor teacher, poor scholars. Too bad, too bad, too bad!

And how that poor business man will everlastingly squirm in hell for thinking of the order he got in that mail and for not hearing understandingly the preacher's beseeching appeal for a large donation to the contribution-box. But if the merchant did not lose his interest in the church—that is to say, did not refuse to contribute heavily—would any preacher care whether he thought of his orders or of the sermon?

Reason three:

"3. The cause of Christ is injured by distributing the mail on Sunday. The people that ought to be at Sunday-school and at church congregate at the depot and then go to the post-office, where they remain for some time, and very few, if any, talking about religion. After the mail is opened the Sunday newspaper is examined, and then at many places it is too late for Sunday-school, and they get interested in the paper and in many instances never attend church, and so they can't be reached by the preaching."

Ah! The Sunday mails keep people from church, therefore Sunday mails must go. The preachers must be protected by law and brute force in their monopoly of one-seventh of the people's time. Mr. Schramm seems to think that the clergy own Sunday from sunrise to sunset.

Reason four:

"4. The Sabbath day is desecrated by allowing the mail to be distributed on Sunday. We hav six days in which we can get our mail and we ought not to rob the Lord of the seventh day. We favor having our mail on the Sabbath, and we thus compel the trains to run on Sunday, and work a lot of hands whose souls are lost, with no chance for them to hear preaching. Who is responsible? Are not those who demand the trains to run so they can get their Sunday mail? Christians, will your skirts be clear of their blood?"

We should be extremely gratified to hav Mr. Schramm, or anyone else, show how the Lord owns any more of Sunday than of any other day. If we are to follow his example as set forth in the Bible, he labored on that day; and what the Lord did certainly ought to be good enough for Christians to do. And if preaching saves souls, why cannot the sinner hear it upon some other day than Sunday, and so get to heaven while we get our mails?

"The Bible says: 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' People were punished in Old Testament times for violating the Sabbath. Is not distributing the mail on Sunday a violation of the Sabbath, and can it please God for us to practice it?"

The day the people were punished for violating is, as everyone knows, Saturday, and not Sunday. Saturday is also the day the Bible commands Mr. Schramm to keep. Sunday has nothing to do with the case.

"If Christians don't raise their voice and use their influence for the observance of the Sabbath, will it be long before we will not hav any Sabbath?"

And the preachers know that with the going of the day will go their holy and reverend selvs. And that is precisely what ails them.

Mr. Schramm concludes his little essay with this exhortation to his fellow-pulpiteers:

"1. Let preachers preach against it, showing that it is one of the evils that should be discontinued.

"2. Let all Christians keep away from the post-office themselvs on Sunday, so that sinners will not see any Christians there, and thus teach them that you are willing to make the sacrifice to do without your mail for the love that you hav for the Lord's day.

"3. Talk with sinners during the week and invite them to your Sunday-school and preaching, ask them kindly to come to Sunday-school in place of going after the mail; suggest to them that it will be more profitable to them, and that they ought not to compel the postmaster to stay there on Sunday, but let him hav a chance to go to Sunday-school.

"4. Pray over the matter, ask God to help you, and go to work and get up a petition, and see if you cannot get a majority of your corporation to sign it, and send it to the postmaster-general, and thus do away with this evil, which causes a great many other evils. Do away with it, and thousands of souls will be saved."

Mr. Watson Heston sent us the Baptist and Reflector containing Mr. Schramm's article, and right across the bottom of its two columns he wrote: "Doesn't this damn fool need a leather medal?" We are compelled to answer Mr. Heston's profane query in the affirmativ.

To Think About.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 10th we printed what to the average unthinking mortal was some queer statistics relating to the people confined in the Kansas penitentiary at Leavenworth. Old-fashioned notions concerning the incentiv to crime and regarding the environments and conditions of those found in prisons were set aside as erroneous, and the students of sociology found from the figures that they must begin all over again. The report showed

Prisoners whose parents were church-members	500
" " " " non-church-members	175
" who did not know anything about it	69

The denominations of these parental sponsors were:

Catholic	69	Lutheran	20
Methodist	175	Episcopal	7
Baptist	125	Congregational	8
Presbyterian	80	Dunkard	1
United Presbyterian	2	Advent	4
Cumberland Pres'terian	10	Quaker	1
Christian	80	Unknown	10
United Brethren	8

More than one-half of the prisoners belonged to some churches, the Methodists leading. More than two to one—500 to 244—attended Sunday-school regularly in their younger days; the parents of more than one-half were total abstainers from liquor; about one-half were themselvs total abstainers; there were only ten whose ancestry was criminal; the country had been the homes of one-third more than had lived in cities; nearly one-half were too pious to swear; most of them had had good associations, had stayed in the house nights, and were of stable disposition.

By way of the Globe of Tacoma, Washington, we now get the figures from the Pennsylvania penitentiary, which curiously corroborate those from Kansas. During 1890 there were two hundred and ninety prisoners received. There were pious as follows:

Catholics	97	United Brethren	6
Methodists	91	Episcopalians	5
Lutherans	25	Scattering	18
Presbyterians	25	No denomination	10
Baptists	13

On the temperance question they were equally strong:

Total abstinence	52	Occasional drinkers	129
Moderate drinkers	91	Habitual drinkers	25

All but forty-two had attended school; all but one had a trade, and two-thirds of them lived with parents until they were old enough to leave school. During the two years this report covers the prisoners borrowed from the prison library, books as follows: History, 2,428; biography, 3,352; science, 4,843; morals, 1,512; poetry, 1,029; fiction, 11,810; and it is apparent that a good many hours were spent in reading.

This is as startling an upset of preconceived notions as the figures of the Leavenworth institutions. In that case it was found that temperance parents furnished more criminal children than drinking parents; that only a very few of the criminals were such through heredity; that the country breeds criminals faster than the city, while the towns make boys comparativly moral; that but very few could trace their downfall to bad associates; and that most of the prisoners had usually spent their evenings at home. In this we find fourteen-fifteenths of the criminals church-members, almost as great a proportion educated, about one-fifth total abstainers, and but one-twelfth habitual drinkers, all but one with some trade or occupation, and almost all hav had home training.

In commenting upon the figures of the first report, we said: "All these things are so different from the prevalent idea that a study of them will incline one to question either the value of statistics or of a 'simple Christian life.'" In giving publicity to the figures of the Pennsylvania institution, the Tacoma Globe thus moralizes: "If these same ratios hold good in other states, our students of morality had best giv the statistics close attention and readjust certain prevalent beliefs. Pennsylvania is doubtless no worse and no better than other states, but the idea of a state penitentiary filled with sober, educated, industrious, well-trained church-members certainly offers food for thought."

It is funny, isn't it?

A Nice Scheme Proposed.

The Romish church in Pennsylvania is endeavoring to introduce the "Poughkeepsie plan" of operating public-parochial schools into that state. In the state senate two weeks ago Mr. Hall of Elk county introduced a preamble and resolution, with a view to making laws in harmony therewith, of which the following is the nub:

"Resolved (if the House concur), that a joint committee of six be appointed whose duty it shall be to confer with the managers of such denominational schools throughout the state, in order to learn if some feasible plan may be adopted whereby the control of such schools may be given over to the various school boards, to become a part of the public school system and be made practically non-sectarian, so as to come within the meaning of the constitution, and if so, to draft and report a bill to secure that end."

At the same time an act was proposed qualifying all who hav been parochial school-teachers to continue their work without submitting to examination. This of itself is a monstrous proposal, for the average parochial school-teacher needs to go to school herself for several years before being placed in a position to teach others.

The plan which the managers of the denominational schools desire to see adopted by the state is to let the state support the schools, make them undenominational during a portion of the school hours, afterward allowing the teachers, who are to be recommended for appointment by the priests, to detain the children for instruction in sectarian religion. The schools will, therefore, as a Philadelphia Protestant journal points out, to all intents and purposes remain Roman Catholic schools, under the nominal control of the school board for certain hours, but with the priests as the power behind the throne dictating the appointment of teachers and using the school to train a generation who shall be thoroughly subservient to the Roman church and available in any emergency for priestly or ecclesiastical use.

The ingeniousness of the plan is worthy its Jesuitical source!

Editorial Notes.

PERHAPS some of our readers can help our religious friends to some information. Mr. F. G. McCauley, of Fredericksburg, O., desires information upon this point: "Are there any well-authenticated cases of persons rescued from the drink habit relapsing into it through the use of fermented wine at the communion table?"

AN Omaha Universalist preacher thinks—or says, rather—that Barnum was "an agent in the hand of God" to amuse people. What, was God the principal behind Barnum in the show business? We are willing to admit that Barnum was a Universalist, which isn't enough of a Christian sect to hurt, but we deny that God was running a circus under his name.

THE following notice appeared in the Denver newspapers recently:

"Hon. Joseph Wolfe, of Boulder, who has been for forty years an Atheist, and was recently converted to a belief in God through Christian science, will lecture at Woodmen's Hall, Charles block, on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. His subject will be 'The Nugget of Gold and the Priceless Pearl.'"

Who in thunder is the Hon. Joseph Wolfe, of Boulder?

THE editor of the Twentieth Century says: "As I hav said again and again, in spite of disappointed contributors, I think we do liv up to our motto: 'Hear the Other Side.'" The Twentieth Century brags more about its liberality and practices it less than any other journal coming to this office, with the exception possibly of Mr. Tucker's Liberty. THE TRUTH SEEKER is the only journal which absolutely does what the others ostentatiously pretend to do.

FREETHINKERS everywhere will be sorry to learn that Colonel Ingersoll has been seriously ill for several days, but glad to know that he is now able to sit up and is convalescent. The Sun calls it a narrow escape, as the illness was an inflammation of the appendix vermiformis, believed to be caused by the intrusion of a foreign body. Narrow escape or not, everyone who knows Colonel Ingersoll breathes a great big breath of joy to know that he is out of danger and out of bed.

THE Rev. Mr. Talmage has broken loose again in a series of sermons on "the ten plagues of the cities." One of his "plagues" is "Infidelity, the Mother of all Plagues." It is but a condensed repetition of his harangs against Colonel Ingersoll some years ago, and is not, in our opinion, worth further notice. The Brooklyn Presbyterian's "arguments" are so completely demolished in "Ingersoll on Talmage"—and he has given no new ones—that it is worth no one's while to assail him now. There is no need of killing the dead.

ROSE TERRY COOKE says: "Nothing would induce me to go to the polls and vote, for the reason that I do not think it is a woman's place or within a woman's capacity to do so. I fully agree with St. Paul in his estimate of a woman's powers and duties." The Troy Press adds to this sentiment: "For a woman with a reputation Mrs. Cooke is most meek and submissiv—on paper. She acknowledges voting to be beyond a woman's capacity, and with St. Paul thinks that humility, obedience, and silence best become her. We are sorry that she has such a poor opinion of her sex."

THE Montreal weekly Witness says: "The Freethought establishment on Fleet street, London, has been closed. It has been for years the propagator of Atheistic literature, and has long been identified with the name of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. The reason for closing it is that there is now so little demand for the kind of publications in which it dealt that it did not pay. The rage for its issues, which at one time was so extensiv, has ceased." This is a very misleading statement. Only the store has been given up. As much heresy comes from the Secularists of London now as at any previous time, and the National Secular Society is in a flourishing condition.

WHAT a dreadful muss there is in "the church" these perilous days, exclaims the Banner of Light. Ministers are called to account for alleged immoral conduct, while others are accused of stealing, etc. Now we find that the New York presbytery has appointed a committee to examin the alleged heretical utterances of Dr. Charles A. Briggs! And next comes a protest against Rev. Heber Newton and two other New York Episcopal ministers, for inviting outside clergymen to take part in Lenten services in their churches. In the mean time it is mooted by some of the orthodox clergymen of Boston that Rev. Mr. Savage's last Sunday's sermon was rank Infidelity.

THE Independent publishes a collection of opinions episcopal and archiepiscopal regarding the opening of the Chicago World's Fair on Sundays. Of course the consensus is against such opening, and the reasons vary all the way from the usual hypocritical plea of love for the workingman to the brutally frank but honest expression that the day belongs to the Lord, known in this country as the "clergy." The most curious thing about the symposium is that the Independent should regard it as of any value. As well ask the miser to giv up his gold, or the king his scepter, as to ask the preachers to relinquish the only day on which they amount to anything.

THE Independent complains that the mission for converting Jews in St. Mark's place, this city, conducted by the Rev. Jacob Freshman, never givs in its annual reports "any statistics of conversion or names of converts or account of financial receipts or expenditures." This is the mission which our Jewish friend Benjamin has so often attacked in these columns and elsewhere. It is a good sign that the conscience of at least one Protestant editor has been pricked. And now that Howard Crosby is dead perhaps the mission will be not so well protected as formerly, and that inquiring contributors can find out how many indigent Jews their contributions hav purchased.

THE Rev. Howard McQueary, of Canton, O., convicted Episcopalian heretic, lectured before the Nineteenth Century Club recently. One of the paragraphs in his speech was this: "Nobody knows who wrote Genesis and many other parts of the Bible. Certainly you cannot ask us to believe that of which we know not the author. Another reason why doubt and disbelief exist is the moral depravity of some of the statements that unintelligent men would hav us believe. The story of Solomon and his concubines makes that worthy man out to be no better than Brigham Young, and David's invocation of the wrath of heaven upon his enemies and their children, paints the Psalmist in the colors of a ruthless slaughterer. When with these facts are coupled the grotesque legends of Samson, of Balaam, and of the resurrection of the dead when Christ was crucified, I do not see how thinking men can believe. These writings do not speak to us with the authority of the infallible oracle of God. I was taught, as you were, to believe them in toto, but when I found that they were written by men, and very fallible men at that, then I declined to accept their ipse dixits on any subject."

THE Christian Statesman wails: "A new administration for the city of Philadelphia went into power at noon on Monday of last week, Edwin S. Stuart taking the office of mayor for four years. He is a representativ of the 'New Philadelphia,' a cry which has awakened much enthusiasm. It means new pavements, rapid transit, improved public facilities for business and consequent commercial prosperity. The harbor is to be deepened and improved by the general government at an expense of some million of dollars, and altogether the Quaker City will strive hard to keep up with sister cities in the race for wealth and population. But in all these ambitions and hopes the moral and religious element is sadly wanting. In the secular press and in official utterances there is absolutely no recognition of a great city's responsibility to God. The lesson which God taught to Nineveh, and through Nineveh to the world, has not been learned by Philadelphia. Whose voice is heard in the city councils advocating measures for the promotion of good morals, for the more effectiv employment of our public schools for the formation of right character, for the suppression of blasphemy, gambling, and licentiousness? Yet these are the great interests, beside which smooth pavements and elevated railroads and deeper water fronts, and even purer water and more brilliant gaslights sink into utter insignificance." These opinions show to what utter imbecility a thorough and implicit belief in Christianity reduces people.

OF the refusal of the faculty of Cornell College to invite Colonel Ingersoll to deliver the address at the annual commencement the Seattle Telegraph says: "The faculty of Cornell University has decreed that Col. Robert G. Ingersoll cannot be invited by the senior class of that institution to deliver the annual commencement lecture on law. One ridiculous professor assumes to put it on the ground that the colonel is not a lawyer, only an 'advocate' at the bar, nothing but a pleader, not doctor enough in the great principles of law to be called in on such an important occasion. But this, of course, is a subterfuge. The actual reason is that Colonel Ingersoll is not supposed to be sound enough in his orthodox views to suit the precise gentlemen who preside over Cornell. As they are the dictators in this matter their embargo stands, but it will strike folks in this big country as a very contracted blue-law decree unworthy the mental and moral breadth of an American university of the nineteenth century. Colonel Ingersoll, being a man of good breeding and taste, would not be likely to crowd his views on religion, whatever they may be, into a lecture on law, and, whether he be a great lawyer or only an 'advocate,' it is entirely safe to assume that he could teach even the senior class at Cornell a few points about law. They believed he could, and were willing to run the risk, but the faculty, acting as their mental and moral nurse, has interdicted the lecture because of the lecturer's orthodox religious views. What is law, anyhow? Is it some sort of a religious affair? Not by any means. All over the civilized world of Christendom to-day law has been divorced from all connection with creeds. It governs the relations of citizens to one another and to the state in which they liv; to the obligations of contracts, to the whole field of civil duties that confront a man in his capacity as a citizen. It is purely a civil affair. To prescribe a religious qualification for a lecturer on law is as nonsensical as to require a lecturer on art to be a church deacon. The simple fact is that Cornell has written itself down an ass. Colonel Ingersoll's civil character, whatever may be thought of his religious views, is above reproach. No scandals, domestic or public, taint his career. He pays his debts, obeys the laws, loves his family, helps the poor, defends the weak, and minds his own business." Colonel Ingersoll has heretofore seemed to hav a tender spot in his heart for Cornell because, we suppose, he thought it was a Liberal University. We should like to hear him make a remark or two now about those professors.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT'S lecture tour in this country has so far been highly successful, though probably few hav been converted to Theosophy even by her persuasiv eloquence and gentle pleading. She has received a most generous welcome from the press and the people, her work for the poor school-children and the working-women of London endearing her to all humane Americans, while her prominence as a Freethinker and later as a disciple of Madam Blavatsky makes her an object of newspaper fame. Mrs. Besant is not quite satisfied with the Bradlaugh Memorial Hall project, as she thinks other Radicals besides Secularists would contribute could they be assured of a voice in its management, and she deprecates the exclusiv position assumed by the National Secular Society of England in regard to it. Her own views are given in this circular:

"It has been felt by a number of Freethinkers outside the National Secular Society organization that, as Freethought is a wider thing than any society, it would be well that Freethinkers, who owe so much to Charles Bradlaugh's long struggle for freedom of speech and life-long attacks on superstition, should find means of testifying their gratitude and honoring his memory by some step over and above the establishment of the proposed Memorial Hall, the control of which is to be entirely in the hands of members of the National Secular Society. As the closest friend and colleague of Mr. Bradlaugh since 1874, and as excluded from the Memorial committee by the National Secular Society, I hav been casting about for some way to do honor to his memory. He dearly loved his books, and would hav bitterly grieved over their dispersion; yet they must be sold to pay the liabilities incurred by us in the service of Freethought. It would hav rejoiced him to think that these books, gathered by so much self-denial, and forming a splendid reference library for the Radical and the Freethinker, should be placed as the 'Bradlaugh Library' in some central place open to all who desire to study. So I suggest to my fellow-Freethinkers and to the Radicals, excluded like myself from coöperation with the Memorial committee, that we should raise £1,000, purchase his library, and vest its ownership and control in trustees, bound not to allow any sectarian barriers to shut any student out from its use. I know this would hav pleased him living; and it will therefore be a pride and a pleasure to me to help in doing it for him dead. The Bradlaugh Library will thus help in the education of the people he loved and served, and will so do him honor in the way he would hav best liked. The Bradlaugh Library might well be placed in the Memorial Hall, if there should be a suitable room in connection with it, and if arrangements could be made for the free admission of all alike. If this condition could not be secured, the trustees would hav to make other arrangements."

That Mrs. Besant feels keenly the loss of Mr. Bradlaugh is evident from her tender manner of speaking of him and the restrained quiver of the lip when alluding to his death. The party, too, she thinks, will miss him, though Mr. Foote, the present president of the Secular Society, she holds to be a very able man. But the work done by the Freethought party in the past was largely due to the personal genius of Mr. Bradlaugh, and it is difficult to fill his place. Mrs. Besant is under the management, while in this country, of Mr. Judge, the secretary of the Theosophical society. She has lectured several times in this city, and in Washington, and is now in Boston. Her subjects are political and theosophical.

MR. EDITOR: I wish you could afford to print the picture on the first page of No. 15 one extra for every subscriber, and let them show it to their neighbors, and then let them send it to Wanamaker. Ask in your next who will giv a little to cover expense. I will, for one.

U. R. PATOHEN, M.D.

MT. JACKSON, VA., April 11, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Please find check for $4—$3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1891, and 75 cents for the pictures, as I do not want them stopped. I am sorry to see five hundred of your subscribers owing for the best paper now published. I do not think they can be very good Liberals, or they would certainly pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Yours truly, LEONARD WALTERS.

COLERIDGE, CAL., April 5, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Your paper has been a great benefit to me for the last three years, or about so. Your paper contains a great deal of good brain food, that is healthy food, that is easily digested. It has whetted my conscientious scruples to quite a keen edge. It has expanded my brain. It has enlarged my circle of acquaintances. It has taught me to respect myself, and by so doing I hav gained the respect of others. With love for THE TRUTH SEEKER, I conclude.

A. W. MOLEAN.

SHIBLEY POINT, MO., April 4, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find stamps for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1891. I hav only been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for the past year. I derive much pleasure in reading it. I lend it to some of my friends to read. We hav a little band of Liberals at this place. We meet twice each month. And as one of our members and lecturers will soon leave this part, we will hav to depend on THE TRUTH SEEKER to fill his place. Long liv Heston and THE TRUTH SEEKER.

W. S. MILLS.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., April 11, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: We hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since just after the pictures began. I send my papers to Baltimore when I hav read them, and I gave all our old papers to Dr. York for distribution. My husband opened up the field here for the doctor, who has proved a great success. The Liberals are in full blast, and dedicated their new hall last Wednesday.

I forgot to say that it was the pictures which caught my husband's eye, and the monkey won his heart, and so he made the acquaintance of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

VIRGINIA DONALDSON.

HUNTINGTON, W. VA., April 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: My trip to the Puget sound country was not very encouraging on account of dull times. Work is very slack on account of the place being boomed by advertisments of real estate agents. Generally the flow of immigrants to that place is immense, mostly of people who depend on day's work. There is not work for nearly all that go there. I think it is time that it should be checked. Men are being deceived with the promis of large pay and steady work. A consultation with men who hav been there the last five months is pitiful indeed. It has proved a waste of time and money and disappointment. H. S. SMITHERS.

OBITUARY.

LACON, ILL., April 11, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I hold THE TRUTH SEEKER in the very highest favor. I am very sorry to tell you—though you may hav already been apprised of it—you hav lost a noble subscriber in Lacon, and we hav lost one of our best and most useful citizens, a man who carried the true brand which characterizes the Freethinker everywhere—a man well known for his sound and practical common sense, and his boldness and independence in the expression of his antagonism and hatred of the orthodox religion. Such a man was George Johnson, who died a few weeks ago of heart disease in Lacon. With plenty of such men, societies and governments would flourish and prosper. D. D. OWEN.

OBITUARY.

ROOKFORD, April 12, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote to inform you of the death of Mr. Whipple Gibson, a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since it started. He died on the 24th of March, aged seventy-two. He was sick just one week of la grippe. Up to that time he seemed in perfect health. He was an outspoken Liberal—never concealed his views from anyone. He was intelligent. He was kind to everyone, always reaching out his hand to help the oppressed. He practiced the Golden Rule—did unto others as he would like them to do unto him. So he passed away, his life filled with good deeds. He had no fear of what the future would bring. If it was life, he would redeem it; if oblivion, he was satisfied. I thought his death ought to be noticed in the paper he loved so well. Respectfully, MRS. S. B. MILLER.

LAKE CITY, IA., April 9, 291.

MR. EDITOR: What is the matter with Holy John? Has an examination of the book you so kindly and generously called his attention to taken his breath entirely? It could hardly be wondered at. I made an investigation of that old musty, corrupt book about thirty years ago, and I think I hav never felt quite so well since. And what would be the result on a man strung with catgut nerves like Holy John? There is any amount of passages in that book that would almost sicken a respectable dog. But let us, by all means, when Holy John properly recovers, hav his report, let it be good or bad; that much he surely cannot refuse to a confiding people. We feel, Eugene, that you hav been quite faithful in presenting your case to pious John, but still insist that you call his attention occasionally to the matter, and the lovers of justice and good morals will thank you kindly for so doing.

Find money inclosed for paper, picture book, and ANNUAL.

Respectfully yours, J. L. TOMPKINS.

KIRKSVILLE, MO., April 11, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: As an interchange of views concerning a Liberal badge-pin has been solicited, I will giv a few thoughts concerning the subject. Being a jeweler, I hav kept pins representing the pansy for sale for years, and they are purchased by parties without regard to organizations or classes of any kind. You will see by the newspaper slip inclosed that we hav a store here called the Pansy:

Go to the Pansy drug-store for paints, oils, and varnishes. First door east of post-office.

The pansy is a beautiful flower, but as a pattern for a Liberal badge-pin, for the purpose of recognizing each other without some motto of distinction, it would be useless. There are several Liberal badge-pins on the market now, and others may follow, and those who wish to buy can take their choice. And now, concerning the pansy and the secretaryship, I think all hav expressed their honest convictions, so let us move along smoothly.

Ere this reaches you it will be four months since I was crushed down through fire by falling walls. I am still confined on my back in bed. For a long time it seemed as if I was on an equilibrium between life and death, but now the forces of nature, though weak, hav turned the scale in my favor. I had given directions concerning my funeral—that my body should not be taken into any church, nor should any minister take part in the services—though this was hardly necessary, as my wife would not hav suffered it.

I would suggest that Mr. Heston hereafter represent those orthodox birds called angels with a tail of feathers, as a bird cannot fly or guide itself without a tail. WM. HART.

OBITUARY.

LE MARS, IA., April 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: By to-day's mail I send you a copy of the Le Mars Sentinel containing a short notice of the sudden death of my father, L. W. Sibley, which occurred on the 28th of last month. With a competency of this world's goods, gained by honest toil, he was living a quiet, peaceful life at his pleasant country home, apparently in full health, at the age of sixty-six years, when he passed away after a brief illness of an hour and a half. Rheumatism or neuralgia of the heart is supposed to hav been the cause of his death. I shall not attempt to portray the grief of his family at the sudden and unexpected separation. No one knows the depth of such grief until taught by just such experience. He was an exceptionally good man, loved and respected by all who knew him. His record was clear, his character above reproach. Honest, industrious, temperate in all things, with the highest sense of justice and integrity, he practiced what he believed, and lived a pure, clean, fearless life. He was a true Liberal in the fullest sense of the term, jealous of his own rights, but equally cautious of encroaching upon the rights of another. The weak and struggling always found sympathy and help in the man, outspoken in opinion and fearless in the discharge of duty. His orthodox friends could find no fault with him except as to his belief. In religion he was an Agnostic, but a great admirer of Mr. Bennett and his works. The funeral services consisted chiefly in the reading of Mr. Bennett's oration, nearly complete, as found in the "Truth Seeker Collection of Forms and Hymns," by our friend and family physician, Dr. A. P. Bowman. All the good words in that oration were never more fittingly pronounced. The subscription lists of THE TRUTH SEEKER will show the name of L. W. Sibley away back in its infancy and on down to the present time. But his life's work is done, and he has gone to the great unknown where we must all soon follow. If there is a future life, there my noble father will be found in his place among the true and good. Proud of his name and deeply grateful for such a parent, my ambition shall be to cherish his memory and emulate the example of his well-spent life. C. H. SIBLEY.

COLOMBO, CEYLON, Feb. 28, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Though I am in Ceylon, I find it extremely hard to be without THE TRUTH SEEKER. I find some of your Christian preachers touched our island on various occasions and uttered the greatest amount of lies in public places (Christian) regarding the Freethinkers of America, and it is therefore necessary that an Agnostic should be a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, so that he may be prepared with the latest news from your quarters. These divine people never giv correct account of your doings whenever they happen to land here.

On one occasion, I remember, one Dr. Scott, who visited Ceylon, gave a lecture to a Christian audience in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, and boldly declared that Freethought was dying in America, and that the Freethinkers are not able to carry any of their works successfully. He said that the Paine Hall is in the hands of the Christians, the Freethinkers being unable to keep it up. A lawyer friend of mine, who happened to be present at this meeting, called on me the next day, and inquired if there was any truth re the Paine Hall; unluckily for the doctor, I knew all about the Appleton church difficulty from the Boston Investigator here. I called on the doctor, and met him at the Salvation Army barracks. I spoke to him and told him that he bad been telling the people of Colombo some untruth, and made him understand that he would not hav been very happy if I had been in the audience at the time. I asked him what made him say that Paine Hall was sold to Christians, when we received news from the same place weekly. His answer was that he read it somewhere, but was not sure. I had to explain to the man that the editor of the Boston Investigator had to shelter some Christians till they were able to find out another place, etc. The man opened his eyes and expressed his regret, and promised to recant in the Christian papers the next day; but when I called on him at the hotel, he was non est. This was some years ago. So you see what a good thing it is to keep reading your papers. I hav been meeting several others since.

You hav evidently heard of the death of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. Freethinkers all over the world suffer a great loss. I expect Colonel Ingersoll to pay a tribute to this great man's memory. If it is so, please do not fail to let me possess one copy at least. Yours faithfully, M. C. GERERA.

MONTPELIER, IND., March 13, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: It has been quite a while since I hav written a letter to THE TRUTH SEEKER family. I hav been an invalid for more than a year and my lease on earth life all the time slipping by. Perhaps my TRUTH SEEKER friends will remember me as an avowed Spiritualist, but I hav an orthodox brother by consanguinity that is intensely concerned about my soul's welfare. Had I better pray, "Good God, good devil," and be on the right side at all events, and get some old mossback conch-shell with more noise than brains to take me through the goose-pond and giv me a through ticket on the Frog Fur line to the golden city of the New Jerusalem—then if "one misses and the other fails" I will be all right? Come to think of it, I might find some disadvantages when I get there. If God's countenance is brighter than the shining sun, reflecting on those golden seats, they might absorb more warmth than would be comfortable. I know what a mowing-machine metal seat is like after dinner of a clear day. And then I might get a little tired of the monotony of those harps after a few million years. But perhaps my ticket might take me to the other place, and according to Jonathan Edwards that would be terrible. What kind of a God would it take to make Edwards's kind of a hell and make man with the decree that ninety-nine out of each hundred shall go there for his (God's) own glory? My chance for heaven is one out of a hundred at best, and when I get there it is doubtful whether it will pay to bold possession. To sum it up, I guess I will accept the Spiritual doctrin that man first existed on earth in a primitiv condition and is being educated up to a higher estate and has eternity in which to grow, only removing from the primary to the higher school when leaving the mundane sphere. H. Wettstein may think I would get a little crowded, but philosophy teaches that space is without bounds and it and matter are exactly equal. At all events, I hav faith in the future rather than in the orthodox scrapbook of the past. WILLIAM ALLEN.

ROOHESTER, MICH., April 14, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I was very sorry that Sister Ella Gibson did not choose to tell Brother Willis what she has so long known about that mysterious force that she is so sure spirits hav nothing to do with. If Mr. Willis is not in a proper state of mind to hear her, doubtless there are many others of your readers who would listen very attentivly to her. If she persists in withholding her information, as hinted, until the other party converts all the scientists, philosophers, and non-believers generally to his way of thinking, I fear it will be so long a time that table-tipping or some other equally tabooed method will only be left her through which to communicate.

I was much interested in the article in THE TRUTH SEEKER taken from the New York Herald, entitled, "Christianity Charged with Plagiarism," but was not the conclusion a non sequiter? The writer seemingly pointed out enough of damaging parallels in the reputed teachings and lives of Buddha and Jesus in the body of his argument to consign the latter to the limbo of myths, and by inference the system founded thereupon to that of gigantic frauds, yet in his summing up he rallies to the rescue of the popular belief, as follows: "A sublime spectacle is the historical Jesus standing among the limestone hills of Palestine planning his great battle," etc. Indeed? And so, after showing that the thrilling story of the Swiss patriot was of mystical origin, as has admittedly been done time and again, that in its leading features it has come from one nation and people to another, ringing along down through the centuries, forsooth having in the distant past the far-away plains of central Asia for its birthplace; might not one as consistently add the following: A sublime spectacle is the historical William Tell standing there in the market-place of Altorf, with bow and arrow in hand, planning to hit the apple and miss the head of his boy.

After reading it I could but wish that some modern Antichrist or Illinoisan Dr. Brown would review Baron Hickey's article in some future number of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

C. H. GREENE.

ALLIANCE, O., April 14, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I meet your valuable paper here, as I do in scores of cities where I lecture and labor in reform. I am here temporarily from Chicago, where I began editing and publishing the Mental Science Magazine in 1884. I hav been constantly in that wing of reform since it began its public career, but during these years and before I hav toiled much in the cause of advanced Spiritualism. I heartily esteem the work these two armies are doing in reform. Theosophy is entitled also to receive great credit by all who look deeply into her grand work and fraternal unions. Feeling the need of her wisdom and help I took membership in her tried and true brotherhood, and can say she has food strong enough for the most advanced.

I am pleased to note a more fraternal feeling of late between the Agnostics and the Spiritualists at large. This has interested me anew in the great work they are to accomplish unitedly for reform. I hav just sent in my name for membership in the Brotherhood of Moralists at Hannibal, Mo., and now that it represents a large and national body of Agnostics, and that its aims are so aggressiv and grand, I am pleased and strengthened because of enrolment therein. In doing this it is not to cease the fraternal relations and needed help I obtain from these other great wings of Liberal thought, but to gather good from all, and to work for the union of these augmenting armies as against the common foe of creedal theology. While a seeming antagonism has vastly increased the strongholds of Materialism and Spiritualism, still there is a sense in which they present a united front, as an avalanche of resistance against the fated empire of creedism.

While lecturing in Alliance, eight of the clergy in the Ministerial Association here signed a paper in two dailies criticising the iconoclastic views I had given as answers to an editor in an interview. I then challenged the said Association to put anyone of their number forward to debate publicly with me on one or seven propositions I published. They had all put their heads out far, but when their theology was to be held up to the light of science and evolution, turtle like they drew them far into their shell.

I hope to see more direct fraternity among all the armies of reform, that the prowess of Freethought may prevail grandly against the open frenzy of the beast, i.e., theology.

Yours for union, A. J. SWARTS, Ph.D.

RED CLOUD, NEB., April 13, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: A neighbor has handed me a sermon of the great Christian's mogul, T. De Witt Talmage, of Tabernacle fame, in which the aforesaid personage slops over on the subject of the plague of Infidelity, and tops off his pile of froth and vaporings by crying, "Get out, you miserable paupers of the universe!" It shows how he practices the precept of "Love your enemies." It contains the usual amount of misrepresentation and false assumption. Says the great prevaricator: "I ask you to mention the names of the merciful and the educational institutions which Infidelity founded and has supported all the way through." He wants a list, bound in octavo, of Infidel institutions that are dedicated to suffering humanity. If he had asked for the names of Infidels that Christians had put to death, of institutions stolen or perverted from the use of their founders, I could accommodate him. He had no need to inform us that Girard College is invaded by Christian instructors. But look at the cheek of him! Does not the great mogul know that it is but a short time since that an Infidel was allowed to liv, and that even now Infidels jeopardize their friendship with their Christian neighbors, to say nothing of business boycott, etc.; that a Freethinker yet runs the risk of social ostracism if his sentiments are known by the followers of the meek and loving Nazarene? His accusation, by implication, that Infidels would burn every Bible, destroy all hopes, and brand all the grand philanthropists that hav believed in its divine messages or eulogized it by their utterances as imbecils, idiots, etc., is characteristic of the regard for truthful representation held by those who believe that they can tell the biggest of lies to-day and wash out the stain in the blood of the lamb that was slain the next day.

"Infidelity is the religion of don't know," says the great divine. But it is the religion of some things that are known. Infidels know that Mr. Talmage does not know any more about the origin or destiny of man than they do. They also know that there is no merit in believing anything they do not know, and that they could not believe an absurdity great enough to merit a harp and crown. They know that Mr. Talmage is in the soul-saving business for the money that is in it. In fact, they know that Mr. Talmage pretends to know a great deal that we know he does not know. So good-bye, Brother Talmage, and look out for the crash of Westminster abbey, and I suppose the Tabernacle will go up in the same catastrophe. H. J. O.

HANNIBAL, MO., March 24, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I am sorry to see that some of your contributors are unhappy because of the existence and rapid growth of the Brotherhood of Moralists.

They heartily indorse that part of our constitution which declares our disbelief in miracles and witchcraft, but we must not say that we regard modern Spiritualism as a delusion, lest we be classed as sectarian bigots, according to their wonderful logic.

It is also remarkable that each writer who has attacked the Brotherhood has inadvertently, or as a necessary adjunct to his argument, misrepresented the character of the order.

1. We are charged with denying the existence of any deity or ruling intelligence.

2. We are charged with denying the possible future existence of man.

3. We are charged with barring progress by obligating our members not to investigate strange phenomena or new theories.

Our constitution is very short and plain, and every person at all familiar with it knows that these charges are all utterly groundless.

Our constitution declares our disbelief in special providences; but says nothing about gods.

Perhaps most of our members are Atheists or Agnostics, but there are others who accept the deistic theory, and, like Voltaire and Paine and scores of other eminent Freethinkers, hav a speculativ belief in an all-pervading intelligence which "rules by general, not by partial laws."

Our constitution says: "We hold it to be self-evident that he who most conscientiously performs the duties of this life is best fitted to enter into a higher state if he is still to exist." Is this a denial of future existence? Our constitution declares it to be "the inalienable right of every rational being to investigate and decide for himself all questions pertaining to his present or future welfare." Does this look like a desire to suppress investigation? Are our enemies so blinded by prejudice that they could not see these passages, or hav they purposely ignored them? We solicit criticism, but it is to be hoped that the next writer who attacks us will make a truthful statement of our position, supported by quotations from our constitution, a copy of which can be obtained, without price, from Ella E. Gibson, Barre, Mass.

Yours for truth, A. R. AYRES.

BARRE, MASS., April 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I like the article, "Mediumistic Phenomena," by S. R. Shepherd, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, April 18th, also the letter of J. N. Brown, in the same number. Their conclusion that spirits had nothing to do with the manifestations described, in my opinion is correct; also, in the main, in the one instance, that the "circle constituted a battery, which generated a sufficient force . . . to perform those acts," etc., etc.; and in the other case, "was mind acting on mind in a natural way."

It is not necessary that a good perceptiv should be in the presence of the person having the information communicated, or that anyone, present or absent, should be in possession of that knowledge, for a good perceptiv can gain it direct from the fact itself. I hav done it repeatedly where no person was in possession of the information I gave. For instance, being a stranger in the town where I was to lecture, a neighbor called where I was staying and told the lady of the house that Mrs. S., another neighbor, must die, for a council of physicians had decided that day that she had consumption, and could not liv. I replied, without a moment's reflection, she hadn't consumption, and diagnosed her case fully, the ladies protesting and ridiculing me during the time, I saying, "The case is incurable."

Some three weeks after I left the place I received a letter from the lady where I stayed, saying her neighbor was dead, and to the surprise of all the post mortem examination revealed that she did not die of consumption, but was precisely in the condition I had described. You perceive, I could not hav taken this fact from the mind of the ladies present, or anyone absent, for no one knew it, but saw it from the fact itself. I do not believe it is necessary for me to die and jump into some other person's body, in order to thus perceive and state it through a medium, but can myself see while connected with my own body, with my own unaided senses, all that is claimed for spirits that is not trick and fraud.

The philosophy of this perception is so deep and intangible I never attempt to explain it, for there is no language in use whereby I can convey my ideas. In conversation, I might make myself partially understood by a few, but to the general reader on paper never, and would only expose myself to ridicule and contempt.

The great, mighty future will reveal it all when science holds full sway, and the mind becomes so punctured by perception as to admit the rays of light that are constantly shining upon it; but now, so great is the darkness that the darkness comprehendeth it not. ELLA E. GIBSON.

YPSILANTI, April 13, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I am between seventy and eighty years old. I came very near going over to the majority last winter with the grip, which I think a great invention.

I inclose a piece cut from the Detroit Evening News.

I am sorry to learn you hav so many delinquent subscribers. I hope the gentle hint you gave them will be effectual. Respectfully yours, JAS. P. DICKINSON.

Rev. Jas. P. Mills, district secretary of the American Sabbath Union, discoursed to the Simpson church congregation yesterday morning in the interest of that society. The object of the organization is to preserve the Christian Sabbath as a day of rest and worship. The "American Sabbath" is not the "Puritan or colonial Sabbath" of our early history, said Mr. Mills, which was of a severely and strictly religious character, and enforced by law. When the American Constitution was adopted the principle was established of noninterference by legislation with the conscience or religious convictions of the citizen. Our American Sabbath laws are, therefore, not of a religious but purely civil character, and hav been so decided by the United States Supreme Court. In our homes and churches, not in the state, is the proper place for the enforcement of religious laws.

It is a favorit pastime with a certain class of people to sneer at the rigid religious customs of our Puritan forefathers, declaring that they raised up a nation of Infidels, of Bible-haters, of Sabbath-breakers, by the severity of their religious laws. This statement, said the speaker, is false; it is a lie! The Puritans never had a law "forbidding a man to kiss his wife on the Sabbath day," as has been asserted. Nevertheless, it would be well, said he, to hav a law at the present day forbidding a man to kiss another man's wife on Sunday or any other day. It might save us from so much of our disgraceful wholesale divorce business.

The continental Sabbath of Europe is a day of horse-racing, of beer-garden festivities, of open saloons, theaters, and all classes of amusements. God is nowhere in it. With the large influx of foreigners the past few decades this continental Sabbath has been gradually gaining a foothold in this country. It is a menace to the moral life of our nation. The American Sabbath Union just now is bending its energies to securing the closing of the World's Fair on the Sabbath in 1893. The beer and liquor interests of this country are moving heaven and earth, not only for the open Sunday, but likewise the free sale of beer in and around the Exposition on that day. Neither President Harrison nor Congress will interfere with the commissioners nor board of directors in this matter. The directors hav intimated to the brewers, who threaten to withdraw their $300,000 subscription if refused, their willingness to accede to their demands. If this is done, this national acceptance of the continental Sunday will inevitably fasten it upon this country and become the sure precursor of its downfall.

April 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say to Mr. Wettstein that I hav neither "begged the question," "dodged the issue," "wriggled nor wiggled." Both in intent and in fact, Brother Wettstein, I treated your arguments with perfect fairness. I met every proposition you made with the "figures, data, and mathematical demonstration" to which you appealed, and I proved your positions and assumptions to be utterly absurd and preposterous. And you, without attempting to analyze my arguments, and demonstrate on scientific principles the unsoundness of either my premises or calculations, deny their correctness, and ignore them as unworthy of consideration or notice. This, doubtless, is a much easier mode of disposing of them than to answer and refute them. Basing my computations on the highest scientific authority I was acquainted with, and giving you the benefit of all doubts, I proved that the population of our earth, up to date, could not be more than 20 trillion souls. Prove that our race has been in existence more than 200,000 years, and I will accept the truth most cheerfully, and change my figures accordingly. But then you must cease to call it a "few thousand years." Having rejected my demonstrations, you claim to disprove them by the following scientific process (?). You say: "One of the greatest of scientists has been accredited with saying that every handful of earth and rock of the earth's crust represents a human grave. How does that rough estimate tally with Brother Walker's arithmetic?" Why, it does not tally at all, because my arithmetic is based on scientific truth, while the statement of the ignoramus whom you term "one of the greatest scientists," is unscientific and false. The rocks which form the earth's crust, from the Silurian formation up, are the graveyard of nearly all the inferior forms of animal life that existed on our planet prior to the advent of our race, but they do not contain one atom of human remains; for when they were forming man was not there. The idea of settling the population question by grinding the rocks which constitute the earth's crust to powder, and then "to swell up every handful into the size of a man (or spirit)," and then count them, though a marvel in itself, is not particularly scientific! Then you hav another "scientific" way of settling this question. By "a logarithmical computation, based on the estimate of three children to every couple since the time of Adam and Eve!" My! Do you believe in that old lady and gentleman too? "This computation," you say, "makes the number of earth's inhabitants up to date over 600,000 quintillion souls." Now, in 6,000 years, which is about the age of our race, according to the book where you get Adam and Eve, there are 300 generations of 20 years each, and the above sum would giv to each generation an average of 2,000 quintillion souls, or one trillion times the number of inhabitants that are now, or ever were at one time, on our earth! How so intelligent a man as you are can believe in and advocate methods and propositions so insanely foolish, puzzles me, and I giv it up. But it seems you believe in these methods of computation, and also your former statement that the soul product of our earth, during "the few thousand years" (your own term) during which they hav been being produced, would form a globe, in "compact mass," 16 trillion times larger than this earth, while I demonstrated in my former article that it would require the product of our entire solar system 23 million years to form a globe the size of our earth! I respect the honest opinion and belief of an honest man, and I must say that your capacity to believe unreasonable things exceeds anything I am acquainted with. I hav read of different kinds of faith—saving faith, faith of miracles, faith of devils, etc.—but yours beats them all. "I hav not seen so great a faith, no not in Israel!" Some of the old Christian fathers pretty nearly equaled you. Their rule was to believe everything that was so utterly, intrinsically, and monstrously unreasonable and absurd, that it could, by no possibility, be true. But they differed from you in this, that they were generally ignorant, uneducated, and unscientific men. You persist in talking about "eternal production of souls," and "plethora of souls," etc., and ignore altogether the axiomatic truth which I stated in my former communication in these words, viz.: "It is a self-evident proposition, that if you continue to giv, without any equivalent being returned, the supply will ultimately be exhausted. If the earth furnishes the material from which spirits are evolved, and none of it is returned, the supply will be exhausted and the production cease, as certainly as if it were any grosser product." It seems difficult, by any illustration, to make this proposition plainer. When I look at the wheat and clover fields that lie within my vision, clothed as they are in deep, rich green, and at the thrifty peach orchards, just now clothed in floral beauty, I might imagin the soil inexhaustible, but occasional specimens of careless, thriftless farming prove it otherwise. If the productiv capacity of an acre of land is 1,000 bushels of grain, and no more, when it has, without any added fertility, produced that amount, its production will cease, and it can never yield another grain, unless renewed by fertilizers, but will forever remain a barren desert. This principle applies to all products, spirits not excepted, and proves the absurdity of all your talk about "eternal production," "plethora of souls," and all similar nonsense. Wishing you an ample share of all the good things of this life, and hoping that when you lay down life's burden here, and cease to fight its battles, you will find yourself in the enjoyment of a far higher and happier life, with good company, and plenty of room for a jolly good time,

I am, etc., W. W. W.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

In Corn-Planting Time.

O Susie, find your hat and hoe,
And call to Charley, Will, and Joe.
For birds are singing high and low
In corn-planting time.

When "corn is king of every crop,"
We must not play, nor lag, nor stop,
With hoes to cover, hands to drop,
In corn-planting time.

To follow boys who hold the plow
Is on'y fun, so hurry now—
"Four grains to drop"—Joe told me how,
This corn-planting time.

And father said this very morn,
For all who helped to plant the corn,
Nor stopped till sound of dinner horn
In corn-planting time,

That should the work be hard to do,
New books he'd buy, and dresses, too,
For you a pink, and me a blue—
Hail corn-planting time!

I heard him telling mother so—
You take the basket, I the hoe,
And we'll divide the half-mile row,
This corn-planting time.

We'll build a bower on the meads,
A half-way house of rosin-weeds,
Where we may rest while Charley reads,
In corn-planting time.

At night, when moonlight floods the vales,
Dear grandpa says he'll tell the tales
Of ocean isles and summer gales
In corn-planting time.

Relic of a Prehistoric Race.

In the Children's Corner of a recent number of THE TRUTH SEEKER was a short sketch of what may be seen in the Bad Lands of Dakota. Perhaps some of your readers of the Corner may be interested to learn what a curious specimen of a prehistoric race of human beings was found in the same Bad Lands.

This specimen was not wholly a mummy, nor yet a petrifaction, since both these qualities united in its preservation during the lapse of many ages of time. I was so much interested in the matter that I was at some pains to learn all I could about its history. It seems that on July 20, 1885, a cowboy named Lathe Spake, while exploring a cave or cavern in the Bad Lands, discovered this remnant of a race, now long extinct, in a standing posture, leaning against the side-wall of the cave. The dust and rubbish of, maybe, untold centuries had accumulated about its feet and buried them nearly to its knees. A singular fact connected with the discovery was, that all of the body exposed to the air of the cave was thoroughly mummified, while the feet and limbs, nearly to the knees, standing in the dust, were turned to stone. This mummy, as we will call it, from its being more mummy than petrifaction, was on exhibition some three years ago at Ithaca, Mich., where I had a favorable opportunity for examination. I found it to be only two feet six inches in hight, but it had a large, broad chest, and arms that extended below the knees. On examination of its teeth by several scientists, they agreed that its probable age at death was about sixty years. Its most striking peculiarities are the remarkable development that must hav given great muscular power in shoulders, chest, and arms. This curious relic of humanity lived and struggled for existence in a period of the world's history of which we can hav but a vague conception, and which antedates all human history.

TO THE MUMMY.

Who are you, and where did you liv?
Hav you an account of yourself to giv?
Were you civilized, wild, or tame?
Of what race, and what was your name?

We all wish to know, but hardly can guess;
We know little of your time, all must confess.
That you are human, is plain to be seen,
Perhaps some wild old mountain queen.

O mummy, if you could only tell
The story of your life, and what befell
The lost race to which you belong,
Then would I gladly finish my song.

But all is mystery—deeper than death—
When and how you lost your breath,
And changed to mummy, and partly to stone,
And there for ages slumbered alone.

Correspondence.

ROCKVILLE, IDA., March 22, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought that I would write to the Corner for the third time. There is no school here now. I wish some of the boys of the Corner would write to me. I cannot write very well. There is an old man here about seventy years old. He got married the other day.

Yours truly, W. A. CARLTON.

DANA, ILL., March 24, 1891.

MISS WIXON: I go to school and I read in the fourth reader. I study arithmetic, geography, spelling, and grammar, and I am seven years old. I hav three brothers at home. I am not the oldest boy; I am the next to the oldest. We hav a little baby; he is fifteen months old; he can walk. The boys are gone to bed now. Our baby will h t you with a stick. My father has the asthma, and he has to smoke a pipe. I will write more next time; so that is all.

Your friend, VICTOR STRAWN.

[A nice letter for a boy only seven years old.—ED. C. C.]

HAMILTON, BERMUDA, April 10, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought of writing a letter to the Children's Corner to-night. It is the first letter that I ever wrote to the Corner. I hav a brother named John Jacques Rousseau Stecker. I hav a picture of John Jacques Rousseau and of Thomas Paine in the parlor. Papa gets THE TRUTH SEEKER paper every week, and he has the "Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book," and I like to look at the pictures in it. I go to school twice a week—on Mondays and Thursdays—and study in arithmetic, writing, and drawing. I was nine years old last December.

Yours truly, MARTIN G. STECKER.

[Write to the Corner all about Hamilton, Martin.—ED. C. C.]

PALOUSE CITY, WASH., March 21, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER since January, and I like it very much. I always like to read the Children's Corner, but I hav never seen any letters in it from this place, so I take the liberty of writing one, and telling you something about it and how I like it. Palouse City is a small place with about twelve hundred inhabitants, and has some nice brick buildings. It also boasts of four churches. But that sentence speaks for itself. We hav a schoolhouse and six teachers. I am going to school. The Palouse river flows through the town. I like it very well. I would like it better, I think, if there were fewer churches here. There are not many Liberals in this place; we had one Liberal lecture here in September, by Mrs. Mattie Krekel; she lectured two nights. My father thinks it is the best thing he has heard for a long time. I think I had better close now, for my letter is getting quite long and tiresome. I remain,

Your thirteen-year-old Freethinker,
CLARA PFAENDTNER.

CLEARWATER, NEB., April 3, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Remembering what you once said of your corn-planting times, and your grandpa's evening stories, I hav blent that with my own experience of a long field where my sister and I divided the rows, each planting to the middle of the field, where we had thrust great strong rosin weeds down after the manner of a stockade, and covering with weeds and our aprons spread on top. Of course we had to "move on" quite frequently, but we didn't mind it in the least, as we had nothing else to do in the interval of waiting. "Charley," the family book-worm, often came in to read and rest with us. He is now J. C. Baird, of Dodge City, Kan., and a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Corner grows in interest. I am always glad to see the letters from the young people. This writing of letters is of itself an education to them, and to hav a wise head to direct and encourage them, to say just the right thing at the right time and place, is a privilege that not many of my age had when young. I hope the young folks appreciate these advantages.

Wishing you the success your work merits, I am,

Yours for humanity, MARY B. FINCH.

AUSTIN, NEV., March 20, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I liv away out West on the lofty plateau of the Great Basin. I should like to travel out in Massachusetts to see the lovely farms and valleys. The only river I hav seen is the Reese river. The only city I hav seen besides Austin is Battle Mountain.

While the boys of the Eastern states can sit down and eat an apple or a peach, I can sit down and find in an hour twenty cents' worth of silver ore on a dump.

If I go on the hill I can see only sage brush or cactus.

My father works in a mine called the Union mine, which, in its time, has produced many a thousand dollars. One time this winter it produced $6,400. There are many mines here now that are not working. The deepest is the Lander mine, which is one thousand feet deep. The next deepest is the Frost mine, which is about eight hundred feet.

There is to be a railroad through here this spring. The town is very dull now, but if the railroad comes it will giv employment to a great many idle men who cannot procure work.

I go to school every day. I study geography, grammar, arithmetic, spelling, reading, history, writing, and drawing. My teacher's name is Miss Wible. I read in the Fourth Reader. I am in the A class of the third room. I am eleven years old and will be twelve on March 31st.

There are two papers that are published here, one called the Reese River Reveille and the other called the People's Advocate—both good papers for so small a town. The editor of the Reveille is Albert Phillips, and W. D. Jones is the editor of the other paper.

My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for a long time. We take many papers, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is in the lead.

I hav been saving my money to buy some of your books, such as "The Story Hour" and others, for I am a great hand to read. I hav one book of science published by Aunt Elmina.

We received the ALMANAC and enjoyed the piece about "Shoutin' Joe" very much. I hope this will miss the waste-basket. I fear this letter is too long, so I will close.

Your Liberal friend forever and success to your paper. HARRY MOSS.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

The New Thought (Chicago) says: "It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw. . . . To state the whole thing in the language of another, the first book shows what a heaven is coming on this earth after it shall have passed through the necessary discipline, and the other books show what a hell of a time we have to get there."

The Chesaning Argus (Chesaning, Mich.) says: "It is one grand sublime poem . . . a perfect history in blank verse of the social and religious struggles of our earth, and would be good reading for those who have been interested in 'Looking Backward.'" Describing Book 6 it says: "This chapter will be found especially interesting to ladies."

The Phrenological Journal (New York) regards it as equal to the great epics of a hundred years ago or more.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," says: "I have read it with much interest. I am in entire sympathy with its spirit of boundless faith in human development."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says it is one of the significant indications of the signs of the times.

The Nationalist, of Boston, considers its style as equal to Milton's, and says it "engages the reader's attention with the first line and keeps it engrossed until the final word."

Brick Pomeroy's Advance Thought (N. Y.) says: "It contains much to benefit humanity."

ESSENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

By LUDWIG FEUERBACH.

News of the Week.

THE Pennsylvania striking miners are suffering from evictions. Riots and bloodshed continue.

MRS. HELEN FIELDS, of Wichita, Kan., has given birth to a child whose father she avers is the Holy Ghost.

A COMPANY with a capital of $10,000,000 will erect between New York and Philadelphia a pneumatic tube that will transmit parcels in twenty-five minutes.

REV. J. G. WHITE while lecturing in St. Louis against Romanism was pelted by a mob with rotten eggs and other missils, and police were required to restore peace.

ITALY is taking steps to detain soldiers from mass Sundays, employing them at the time. Sacred names are being removed from school-books and sacred emblems from school-rooms.

ON the 23d ult. the explosion of a powder magazine near Rome killed several persons, and shook the city fearfully, alarming the pope and injuring the Vatican and other buildings.

PROF. C. A. TOTTEN of Yale University, lieutenant U. S. A. and detailed to Yale as military professor, predicts, on elaborate biblical data, that Christ's second coming will occur in March, 1899.

CATHOLICS deny the report that the Vatican has bargained with England to induce the Irish to relinquish the demand for home rule, contenting themselvs with provincial councils, in return for which England will establish an embassador at the Vatican.

DEPEW says that Harrison's conduct of his tour proves that he is able, and will be renominated; and that the South's reception of him shows that the South and North division is obliterated. The immigration issue, he says, is now to be the salient one.

THE census of Ireland just taken gives 4,600,000 against 5,174,836 in 1881. Catholic dignitaries are alarmed, apprehending that "once the population goes below the 4,000,000 mark, nothing but the providence of God can save the Celtic race in Ireland from extinction."

REV. MR. PENZOTTI, an Italian Protestant, agent of the American Bible Society, by intercession of the American minister has been released from the Callao prison, where he has been confined since July for the offense of propagating a religion "contrary to the established church of Peru."

THE failure of every charge brought against Barondess, leader of the New York cloakmakers' strike, and of the charges against alleged train-wreckers during the New York Central railroad strike, causes some to suspect that the accusations were concocted by capitalists to form public opinion.

INDIAN COMMISSIONER MORGAN disapproves of the Catholic exercises of catechisms and prayer, and corresponding Protestant ones, held in the Indian schools, and says: "I believe that the whole system of appropriating public moneys for sectarian uses is contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States; that it is a menace to the public school system, and threatens the prosperity of the whole Indian school system."

RUDINI will consider Italy as having received justice, for the present, only when the federal government has declared in precise terms when prosecutions will begin. Some international lawyers think the federal government cannot plead non-interference with state authority. If the Constitution, they say, givs authority to negotiate treaties, it givs power to carry out their provisions. The Constitution, being the supreme law of the land, is thus a higher authority than federal or state laws.

THE American Peace Society will solicit the United States government "to invite all governments to hold an international conference of official delegates during the Columbian Exposition." The idea is a conference, on a larger scale, similar to Mr. Blaine's Pan-American Congress. All powers will be invited to consult on the manner in which, first, "national laws may be harmonized and an international code constituted;" secondly, "treaties of arbitration may be extended to all civilized countries;" and thirdly, a high court or tribunal may be established "to sit permanently and consider all causes of international difference."

SISTER PHILOMENA of the Visitation convent at St. Louis had suffered five years from an abscess that threatened brain injury, and had produced partial blindness. A few days ago she decided that before submitting to an operation she would ask that prayers for her be said to the Blessed Sister Margaret Mary. Sister Baptista after praying gave her a relic, which she inadvertently swallowed in the night. When she awoke she felt a pricking above the left eye, and drew forth a needle, with the relic transfixed on its point. "The truth of the marvelous miracle," says a Catholic journal, "is vouched for by Dr. Alt and the mother superior. . . . The days of miracles are by no means over, and we are well entitled to giv credence to the report."

ELIJAH TAKES A LITTLE DRIVE.

And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.—2 Kings ii, 11.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

FOR more than three centuries the decadence of theological influence has been one of the most invariable signs and measures of our progress. IF we are sometimes inclined to regret that our lot is cast in these unhappy days, let us remember how much more fortunate we are than those who lived a few centuries ago. The working man enjoys more luxuries today than the king of England in Anglo-Saxon times; and at his command are intellectual delights which, but a little while ago, the most learned in the land could not obtain. All this we owe to the labor of other men. Let us, therefore, remember them with gratitude; let us follow their glorious example by adding something new to the knowledge of mankind; let us pay to the future the debt which we owe to the past. All men, indeed, cannot be poets, inventors, or philanthropists; but all men can join in that gigantic and God-like work, the progress of creation. Whoever improves his own nature improves the universe of which he is part. He who strives to subdue his evil passions—vile remnants of the old four-footed life—and who cultivates the social affections; he who endeavors to better his condition, and to make his children wiser and happier than himself, whatever may be his motivs, he will not hav ived in vain.—Reade.

IT seems that there are more deaths than births in Ward 10, Boston, every year, and our esteemed contemporary the Boston Democrat puts the case against Ward 10 in this way: "The plain purpose of the creator was to preserve and perpetuate mankind, and, as a consequence of this, cities and states are preserved and perpetuated, but this result fails in Ward 10." Our esteemed contemporary forgets that Boston is inclined to think itself wiser than the creator.—Sun.

IF the pursuit of Dr. Briggs as a heretic is begun, says the Sun, it must lead to something more than mere heresy hunting. It must end in a hunt to find out whether there is really any authoritativ source of perfect and absolute truth for theology to rest upon, and by which heresy can be determined. If the Bible is fallible, as Dr. Briggs says, that cannot be such a source. If the doctrin of election is to be rejected, as Presbyterian revisionists demand, at the dictate of human reason and sentiment, every other dogma and doctrin of theology must be subject to the same dictation, leaving reason alone as the authority. That involves a tremendous religious revolution. It means the overthrow of dogma and the substitution of reason and speculation. Nothing will remain for faith to rest upon. Instead of dogmatic theology we shall hav only religious philosophy—Agnosticism.

A DISPATCH from Zante, capital of the Ionian island of that name, dated May 1st, brings news of a serious religious riot which has taken place there. The day is observed by the Greek Christians as the Greek Good Friday, and part of the ceremonies consisted of a procession which marched through the principal streets. The processionists, however, were not contented with a peaceful demonstration. When they neared the quarter of Zante, which is known as the Hebrew quarter, the Christians practically besieged that section of the town. In order to guard against just such an occurrence a cordon of soldiers had been drawn around the Hebrew quarter, and upon the refusal of the Christians to retire in peace, the soldiers fired upon them, killing and wounding several people. The Christians, the dispatch adds, are now pillaging the houses of the Hebrews at Zante and threaten to burn the Jewish quarter of the town. It is supposed that disturbances at Zante hav their origin in the disturbance which recently occurred at Corfu.

THE Rev. Pfarrer Beyer, of Pottsdam, Germany, is accused of having kidnapped a young girl named Marie Stiller for the purpose of placing her in a religious house known as the House of the Good Shepherd at Charlottenburg. The girl is of age. Three years ago she was removed from the custody of a stepmother who ill-treated her and placed in service. She appears to hav given satisfaction to her employers, but, as she declined to hand over her wages to her stepmother after attaining her majority, the latter is believed to hav got the priest to exercise his authority over her stepdaughter. The Rev. Mr. Beyer invited the girl to call on him, and after lecturing her severely, and even, it is alleged, inflicting corporal punishment on the young woman in the presence of her stepmother, he had her carted off to the Charlottenburg institution, paying no heed to her protests. At the house she was kept a close prisoner and her friends were not able to hold any communication with her until the police were applied to, and her release was effected through that agency. Marie Stiller has since made a charge of assault against Beyer.

LAST October small-pox broke out in the Poodozhskiy and Poviénetzkiy districts of the government of Olonetzk, on the coast of Lake Ladoga. Since then the plague has spread throughout the region, and is still unabated. In the villages and towns where the scourge has appeared ten per cent of all the children up to the age of twelve years hav died, mostly such as had not been vaccinated. A large percentage of adults hav also died. The medical and the administrativ authorities are doing all in their power to resist the evil, but the prejudices of the common people are against them. The people of Olonetzk regard small-pox (Ospa) as a divinity to be propitiated and not angered. They call it "Ospa Ivanovna," or "Matooshka (little mother) Ospa"—appellations which imply profound respect. Since vaccination is a means to oppose it, they believe that it would be a sin to be vaccinated, and try to avoid the operation by all possible means. As soon as a person gets stricken with the disease all the children of the village are dressed as nicely as their parents can afford and taken to his house to pay their respect to Ospa Ivanovna. They take cakes and fruit to the house of the invalid, which they deposit on a table placed by his bedside for the purpose. Then they kiss the sick person on the mouth and sit down around him for some time talking and partaking of the food they had brought with them, or of the other victuals which the host provides. Sometimes children are brought from a distance of twenty versts (seven versts are five miles) to salute Little Mother Ospa in this wise. As long as there is small-pox in the house the rooms must not be cleaned and the inmates may not wash themselvs or change their garments. No rough expression or curse may be pronounced in a house where there is a small-pox patient. If such an expression escapes involuntarily from the lips, the offender must forthwith kiss the invalid by way of propitiating Ospa Ivanovna. No medicin is given to the patient, but he must be bathed in hot water twelve times during his illness. The presents which the children bring must be left on the table by his bedside for visitors to partake of. These superstitions are deeply rooted among the peasants of the entire region, and serve to propagate the disease despite all efforts made by the more cultivated.

A Calvinistic Sermon;

ADDRESSED TO HIS BRETHREN IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BY THE REV. DR PLAIN SPEECH.

Romans, chapter ix.

The Lick telescope in California is said to reveal the fact that there are as many as a thousand millions of stars in the firmament of heaven, each one, reasoning from analogy, being a sun to warm and enlighten a system of worlds like our own. The church teaches, on the authority of the word of God contained in the Bible, that a little less than six thousand years ago there was nothing in existence of all this vast universe but God himself; and that then he created it by an act of his will, put all these worlds into motion, and has kept them in motion without collision ever since by the constant exercise of the same will.

But descending from generals to particulars, and confining our attention to the planet called the earth, when God called it into existence and fitted it up with soil, climate, and atmosphere, he did so with a design. What would we think of a workman who would bestow much time, labor, and skill in producing, out of the raw material, a certain thing that looked like a machine, but evinced no purpose in the maker, and was entirely without adaptation to any other thing? The all-wise God, therefore, saw fit to exercise his power in creating this globe, and making it a theater for a race of intelligent beings bearing his own image and likeness, and whose character and destiny should display the divine perfections.

The striking feature of God's character is his almighty power. It is the attribute around which cluster all the rest—wisdom, goodness, justice, etc., indicating merely the way in which it manifests itself, and without which they would be useless ornaments, for in a great calamity when thousands are suffering, a person's heart may be bursting with benevolent feeling, but what does it amount to if he can do nothing? We are so constituted as human beings, and indeed so are all the lower animals, that there is nothing in the character of either God, man, or nature which so impresses the beholder as the majesty of power. So true is this that Milton, in his "Paradise Lost," unintentionally makes his readers almost fall in love with Satan himself because of his amazing intellect and daring ambition. The phenomena of nature—the lightning, the earthquake, and the wind storm, on the sea or on the land, produce the same effect of awe upon men and the inferior animals.

It is the crowning glory of almighty power that it is exercised by one whose will is sovereign and who has the unquestionable right to do as he pleases with the thing he has created, whether it be a single material globe floating in space, or a family of sensitiv beings, like those of the various species which dwell upon the earth. With whom should, or could, God take counsel? To what authority could he defer, and to whom could he be responsible, when, before the creation of the world, he was the only being in existence? Can it be possible that he intended to make himself responsible for the exercise of his omnipotence to any of the men or angels whom he should afterward create? It is the absolute sovereignty of the all-mighty and all-wise God that makes him competent to rule the universe and fix the destiny of every created person or thing. His best and complex empire would hav gone to pieces long ago, one planet colliding with another, and all going into hopeless ruin, had there been divided counsels in its management, for unity of plan and attainment of its purpose can be the result of only one mind.

If this be true, who can measure the hight and depth, and the length and breadth, of the arrogance which is displayed when an ephemeral being like man, born yesterday and dying to-morrow, sets up his feeble judgment above that of the eternal and all-wise God, and dictates to him what, as a sovereign of the universe, he ought to do and what he ought not to do, concerning the creatures he has formed! If the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzzah, and smote him dead on the spot at the threshing-floor of Nachon, because he put forth his hand to the ark of God and took hold of it; and if he smote fifty thousand three score and ten men of Beth-shemesh because of their irreverence in looking into that symbol of the divine presence, how that costly crime pales into insignificance when compared with the presumption of those who would rob God of that attribute, without which he would be no God at all!

This is the very feeling that was in the mind of the divinely inspired Apostle Paul when he wrote the ninth chapter of his Epistle to the Romans, which constitutes my text. There were some in his day, and there are more in ours, who rival the presumption of the angels that fell in striking at the chief attribute of God in executing the purpose he had from the beginning concerning the two classes of the human family, the redeemed and unredeemed. He reminds the Roman heretics, in line upon line, that the sovereignty of the divine will in its relation to all the rest of his attributes is like the key-stone of an arch which binds all the other stones together, and without which they would tumble out of place and accomplish no purpose. He points out, in the cases of Jacob and Esau, that before the children were born, and had done neither good or evil upon which to base his decree, it was written: "Jacob hav I loved, and Esau hav I hated." Why then did God, from all eternity, discriminate in favor of Jacob, when, from the scriptural account of the twin brothers, Esau was evidently the better man of the two? Did not God foresee that Jacob would prove himself to be a rogue in his morals, and Esau turn out to be an honorable man? These are fair questions, and Paul fairly answers them when he says: "That the purpose of God, according to election, might stand, not of meritorious works, but of him that calleth." If good works had anything to do as the basis of election to eternal life, God would hav loved and called Esau rather than Jacob. But he made Jacob an elect sinner, and Esau a predestinated reprobate, in order to display the sovereignty of his will. It is not I who say this: it is Paul himself.

But so important is this doctrin in the scheme of redemption that he goes on further with his argument and illustration, citing the case of Pharaoh, and showing that God raised him up and hardened his heart for the express purpose of showing the truth that God was not responsible to man for the exercise of his sovereignty. Then, knowing that the rebellious objection would be started in the minds of the Roman skeptics that it was inconsistent in God to punish a man for actually carrying out the divine purpose, he marches bravely to the point, like a geometrician who knows that his demonstration is built upon axioms, and says: "Thou wilt say unto me, then, why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? Nay, but, oh man, who art thou that replie st against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it: Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor and another to dishonor? What if God, willing to show his wrath and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy which he has afore prepared unto glory, even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles?"

You would scarcely believe, my brethren, from listening to modern preaching, that there was such a chapter as this in the Bible. But here it is, and it is only one of many other passages, all teaching that the doctrin itself and those which immediately spring out of it are the very foundation on which the system of theology, and the church as a soul-saving institution, rest. It is so plainly, so frequently, and so forcibly taught, especially in the New Testament, that when in 1673 the Westminster assembly of divines was convened in London by the Parliament to draw up a scriptural creed for the inhabitants of the British isles, after settling the canon of scripture they laid down in the very beginning of their work this doctrin of the sovereignty of God as the prolific fountain from which issued all the rest of the doctrins and duties inculcated by the Christian religion. These great scholars occupied more than four years in their sessions, comparing scripture with scripture, endeavoring to find out what was revealed therein as eternal truth, and made God, as an all-wise sovereign, the starting-point in their system of theology.

But although Paul was by far the most copious expounder of the doctrins resting upon this axiomatic truth of the sovereignty of God, the apostle Peter, inspired by the same Holy Spirit, agreed with him, as you will see in his sermon on the day of Pentecost, recorded in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, where, in addressing a large audience of Jews and gentiles, he says: "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye hav taken, and by wicked hands hav crucified and slain." It is alleged by those who wish to expunge the doctrin of the decrees of God from our Confession, that if we preached it from our pulpits we could get up no revivals of religion to fill the vacant seats in our churches. But as an answer to this charge, I point to the amazing success of Peter's sermon, where an immense out-door audience were so pricked in their hearts by the arrows of conviction that they cried out asking what they should do to be saved. Now, look at the apostle's answer to this question. "Repent and be baptized, for the promis is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call;" which was Paul's way of saying as many as God had elected and predestinated to eternal life. On this occasion, instead of preventing a revival, it produced one, and no less than three thousand souls were converted.

Adam Clark, the Arminian commentator on the Bible and the self-appointed attorney at law to defend his divine client, God, from the reproach of the Infidels, in expounding the significant sentence I hav quoted from Peter's great revival sermon, takes the ground that, to avoid the blasphemy of making God the author of sin, there was a large class of sinful events in the future, the crucifixion of Christ being one, of which God kept himself in ignorance, and therefore was not responsible for. Dr. Clark plainly perceived that any event which God *fore*saw was as certain to come to pass as any past event which he *after*saw; and if, "by his determinate counsel and foreknowledge," God delivered up Jesus to be crucified by wicked hands, he could not, according to Dr. Clark's ideas of equity, rid himself of the responsibility of being accessory before the fact, by verbally placing the blame upon the Jews and the Romans, whose hearts he had hardened and then employed for that very purpose; and therefore he was frightened at the bugaboo, which has scared Dr. Briggs out of his wits and deprived God of his omniscience, so that he could not see the class of sinful events, but those only that were good. A child might hav whispered into his ear that before God could select the events of which he would keep himself in ignorance, he must necessarily see them in order to decide upon their character of good or evil; and if in his survey of the future he saw them, and did not use his almighty power to prevent them, he was as much the author of sin as Paul and Peter and Calvin and the Confession of Faith made him out to be.

The Arminian theology, therefore, can make no pretension whatever to being either scriptural or consistent with itself. It is a conglomeration of all the contradictions and absurdities which our scores of sects fancy they find in the Bible. The Arminian God has only one eye. He is both a coward, afraid to contemplate a part of his own plan, and an ignoramus, knowing nothing of the largest and most important class of events that take place in this world, nor of the necessary relations they bear to other events. In short, he is an imbecil, and as unfit to perform the duties of a sovereign ruler of this world, much less the universe of worlds, as a man born blind is to act as a locomotiv engineer on a train of cars going at fifty miles an hour. Arminianism is the basis of all the creeds of Christendom, Catholic and Protestant, except ours. It is like the multitudinous patches upon a beggar's coat, made of all kinds of materials, from silk down to shoddy, and displaying all kinds of colors and of shapes.

The only system of theology in the Christian world is that which is contained in our Confession of Faith. Like a demonstration in geometry, it has a beginning, a middle, and an end, all linked together as a chain that cannot be broken. Embodied in a church whose ministers and members believed it, it stands in history as a colossal power, commanding the respect of all minds that know how to reason and love truth for its own sake. It has stood among the contending creeds of Christendom as a rock stands in the ocean, defying the power of the waves, no matter from what quarter the winds blow. It is only hated now by the aliens who hav come in from the heretical sects, and who are converting the sons of the church into parricides, willing to dishonor and destroy their own mother.

Some people are shocked, as Calvin himself was, with the "severity of God," as displayed in his dealings with the children of men in regard to their future happiness, and we believe it for the very same reason Calvin did, because it is as clearly taught in the Bible as human language could express it. But if on this account you giv up the worship of Jehovah, what will you gain in worshiping the God of nature? His character is open to the same charge of cruelty which men impute to the God of the Bible. He allows earthquakes, cyclones, and epidemics of disease to sweep off his children by thousands, and although almighty in power to help physically, and intellectually to enlighten, he has never done a single thing to prevent such destruction of life and happiness, but allows the human family to wallow in hopeless misery from one generation to another.

Now, I take the ground that Dr. Briggs, and his clerical associates in the Presbyterian church, in their deliberate and pertinacious attacks upon the fundamental doctrin of the sovereignty of God in the work of redemption, hav, either consciously or unconsciously, become Atheists. The great Lord Bacon, in his Essay on Superstition, says: "It is better to hav no opinion of God at all, than such an opinion as is unworthy of him; for the one is unbelief, the other is contumely." The Agnostic is neither an Atheist nor a Deist. He neither affirms nor denies the existence of a God, but modestly and frankly says that, as he knows of no undisputed facts in the case, so he has nothing to justify himself either in believing or disbelieving. Dr. Briggs, however, as professor of theology, puts contumely upon God. He declares that while God may exercise his sovereignty over the other worlds he has created, he has no right to do as he pleases with the inhabitants of this world. He admits, with Paul, that God is a potter, that humanity is the lump of clay, and that God has a right to make vessels of honor, but he denies altogether that he has any moral right to make vessels of dishonor. He thinks he knows better than God himself wherein the divine glory consists, and what is proper and becoming in so august a being as God. Thus he first dethrones, then degrades, and finally, to all intents and purposes, annihilates God. The devils in hell are said in the scriptures "to fear and tremble." Why? Because they believe in the all-mighty power of God to do with them as he pleases. They would soon start another rebellion if they had a leader like Dr. Briggs, who would teach the doctrin that God, in fixing the character and destiny of his own creatures, usurped a power that did not belong to him. By thus robbing God of the sublimest and most essential attribute of his character, he and his confrêres hav made him as contemptible as the one-eyed God of the Arminians and Unitarians. Where is the difference between an ignorant, fearful, and imbecil God on the one hand, and Mumbo Jumbo on the other?

This questioning of the sovereignty of God, therefore, and the proposition to eliminate it, with its dovetailing doctrins, from our Confession of Faith, leaves that form of sound words a mere eviscerated cadaver calling aloud for burial. It is a proposition to preach another gospel, and subjects the inventors of it to the awful curse of the Apostle Paul: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we hav preached unto you, let him be accursed."

My brethren, I regard Atheism as the only alternativ to Calvinism; and as they are the only two systems of thought about God and the universe that are logical and worthy of respect, I feel that, before I close this discourse, I ought, in fairness to the Atheists, to giv you, in as few words as possible, a sketch of their creed, for creed it is, and its believers are so sincere that they brave and defy all the scorn and misrepresentation which their profession of it has invoked.

The Atheist, like the Calvinist, has a starting-point in his system which he considers axiomatic. It is the eternity of matter, and therefore that everything which exists at all is matter in some of its infinit forms, and that what is not matter is nothing, things which are spoken of as immaterial or spiritual being only one of the infinit forms of which matter is capable. This implies that as matter existed from all eternity, under the universal law of change, as to time, motion, and form, it will continue to exist forever.

The Atheist declines accepting the idea of a personal God, because, if God exists at all, he must needs be infinit and omnipresent; and since a person must occupy space, if God existed as such, he would occupy the whole of space, leaving no room for any other person or thing; and because, if God were a person and had in his character the benevolence and power imputed to him, he certainly would do something to mitigate at least the sufferings endured by the human family. But the little and only improvement that has been made in the world in any respect has been made, not by God, but by man himself.

Atheism teaches that the human race, now standing at the head of all organized matter on the earth, is the outcome of the process of evolution, whereby the spark called life, after the globe had cooled enough to allow it, sprang into existence, just as water now appears in a laboratory after the two dry gases, oxygen and hydrogen, are placed in a jar, in proper proportions, and subjected to a charge of electricity; and that this germ of life, beginning in the lowest forms, has worked up through millions of years till it has culminated in man, and the present degree of development in mind and form which he has reached. And it argues that, as this development has, from the beginning, been on ascending lines, because there is a law in the case, we may look forward with confidence that the race will not deteriorate, but, under the genial influence of knowledge, will go on steadily toward perfection in the future.

The Atheist holds the opinion that life in matter is like the quality of yeast in meal, it permeates the whole mass with its influence, and produces all the phenomena we see. Matter is the Saxon term from which our word mother is derived, and indicates the capability of the maternal function in nature to produce all the infinit forms of life as they exist and hav existed, so that according to this scheme there is no place in the universe for a personal God and no duty for him to perform. As to the mystery of suffering, the Atheist explains it by saying that in the struggle to emerge from low conditions into higher it is a natural and necessary accompaniment. It givs acuteness to the intellect, and urges it to study the laws of life and health, and devise ways and means, not only of curing, but destroying, the causes of disease.

In regard to a future state of existence for man, after he has worn out his faculties of mind and body on the stage of life, and dies, Atheism is as silent on the subject as the Old Testament is. But in the wonderful organization of the human body, if the thing called the soul, or the will, which prompts to all action of the body, and constitutes its personality and individuality, exists at all after death, it is not on account of a quality supernaturally imparted to it, but because it is as natural to liv after death as it was to liv before birth. Man's future after death, as his birth was, is a matter over which he had no control, and the fate of one man will be the fate of all the human family. Hence Atheism takes no stock in religion of any type, regarding it as the offspring of ignorance and fear, and when embodied in the church, making it the nurse of the most dangerous institution that has ever existed upon the earth.

The Atheist, if he were offered the immortality which the Christian expects to enjoy after death, upon the understanding that he retains the same consciousness and intelligence he possesses in this world, would probably decline accepting it, because, to say nothing of the tiresome monotony, as he calls it, of the heavenly employments, it would be impossible for him to be happy when he knew that the countless millions of the human family, including, perhaps, many of his own kindred, were weeping and wailing and gnashing their teeth in the agony of eternal hell-fire. There are other things dearer than immortal life; and annihilation is one of them, when a person with keen sympathetic feeling is compelled to contemplate eternally intense suffering which he can do nothing to relieve.

As a rule of life for the self-government of men in their relations to each other, the Atheists accept that which was taught by Hillel, the Israelite, Confucius, the Chinese sage, and five hundred years later, by Jesus of Nazareth, when he said: "Whatsoever ye would wish that men should do to you, do ye also to them." This is not a "positiv" law, so called because it derives all its force from the authority of the legislator, but a natural law of reciprocity, which was understood even in the childhood of the human family; for it requires but little intellect for a man to perceive that if he values his own rights, his equal brother values his also; and if he feels that his brother should respect his rights, the inference is clear that he should respect his brother's too.

Thus you see, my brethren, that if I understand it, Atheism, like Calvinism, is a connected system; and in the world of thought they are the only two systems. All the others purporting to be such are a mere jumble, an orderless mass of unrelated ideas, which it is the despair of the human intellect to understand. Calvinism and Atheism being opposit to each other, one of them must be right and the other wrong. Dr. Briggs and his associates, afraid or ashamed to stand up for the Calvinistic system, as it is logically and symmetrically contained in our Confession; are trying to put it through a metamorphosis that will make it accord with their notions, and be popular with the world; but when they finish their botched work, and I must choose between them, I hav no hesitation in saying that I would infinitly prefer legitimate and logical Atheism to a contemptible and bastard Presbyterianism.

Letter from Mr. Heywood.

STATES PRISON, P. O. BOX 100,
CHARLESTOWN, MASS., April 27, Y L. 19

DEAR MR MACDONALD: As the struggle to realize mental freedom in style of expression persists, I am often reminded of views proclaimed by that peerless scholar, master philosopher, and world-embracing reformer, Stephen Pearl Andrews. When, in 1860–61, I was acting general agent of the Massachusetts Antislavery Society, I was sitting one morning at my desk in the fenced-off corner of the office, where the executiv committee, Mr. Garrison's cabinet, used to meet, looking at "Love, Marriage, and Divorce," a discussion between S. P. Andrews, Horace Greeley, and Henry James, a copy of which I had found on the shelvs in that headquarters of "crazy" evolution, when Charles K Whipple, one of Garrison's quills, came in. "Who is Stephen Pearl Andrews?" I asked. "He is a scoundrel," replied the irascible quills aforesaid. Of course, I was bound to read the book then. "Suppressed" truth livs to write the history of the suppressors; ideas float further on the hisses of opposition than on the accents of the most eloquent oratory. If ever severity in repression could hav won, it certainly was relentlessly tried under "Bloody Mary" in 1549–1556; three hundred men, women, girls, and boys were burnt alive for heresy. The government was especially "kind" in allowing friends of the accused to bring bags of powder to be tied about the neck, under the arms, and between the legs of those bound to the stake among the fagots to be fired, so that by consequent explosion their bodies would be torn limb from limb, and thus pain ended at once. Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, being the chief intellectual exponents of progress, were treated with select severity. Cranmer, as you know, was the spiritual founder of the English church, and the author of the superlativly noble liturgy still used by Episcopalians. Froude, the historian, endeavors to show that Henry VIII., the political originator of Episcopacy, was "virtuous," because he did not hav "irregular" relations with women, but "loved" them legally; that is, when he got tired of one wife he would contrive to hav her beheaded and then marry another! Fierce indeed were the measures of the Romish church to hold England in her grasp; but the ashes of "dead" dissent proved stronger than living-bodied affirmation of "wrong that needs resistance." As growing thought confronts social evil, the old fires of state-church frenzy rekindle in the obscenity fury, which Dr. Foote rightly calls the "American Inquisition."

Vice societies are becoming so very generally detested that Henry Chase, Comstock's Boston "pal," has got a new alias; he has organized himself into "The Watch and Ward Society," the latest association mask behind which "decoys" conspire for Christ's sake and the cash it fetches. Constructiv treason was a crime in England until Erskine, in the celebrated cases of Horne Tooke, Hardy, and Cartwright, demolished the fiction. Here the old bloody spook now comes up in the guise of alleged "obscenity" or constructiv indelicacy; they try to make a man "an offender for a word." It is simply one of the many alleged offenses where opinions are fiercely assailed, where there is no "overt act" against life or property—said opinions usually being rational growth, the truth vs. legalized, classic error. If ignorance relativ to "the gods" was in fewer men, as when Abner Kneeland was jailed for alleged blasphemy in Boston, your graphic Bible pictures would be excellent kindling among fagots for truth seeking heretics. Daniel Webster said, "The true office of government is to protect persons and property from invasion." If typed or oral views are thrust on persons who do not wish to hear or read them then there might be a grievance; but no real persons hav ever offered to say that they hav been invaded or hurt by alleged obscene prints. It is "decoys" and "spotters" who liv by blackmailing, by invading the right of citizens to select their own books and newspapers, that pretend hurt. Elizur Wright said: "The Comstock law cannot be enforced without falsehood; no person can be got into court under it, unless a lie is the locomotiv to draw him." In my pending case not even a "decoy" appeared against me; "orders from Washington," John Wanamaker's "orders," required Deacon Gregory, the Princeton postmaster, to lie to us. Of course there cannot be agreement in morals any more than in religion until truth prevails. These laws to force agreement in opinions touching morals are the bloody old "Acts of Uniformity" over again. T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, and others clearly showed that local state laws are abundantly sufficient to protect persons from invasion in these respects, though they never hav been enforced against impudent imposition of Bibles on dissenters. So far as enactors of obscenity laws had any rational purpose they could not hav intended persecution. Hoar, Garfield, and Butler protested in Congress that they never intended sanction of the fierce persecution of opinions Comstock has rioted in. The ruling of Attorney-General Devens in my case of 1878, of Judge Nelson in the case of 1883, of Judge Putnam in the case of 1884, and the action of Judge Paul, of Virginia, in releasing Mrs. Slenker, all sustain our view of the statute —that it was never meant to cover publications of the reformatory and educational character issued by Mr. Harman and our Princeton people. Discussion of morals, physiology, and language is absolutely necessary, explicit utterance right and proper, as between publishers of books and newspapers and their patrons. Judge Carpenter's outrage on General Butler was not more atrocious than his scandalous treatment of Mr. Chamberlain in my case. General Butler, of course, will follow up the fight, and Carpenter will be impeached and unfrocked, his judicial robes be taken from him, before we get through with this serious business. I really hav violated no law; no Massachusetts judge has put me behind prison bars. In 1878 it was Judge Clarke, of New Hampshire; now it is a superstitious bigot from Rhode Island, who, without law and against law, has suppressed a newspaper and imprisoned an editor in the old Bay State. EZRA H. HEYWOOD.

Why Mr. Wanamaker Answereth Not.

FRIEND MACDONALD: I am not at all surprised that Wanamaker does not answer your questions about the Bible. I should be much more surprised if he did answer them. He is like a man exposed to three saws; if he moves either way or stands still, he is sure to be ripped up in the end, and he is probably taking the course that he thinks safest for himself. If he comes out honestly and confesses that the Bible is a filthy, fraudulent, obscene book, not fit to be read in families, schools, and churches, nor circulate through the mail, as half its chapters prove it to be, he will hav all the eighty thousand priests and clergymen of this nation and their millions of dupes after him like so many hounds, and they will hate, despise, and ostracise him to the day of his death. That is one saw that he is in danger of.

If he comes out in favor of the Bible, declaring it to be the work of a supreme being, he will prepare the way to open such a flood of nastiness from the Bible as the world could not get rid of in a thousand years. That is the second saw. If he keeps quiet without answering your question, his reputation for honesty will be gone forever. That is the third saw.

If he is honest, he will come out like a man and confess that the Bible is not the work of inspiration but of ignorant men—that each writer gave the book and its God a patch of his own character, and thus the Bible was made up, and has no more divine authority than any other book. If Wanamaker will come out and confess this in a hundred years from this time, his name will stand higher than any or all of the eighty thousand clergymen now in this nation.

What Produces Spiritual Phenomena.

In the issue of the 21st ult. Mr. Beck takes up his pen as an avowed neutral but resigns it as a rampant Spiritualist.

He solicits another solution of spiritualistic phenomena than magnetism; but as consistently might he endeavor to account for the sights and sounds accompanying delirium tremens without considering the imbibition of alcoholic liquor.

I need but to insinuate the significant fact that the "circle" is barren of results, and the efforts of the mesmerist are unavailing, during an electric storm. The reverend sophist, Bovee Dods, the arch exponent of the Spiritualistic field and one of the most adept compounders of philosophy and superstition who ever tarnished the escutcheon of science, freely admits that the virtue of the "circle" depends exclusivly upon the elaboration and infection of magnetic sympathy.

The simple state of intoxication and the spiritualistic spell are identical in cause—cerebral orgasm, due to eutonic action of the nerves and the blood. In each case exaltation is succeeded by depression, energy by torpor. A spook-smitten friend is loud in his boast that he has been both mesmerized and initiated into the mystic orgies of the "circle," and that the respectiv sensations differ both in nature and degree. In the former surmise he is mistaken, in the latter correct. But because he has experienced two stages by no means implies that he is familiar with twenty. The common "spiritualistic" state is precisely analogous to the first hypnotic stage, termed ergoiu dissement. Hypnotism in its broadest signification embraces not alone the lethargic, cataleptic, somnambulistic, and ecstatic states, but many neurotic disorders which are in many persons constitutional, chiefly the hysteric and monomaniac. All hypnotists admit the difficulty of acutely distinguishing the blending states between absolute self-consciousness and the introductory hypnosis.

It is protested by the minions of Spiritualism that hypnosis cannot be induced otherwise than by manual manipulation or mechanical or chemical aids to subjugate the senses, repress the will, and divert the attention, such being the customary adjuncts of mesmeric charlatans.

Reference to any standard work on magnetism will quickly dispel such misconceptions, be they ever so deeply rooted in prejudice.

The "magnetic fluid" or other emanation—for such undoubtedly exists though its subtilty evades chemical analysis—is imparted, not only by mesmeric gesture, but by simple contact on a hypnogenic zone, or by a mere effort of the will. The morbidly nervous are often susceptible to hypnotic influence without submitting to the usual process; and the fact that a healthy person of moderate, balanced intellect and proportionate will power has repeatedly to participate in the séance before becoming en rapport with the "spirits," notwithstanding the circumstance that the united powers of all composing the circuit are focused upon himself, by no means sustains the objection.

For explicit expositions of the many problems of psychology and magnetism I refer the sincere investigator to any skilful hypnotist or to the elaborate treatises of Carpenter, Bain, Mansel, Maudsley, Charcot, Gessman, Braid, Liebault, and others, especially commending those of the schools of Nancy and La Salpetriere. If the "spiritologist," the inebriate, the erethist, and the Bedouin prophet demand a sacred resolution of the profane freaks of a distempered imagination, philosophy cannot "stoop to conquer." There is no cure for blissful ignorance but enlightenment, no key to the mental mechanism but psychology, magnetism, and phrenology.

The master logician of the age, Alexander Bain, rejects Spiritualism, among various reasons, on the ground of antecedent incredibility. Its theories are compatible with no logical inference; and the silent contempt of the scientific world stamps its votaries as survivors of a barbaric age.

It is strange, the uninitiated may exclaim, that the spirits imitate the example of Israel's celestial tyrant in manifesting themselvs only to a chosen few; but it is by no means marvelous that credulity should always be the dupe of its own infatuation.

No anti-Spiritualist has, to my cognizance, attempted to establish his individual ideas as a standard of infallibility, as misrepresented by Mr. Beck; he has simply tested the validity of testimony as Hume tested the veracity of credulous witnesses—and the probability of miracles—by logical canons. No Secularist should be guilty of applying the epithet fool to a mistaken man; but that such is the bigot no candid man can deny.

The Brotherhood of Moralists are assailed by the phantom-brokers because they hav drafted their constitution in strict accordance with the teachings of science and the open page of nature; because they hav exercised a prerogativ pertaining to all free-born men in adapting the conditions of membership to suit themselvs, and not to pander to the servility of ghost-intoxicated opinion. Unless the Moralists encroach on state or person, such defamatory invectivs are as contemptible as they are unnecessary; for to deny their principles is to reject the essentials of the entire circle of the sciences. The Moralists evidently consider it unnecessary to re-investigate that which a thousand investigations hav proved to be a mental phenomenon perverted to subserve a superstitious end.

As well might the dead demand repeated exhumation and eternal repetition of the post-mortem. The Brotherhood has not legally prohibited the nursery lullaby and the fairy tale, where there are bearded babies in ancient swaddling-clothes to relish them; but because they exclude Mother Goose and her broomstick from their councils does not signify that they "oppose progress."

One hobgoblin champion glories in the happy casualty that, despite the scepter of reason, he still exists and propagates his species; so did the idolator, the crusader, and the inquisitor—each by virtue of the sacred law, survival of the unfittest.

I perceive that Mr. Willis still endeavors to trace the bon-bon in his little stocking to the magic sleigh of Kris Kringle; still searches for the footprints of Santa Claus in the embers on the hearth. So long as men will lisp the interrogatories of the nursery, to that source they must resort for entertainment.

In affinity with his coterie, he calumniates those whose principles he cannot refute, and joins Mr. Beck in deliberately garbling the unequivocal terms embraced in Article 3 of the constitution. An appropriate term has so often been applied to those who suppress half the truth that I forbear useless repetition.

THE MYSTERIES OF "CLAIRVOYANCE."

During the autumn of 1886, while a resident of San Francisco, two letters were one morning left at my apartments by the postman. The address of one was written in a familiar hand, and had long been anticipated; the other bore a foreign postmark and its superscription was wholly unfamiliar.

I opened neither, but repaired to the parlors of a well-known "clairvoyant" on Eddy street, who, for the consideration of a fee, advertised to predict the future, solve the problems of the present, and disclose the hidden past.

I was neither skeptical from prejudice nor credulous from predilection; but was not prone to accept or reject a theory simply because it was indorsed or condemned by current scientific opinion. I regarded all unauthenticated scientific discoveries as I regarded "revelations"—as a fact or a "revelation" only to such party or parties as to whom such had been disclosed or "revealed." Neither believing nor doubting without a good and sufficient cause, I estimated such facts as I was about to investigate not as supernatural but psychical or legerdemain.

When I explained my mission, she demurred; but on doubling the fee she assented, and seated herself in a posture of complete repose on an ottoman directly confronting the chair which I occupied and in close proximity to myself.

On entering I had perceived the physiognomical symptoms of hysteria; and but ten minutes elapsed before she entered the somnambulistic state, without the aid of a magnetizer and without having passed the usual intermediate lethargy or catalepsy. She demanded perfect silence and enjoined me to occupy my thoughts solely with the purpose of my mission. She neither saw, nor requested to see, either of the missivs, and was content with my assertion that the seals were unbroken.

Concerning the letter whose author I drew from the character of the penmanship, she correctly divined the age, the complexion, the occupation, the relationship, the residence, and the name of the writer; but of the author of the second she would not even venture a surmise, while of the contents of either she was equally as ignorant as I—a significant coincidence.

On awaking, she dismissed me without ceremony, declining to answer any question pertaining to my own age or vocation, without re-entering the trance or exacting an additional fee.

For a moment I was perplexed, if not astounded; but on reflection I perceived that she had only related circumstances of which I myself had been previously aware, with the exception of the age, once known, but temporarily forgotten.

Concerning the recognition of indistinct memories, such penetrativ powers are greater only in intensity than those which gain a magnetic equilibrium with the activ memory and induce a corresponding state in the mind of the somnambulist.

Such powers are by no means endemic to the "clairvoyant," but are possessed in equal degree by every accomplished mind-reader and telepathist.

This equilibrium once attained, the second chain of ideas can be partially connected and the association restored in a degree perceptible to the supersensitiv mind of the somnambulist, yet not obvious to the normal senses of the subject.

In such an event it is probable that the consciousness of personality or individuality in conjunction with divided or vacillating attention of the subject renders faint memories impalpable to himself, while the percipient forfeits all consciousness of her ego and concentrates her involuntary and undivided attention solely upon the memory of the subject.

I find nothing in standard treatises on hypnotism antagonistic to this theory, but much that confirms. In order, however, to test the validity of such hypotheses, I subsequently visited her ostensibly on a similar errand, holding in my hand a folded letter taken at random from my escritoir, the contents and author of which I had carefully contrived not to perceive or even to suspect, while during her "trance" I vividly recalled another communication which I had purposely memorized. As I anticipated, she fathomed my present thoughts, repeating almost verbatim the contents of the communication which I was then abstractly contemplating, never once alluding to the import of the paper which I held folded in my hand.

As much to my surprise as to her chagrin, the "affectionate missiv," proved on unfolding to be a notice of assessment on mining stocks. 'Twould be superfluous to add that my patronage was no longer continued or solicited.

Mr. Beck represents "one more unfortunate, rashly importunate," joined in the mad pursuit of a shadow. While I admire the ardor of his "investigation," I would counsel him not to resort to a decomposing carcass if he seek the perfumes of Arabia.

Respecting Mr. Beck's "table," if its movement or rapping be real, the cause is secret mechanism; if apparent, the cause is optical illusion, heretofore explained. In addition, it may be affirmed that the existing suspension of the intellect and the abnormal exaltation of the fancy render it impossible for the participants to discriminate between the imaginary and the real.

The self-engendered hallucination of a single individual can sometimes be dispelled by an effort of the half-conscious will; but where there is a union of sympathetic individuals, the magnetic concentration generates an emotion against which the enfeebled will is temporarily powerless.

Again, in the absence of illusory movement, the table may be actually moved by an assistant, himself rendered invisible, and at the option of the medium, likewise imperceptible to the remaining four senses, either or both being accomplished by hypnotic suggestion, either verbally or sympathetically imparted. For example of such phenomena, see Bjornstrom's "Hypnotism," pp. 64, 65.

In the event of an oral suggestion the suggestion itself is obliterated from the memory upon dehypnotization, while other details of the "séance" are remembered, wholly or partly, at the option of the medium. It should be remembered, en passant, that dehypnotization itself can accomplished at any designated moment by suggestion as well as by reverse passes, inhibitory manipulation, juxtaposition of a magnet, or antagonistic sympathy.

Every standard work on hypnotism teems with such, and even more complicated, instances; and every practitioner is familiar with thousands of seemingly inexplicable phenomena, both of illusion and pure hallucination. As the sphere of knowledge expands, that of the supernatural recedes; and to the unprejudiced student of magnetism the fundamental principle of Spiritualism is identical in character, not degree, with those psychological laws on which depend thought-transference, or mind-reading, sensation and idea transmission, organic sympathism, and telepathy, that prince of oriental mysteries entitled the Hindoo Secret Mail.

The fact once understood that, under such conditions, ideas of the false as well as ideas of the true, hallucinations as well as realities, can be as easily and as vividly transmitted as conceived; that illusions of conception, of belief, of consciousness, of personality, are as easily induced as the simplest illusion of the external senses, the nimbus of Spiritualism will dissolve never to dazzle and decay again.

Concerning the "answer" given by the sibyl in a given instance to be correct, is it more rational to believe that a tongueless spirit speaks, than to infer that the central ideas in the subject mind, namely, the meditated question and its doubted or anticipated response, both necessarily uppermost and intense in the mind of the questioner, should magnetically manifest themselvs to one or more parties in the circle, who, in reciprocity, magnetically impress the idea of the response so intensely as to render the sensation as apparently real as an audible reply?

In such an instance no deceit may be intended by the percipient, her reciprocity being involuntary. Ignorant of the power they wield, they are often sincere in believing that the responses are actually dictated by the "spirits," and scoff at magnetism, without which they could not even exist, as mesmerists scoff at them.

That many illusions of the senses, of consciousness, and of judgment are due to magnetic reaction, was at first a hypothesis, but later an ascertained fact; and upon this discovery is founded more than one system of mental philosophy. This the "Spiritologist" denies, but cannot confute, when he alleges by implication that mind-reading is an imposture and Bishop's fame a bauble.

I would question the devotee whether it is rational unconditionally to admit the affirmativ evidence of a transitory emotion, in preference to the evidence of the sober senses, unanimous in the negativ in a thousand preceding instances?

Wherein lies the consistency in asserting the figures of imagination to be real, while those of the dream are universally conceded to be false? The raven which haunted the tremors of Poe, the ethereal melodies that thrilled the frenzied ear of Milton, were none the less "manifest" than the apparitions of the "circle."

As the Spiritualist idolizes the imagination, so the savage worships the dream. But "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis not folly to be wise."

Marvin demonstrates that medio-mania is contagious. That it is a mania, a mere prelude to insanity which, indulged, develops into partial dementia, is a physiological fact corroborated by the melancholy statistics of every asylum in the land. The nervous temperament invariably predominates among its victims; and repeated aggravation of an already morbid susceptibility not only renders the victim blind to his own disease, but precludes the possibility of cure so long as the excitements of the "circle" are indulged in.

Chronic neurotic derangement finally ensues, wrecking both mental and physical functions. The reflex system is impaired, the powers of concentration and of will decline, consciousness itself becomes a treacherous guide, and from this stage the transit to the horrors of delirium is rapid and irresistible.

What is more hideous, yet more pathetic, than the frantic aspect of the "haunted maniac?" The attenuated form, the pallid cheek, the crisp and almost bristling hair, the muscular convulsions, the sunken orbits, the terrified stare, the ghastly gleam of the eye—he stands the breathing image of the shadowy specter that first beguiled his reveries.

Yet whatever may be the fallacies and dangers of Spiritualism as a system, every candid opponent must acknowledge that its adherents, like the Egyptian astrologers, hav unconsciously earned the gratitude of the human race by so persisting in a species of madness as to attract the analytic attention of science.

But because some truth has been found in much error is not a valid reason for perpetuating the pernicious alliance after divorce has so often been proved both salutary and morally expedient.

Hypnotism, rightly employed, is a moral as well as a physical agent of therapeutics; perverted, it conduces to ignorance and degradation, if not to vice.

Williams, Ariz. M. L. SALTER.

Religion Undefinable—Naught But Superstition.

The late lamented Courtlandt Palmer in his exposition of "Positivism; or, the Religion of Humanity," gave this definition of religion: "A saving faith, whose creed is based on science alone."

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 13, 1879, we controverted this definition, together with that of another writer, Mr. Brown, who defined religion as "the relation and obligation of man to his fellow-man, and not to an unknown and unknowable God," which relation, he said, was disclosed only by science.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, said we, makes a belief in God the very essence of religion, and the only hint it givs as to the obligation of man to his fellow-man is in a note distinguishing religion from morality, in which it says that "morality describes the duties of man, to which true religion always influences." It speaks of piety and sanctity, faith and worship, but its only mention of science is as applied to theology or man's ideas of God. Old Noah Webster did embody in his definition "the practice of all moral duties," but took pains to add that "the practice of moral duties without a belief in a divine lawgiver, and without reference to his will, is not religion."

To undertake, therefore, to eliminate God from the definition of religion, we argued, was an outrage on common sense. Science does not disclose religion to our mind, and we agree with Noah Webster that the practice of moral duties alone is not religion.

The earliest authority in regard to the derivation of the word religion is Cicero, who said it was compounded of re and legere, to read over again, to reflect upon, or to study the sacred books in which religion is delivered (McClintock and Strong's Cyc.).

The next uninspired authority is Lactantius, a Christian father, who is supposed to hav died about A.D. 315. He is called the Christian Cicero, and in a verbose attempt to define religion he disputes Cicero's derivation of the word, characterizes his interpretation of religion as senseless, and concludes thus:

> They are superstitious who worship many and false gods. We, on the other hand, are religious who make our supplications to the one true God.

Both these authorities, by the way, we consider spurious, believing that the works of Cicero and Lactantius are modern monkish forgeries. Nevertheless we accept the fabricated authorities for what they are worth, mindful meanwhile that we hav a more ancient and authoritativ definition in the epistle of James, to wit:

> Pure religion and undefiled before God and the father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

But what is such a definition worth to a Rationalist? It is evidently the conception of a monk. Furthermore, the Greek word threskeia, translated "religion," is derived from the verb threskeuo, "to introduce and observe religious ceremonies; to worship, to keep holy," or, as rendered in Latin by Screvelius, superstitiose Deum colo, veneror, which we translate, "to worship or adore the gods superstitiously."

For a dozen years past we hav contended that religion in its last analysis is superstition, and no new definition by any scientist has at all shaken our judgment.

The last of the attempted scientific definitions that has attracted our attention, is that of Prof. de Quatrefages (Katr-fazh), of Paris. In his very learned work on "The Human Species," last chapter, he thus defines religion:

> A belief in beings superior to man and capable of exercising a good or evil influence upon his destiny; and the conviction that the existence of man is not limited to the present life, but that there remains for him a life beyond the grave.
> Every people, every man, believing these two things, is religious, and observation shows more and more clearly every day the universality of this character.

Disciples of August Comte, professors of "Positiv Science," and brethren of the Materialistic school, what say you to that scientific definition?

Nay, further; brethren of the Spiritualistic school, how many of you will accept it? You claim that the only satisfactory proof of another life is afforded by Spiritual phenomena. Some of you, probably a majority, still retain a hereditary belief in a supreme being; but you know that many avowed Spiritualists are Agnostics. Some of your speakers introduce their Sunday lectures with an "Invocation;" but the unbowed heads and open eyes of the auditors indicate how little that performance is appreciated.

Agnostic Spiritualists do not question Professor Quatrefages's proofs of the almost universal belief in a life beyond the grave, and of the good or evil influences of disembodied spirits. But it does not follow that whoever believes in these two things is religious. Benevolence, conscientiousness, veneration, justice, humanity, love, we can all understand; but in regard to religion mankind are at loggerheads. Quatrefages recognizes this when he says, "We must almost everywhere, probably everywhere, distinguish religion from superstition." As if it were possible to do so! Would Quatrefages accept Lactantius's statement that only those are religious who make supplication to the one true God? Certainly not, for he says:

> I grant that religion and superstition are often, as it were, fused into the creeds of certain races, so that the priest and the sorcerer are confounded in one person. But this is not always the case; and even where the connection forms an apparent confusion, we should unquestionably distinguish the two elements.

But the learned professor of anthropology, though nominally a Roman Catholic, has dogmatically affirmed the universality of the religious sentiment; and though he would fain eliminate superstition from the religion of the savage and barbarian, he would also eliminate it from Christianity, which he admits is chargeable with it in a lesser degree. But when superstition, which is the worshipful or God element, is gone, what is left of religion? Does not Noah Webster say that "the practice of moral duties without a belief in a divine lawgiver, and without reference to his will, is not religion?" And with this authority, unaffected by the contradictory definitions of pseudo science, are we not amply justified in maintaining that religion in its last analysis is naught but superstition?

ANTICHRIST.

Reformation of Our Judiciary.

Thanks to Thomas Paine, the Author-Hero of our Revolution, in the formation of our republic the rights of the minority were held sacred, and protected by means of the judiciary.

The majority, swayed by prejudice, inflamed by passion, or corrupted by bribery, might assail the rights of the minority, might succeed in enacting laws depriving the minority of their rights of person or property; but the judiciary was enthroned in the temple of justice, to prevent oppression and insure equal rights and privileges to all.

Why, then, does injustice prevail? How account for the disgraceful—and because to so great extent justifiable, all the more disgraceful—lynchings at New Orleans, Oysterville, and Walla Walla?

Because the judiciary has failed in its high office, has forfeited the respect and confidence of the people.

Criminals with wealth, with political influence, or a pull on the ring that rules, hav nothing to fear from the courts. Courts of law exist; but courts of justice are few and very far apart.

In civil cases, the poor hav but faint hope of justice; if the opponent is wealthy, a powerful corporation, or a political heeler, they hav none.

In cases between the wealthy, instead of decisions in harmony with the law and the facts, compromise verdicts are rendered. Jurors worn out by the obstinacy or knavery of one of their number, and longing to get away to home or business, agree on a verdict in direct violation of their convictions of right and justice.

If damages are sued for—it has almost become the custom—after a few hours, failing to agree, each juror marks on a paper his estimate of the amount that should be awarded; they may vary from $5 to $5,000. The sum total of all the estimates is added by the foreman, and that amount, divided by twelve, rendered as the verdict.

Instead of the most estimable and able lawyers becoming judges, the really able lawyer cannot afford to sacrifice his practice for the small pay (and, each year becoming more and doubtful, honor). The most honorable of the legal profession will not descend to the demagogism, and befoul themselvs in the filthy pools of political corruption, necessary to insure election or appointment.

The few noble and true men who adorn the bench (each year this class is growing less) are oft grieved and disgusted by the verdicts of juries, realizing what a waste of effort it was to instruct them in the law, seeing they were selected with especial care as to their qualifications, and the possession of intelligence would hav excluded them from the position of juror.

It is undeniable that our entire system of judiciary needs revision and reformation.

We hav a military school at West Point, for the education of youth, selected from all parts of the United States, to become officers of our army, and a similar institution at Annapolis, for educating youth to become officers of the navy. After recommendation for appointment they hav to pass an examination in regard to their qualifications physically and mentally. Once admitted, they become wards of the nation. They are provided for for life, or during good behavior; and the highest honors and positions in the army or navy are the goal of their ambition. Experience has proved the wisdom and great advantages of these institutions. The money they cost is well expended, yet we may not hav another war in a hundred years.

Why not hav a judiciary school on the same principle in each state, the students selected from the various counties and passing necessary examinations as to mental and physical qualifications, and let the sheriffs summon from the passed classes of such state law schools the needed panels of jurors?

From the most able of the thus selected jurors select justices of the peace, police judges; and from the best and most able of the justices, judges of the other courts, clear up to judges of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Such a system would save thousands of dollars yearly to every county in every state in the Union; would greatly lessen the amount of litigation; for realizing that the case would be tried by jurors of intelligence, well versed in the law, and unapproachable by corrupt influences, the wealthy, powerful corporation would be disposed to yield to honest settlement and save expense of law suit, which could only result in verdict in accord with the law and the evidence.

Such jurors could not be befogged by the wiles and pettifogging tricks of the cunning and unscrupulous lawyer. High courts, where only the same honest regard to the rights of the question would hav influence, would render the now invariable "appeal" a thing of the past.

Will those most competent consider and discuss this crude suggestion?

Lectures and Meetings.

W. S. BELL has been giving courses of lectures at Arcadia and Hamburg, Ia. His address is, Clinton, Ia., 316 Tenth avenue, in care of James A. Greenhill.

ON Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, May 10th, Thomas Gardner, of Brooklyn, will lecture before the Newark Liberal League, 177 Halsey street, subject: "Is There Proof of Human Progress?"

"PROFESSOR GUNTON'S Social Economics" will be T. B. Wakeman's subject at the Manhattan Liberal Club, Friday evening, May 8th. The month's program will be interesting, among the the speakers being Henry Frank, the heretical preacher of Jamestown, N. Y., Dr. R. K. Noyes and J. M. L. Babcock, of Boston, both radical Infidels. The Club meets at 220 East 15th street.

The Inconsistency of Spiritism.

In an address to the Brotherhood of Moralists in yours of the 14th inst. Mr. W. L. Willis, who professes to be "neither an Anarchist, religionist, immoralist, nor Spiritualist," givs his reasons for not joining the Brotherhood, the principal one being, as he pompously asserts, that he knows too much; this excess of knowledge (!) consisting in his "knowing that people liv after they go through so-called death as well as he knows that they liv here." He further states that this knowledge is a scientific fact, but as there is no religion about it, he discards Spiritualism in toto.

Never was creed or cause deserted for more flimsy grounds than those advanced by Brother Willis for deserting the ranks of Spiritualism. First firing a broadside into it because he labors under the hallucination—a state of mind, by the way, to which all believers in spooks, ghosts, or spirits are peculiarly addicted—that his "newly discovered science of Spiritology" is engaged in mortal combat with its arch-enemies, the religious Spiritualists, he winds up his rodomontade by predicating for his new-fledged "science" the very processes and phenomena upon which Spiritualism is based.

Brother Willis is evidently not aware that in the last century people had as positiv knowledge that there were witches, as he has that there are spirits, and that one is precisely as much a superstition, i.e., a belief begotten of ignorance of natural law, as the other. His effort is really most conspicuous for its inconsistencies and ambiguity. After taking Spiritualists to task for their attempts "to twist these natural facts [showing that he accepts them as facts himself] into evidence that their religion is true," he again turns his attention to the Brotherhood of Moralists, accusing them of aiding Christians in driving mediumship from the earth, which, if left severely alone, would soon destroy both of their creeds. Yes, and so would Canada thistles soon overrun the whole world if allowed to "put in their work" without let or hindrance. After this grave charge he delivers himself of a still graver one, namely, that the Brotherhood has pledged itself not to investigate spirit phenomena and to expose mediums whenever it can. As for the first charge, I would say that I, as a member of said Brotherhood, hav offered to deposit $100 with the Truth Seeker Company to investigate these phenomena with any medium, I agreeing to conform to all rules, which challenge has never been accepted. And as for "exposing" mediums, if they are what they profess to be, how can they be exposed? Why should they fear exposure? An honest person invites investigation, but mediums shun it, because none of them dare submit to it. If their alleged mediumship were real, could they be exposed, and if feigned, should they not be? If he were confident of the reality of his alleged facts, would he not rather invite scrutiny than deprecate any attempts made in that direction?

After having delivered himself at great length of the burdens that oppress his "soul" concerning the dangers that beset his new fangled "science," he at last sets out in presenting his readers with some of the "facts" relating thereto, said facts constituting the "overstock of knowledge" under which he is laboring, and which, duly conveyed to the anxious world, consist in instructions how to form circles to inveigle any spirit that may happen to be lurking around to "manifest" him or her self, but to be careful not to confound such manifestations with those of Spiritualism.

As for the facts presented being an innovation on those of "religious spiritualism," I would say that if they are not "horses of the same breed and color," then I confess myself color-blind.

It has been said "that there is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous," and that "the mountain heaved and brought forth a mouse," which sayings occurred to me when, after having been "kept on the tip-toe of expectation" for half an hour or longer, with visions of the newly-discovered facts that would settle the question of immortality forever floating before my mental gaze, I found them simmered down to a few ordinary raps, table-tippings, and "sich-like" demonstrations which any mischievous boy or fun-loving "sitter" can produce in the circle, but which to his or her confiding confrères are unmistakable signs of spirit existence. He divulges his "facts" by giving the old regulation rules for forming a circle, sitting around a table "flat footed" (club footed ones therefore need not apply), room perfectly dark—the expected spooks must be therefore imps of darkness—and if there is a "strong" medium present the sitters may get a demonstration the first or second sitting. Methinks, however, that if said "strong" medium has any consideration at all, he will giv them all the demonstrations they want at the first sitting. To guard against all contingencies, however, caused by the absence of any "strong media," he advises the sitters to prolong their efforts of entering into communication with the spirit world to at least twelve sittings (à la protracted meeting style), and if the obstinate spirits do still refuse to enter en rapport with them, let the tired and disgusted ones (who would not be by this time?) vacate the premises to make room for new sitters, amongst whom, it is devoutly to be wished, a "strong" medium may perhaps be found of sufficient influence to convert the unregenerate to the new "science" of Spiritology.

As for accusing the unregenerate in not investigating the "newly discovered facts" of the science of Spiritism, the charge appears more applicable to believers in ghostology themselvs, for the very conditions they impose upon would-be investigators, sitting in the dark, etc., preclude all honest investigation.

Imagin half a dozen or more scientists sitting in a circle and prosecuting their researches in utter darkness? Can anything more absurd be conceived of?

They seek in every possible way to assist and intensify their vision, to enable them to penetrate the vail that enshrouds the mysteries of nature, but instead of thus assisting them Spiritists coolly demand that they dispense with what little vision they hav. Such a "science" deserves less recognition than the veriest amateur sleight-of-hand performer whose manipulations are carried on in broad daylight.

In the same issue appear replies from H. Philbrick and "Veritas" to mine of January 17th, to the effect that it can be mathematically demonstrated that if souls exist they would fill all space within a comparativly brief period, seeing that it is generally agreed by all advanced scientists that the infinit number of worlds pervading space will during their prime produce essentially the same organisms as ours, and that if the mind evolved on one is immortal it must be on all, as all owe their being to the same primary source. Mr. Philbrick says that "he sets out with giving us a mathematical demonstration, but fails entirely in his effort." If Mr. Philbrick will refer to my article again he will find that I did not offer to make such computation at that time, but merely argued that inasmuch as infinit space, being divided into limited parts by an infinit number of worlds producing life like ours, would become filled with souls within a computable period, immortality would, therefore, not be true, as it would preclude further soul-evolution when space had become filled with souls, which would be tantamount to asserting nature's finiteness. This computation has been made and will appear in the Moralist, the organ of the Brotherhood of Moralists. As to whether the facts and figures therein presented can be disputed, he may be able to determin after their examination.

The infinit extent of mind-evolution is not taken into consideration by believers in immortality. They hav even no adequate conception of the comparativly limited amount evolved from our own insignificant little planet. They forget that however differentiated the trend of structural formation may be on different planets, the mind-principle must be intrinsically alike in all, at least so far as its continuity is concerned. All sprang from the same common stock, the cosmic energy diffused through infinit space, first forming itself into worlds having the same elementary construction, as spectrum analysis has shown, and this, evolving necessarily the same plasmatic base for organic life, must produce essentially the same beings as we behold on this planet. This postulate admits of no contravention. Admitting, then, that the life-principle evolved on other worlds is as immortal as it is alleged to be on this, it is apparent that the soul-product from each one is radiated toward its neighboring planets, which radiation of souls, continuing during the life-evolving period of each planet, must result in the eventual meeting of these hosts of souls thrown off from these various worlds, resulting in the entire filling up of the interstellar spaces separating them. And such filling up is accomplished in but a fraction of a planet's lifetime, as the facts and figures will show, assuming the same rate of increase for other planets as we behold on this, although on larger ones it is, or will be, no doubt proportionately greater. This rate of mind-evolution is so prodigious that if I were to say, without being backed by indisputable figures, that the souls of the beings thrown off from this little planet alone during the last six thousand years would reach to a hight many million miles beyond the sun in every radial direction, it would be regarded as preposterous. But even though it took six trillions of years, or even ages, to fill the distances separating the various systems teeming in space, what would such epoch be to eternity? Why any need of resorting to figures at all to compute the time within which these interstellar spaces would become filled with souls, if life were immortal, seeing that such filling up would be the inevitable result of soul-evolution? What even if two or three entire world-generations or life-evolving epochs were required to fill the distances separating them with their soul-product? What are such generations to eternity? Hav not an infinit number of world-epochs preceded them? And must not the same proportionate amount of life hav been evolved during each one of these anterior epochs? And can it hav been less immortal than ours? Could nature hav shown any partiality in that direction? Are her attributes and potentialities not eternal? Could she during any of her former life-evolving periods hav fallen short in her highest possible mental developments? Then must not an infinit number of sentient beings hav preceded us? And must infinit space therefor not hav been filled with souls an infinit number of times already from the infinit number of prior worlds, if any immortal souls were ever evolved at all? But is such postulate not the hight of absurdity, seeing that space or any other receptacle can be filled but once, unless it is emptied of its contents? And must space, therefore, not be similarly kept vacant of souls that new minds may be eternally evolved?

It will be objected to these various propositions that soul-substance or spirit-essence is not of the same nature as matter, and can therefore not be compared to it, or, as Mr. Philbrick puts it, "there is no accumulation of matter in the universe." This brings us to another point. which will also show how fatal this admission is to the doctrin of immortality.

I contend that if "spirit essence" is not a substance of some kind, then it does not exist. However sublimated we may conceive it to be, it is either some-thing, i. e., substance, or nothing, in which latter case it exists only in the imagination. No medial line is possible or conceivable between the two propositions. If souls exist they must therefore be a something, or, as Hugh O. Pentecost calls it, "a something or other," implying some kind of substance, however subtil or ethereal it may be in its nature, but which, being substance, would, in its evolvement from "matter" or cosmic energy, involve an accumulation of substance or matter which Mr. Philbrick himself denies the possibility of.

If, then, it is admitted that souls, if they exist, are some kind of substance, it can also not be denied that this, their substance, must occupy a certain amount of space, which, in fact, is not denied by the advocates of Spiritism, this substance being in conformity as to size and general outline with those it attained while in its fleshly "tabernacle." The integrity of its configuration is supposed to remain inviolate after it has "shuffled off its mortal coil," as without such preservation recognizance would be impossible. Spiritists even go so far as to assert that spirits recognize each other by certain physical deformities, scars, loss of leg or arm (head also?), showing beyond all question that they are supposed to retain their original proportions in spirit-life. This established, the question next presents itself, where can spirits exist but in space? Is there any space outside the physical universe whereto they may migrate? Can "spirit land," or the Christian's heaven, be anywhere but between the distances that separate the world-systems? Is there a limit to the universe? If, then, it is further admitted that spirits, if they exist, are some kind of substance, and occupy a certain amount of space within the physical universe (in my computations I averaged them at four feet high, with one square foot standing-room, certainly a low enough estimate), it is apparent that interstellar space must gradually become occupied with the souls evolved from the various life-generating planets pervading it, and that it is but a question of time when it would be filled to repletion with them, precluding further additions and further soul-evolution.

But there is still another view in connection with this subject, showing how utterly at variance the doctrin of immortality is with every known law of nature and science. I refer to the great law of the conservation of energy, which teaches that there can be no increase of matter or energy in the universe. Spiritists claim in direct opposition to this law that with the birth of every conscious organism an eternally existing being is added to all pre existing beings, which, of course, increases the sum-total of all existences to that extent, as the physical elements constituting the "lower ego" remain the same in number and quantity, not having decreased by one single atom. They formed certain alliances constituting the individual and then dissolved their partnership, each "going on his way rejoicing" without the annihilation of a single member. But during said compact a new being is alleged to hav been thrown into existence, which is claimed to exist forever, and, as we hav seen that this being must be of "some kind or other" substance, an eternal increase or accumulation would be the result, a proposition diametrically opposed to the primary law of nature.

Again, if through certain affiliations of matter, spirit-substance was eliminated, would matter not suffer a corresponding loss or depletion resulting in its final extinction? Would matter not be transubstantiated into spirit-substance if such elimination were taking place? Mind-evolution, as we hav seen, must hav been going on through endless cycles of eternity, and yet matter has not lost a scintilla of its potency, and will unquestionably continue to evolve mind for all eternity to come. From whatever standpoint we view the doctrin of life-everlasting, it is utterly at variance with every accepted postulate of science.

Marengo, Ill. H. WETTSTEIN.

The Preachers Worsted.

The Portsmouth, O, Public Library is about to be opened on Sundays.

Of course, to this movement, this proposed change for the good of the masses, the preachers and orthodox fanatics strenuously object.

Now, since the library's founder—Colonel Wharton, deceased, a Liberal of broad ideas and pronounced views—started it upon its mission, it has been open to the public but three days in each week. Recently, however, a movement to open "daily" was set in motion. Ministers of the gospel and some of their respectiv flocks interpreted "daily" to mean the six days of labor, exclusiv of the Sabbath. On this interpretation attempts were made to raise the money necessary to meet the expenses which would be incurred by the "three additional days" opening. Calls for financial assistance through the papers passed unheeded. The public seemed "deaf, dumb, and blind" to the proposition. Determined to feel the public's pulse aright, I drafted a subscription paper in key to the proposed three-day scheme. I spent two whole days in visiting Portsmouth's most prominent and influential citizens, and in that time secured only four subscribers. The broad, fair-minded people wanted a "seven-day opening" or no change at all. Changing my subscription paper to meet their views, I in two days secured nearly $500. This aroused the Ministerial Association, whose members met, wrote a card and published it in public print. It appeared in the daily Blade and was as follows:

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Editor Blade: The Ministerial Association of Portsmouth respectfully ask what is designed by the proposition to open the Public Library "daily." Is it for six days or seven? Satisfied that there is doubt in the minds of some subscribers on this point, honesty and fair play demand that this question should be answered fully and clearly. While most heartily sympathizing with the effort to open the library on six days in the week, if Sunday opening is contemplated we most earnestly protest against it, believing it would be injurious to the best interests of the community. Christians are advised to hav a distinct understanding of this matter before aid is given to any attempt to break down or remove any of the barriers which preserve the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath.

Adopted at the Ministerial Association of Portsmouth, April 6th, and ordered published in the daily Blade.

WM. W. MIX, Secretary.

Of the above card Valjean, the brave and fearless editor of the Blade, said this editorially:

Our knowledge, so far as it goes, is that the subscription being taken up is with the undoubted, unquestioned understanding that a reading-room, similar to the Hamilton-Peebles Reading Room on Second street, which is kept open every day in the week including Sunday, is to be fixed up and furnished in the Public Library building, and kept open every day in the year, including Sundays, for the benefit and enlightenment of the people when they choose to avail themselvs of the glorious opportunity offered. And we believe in it. It is the right thing to do. Of all the days in the week, Sunday is the day when the poor working men and women can best spare the time to read, when they can best spare the time to go to the library. There is an unused room in the Public Library that is to be prepared as a reading-room and opened for this purpose.

We do not share the feelings of the Ministerial Association upon this question. If they taboo the Public Library on Sunday, why not the other? Both should be kept open. Looked at from a moral standpoint, it is the right thing to do, and we hope the public will see to it that sufficient money is subscribed for that purpose.

The next day I had published in the Blade the following:

JUST WHAT IT MEANS.

Editor Blade: An article headed, "What Does It Mean?" recently appeared in public print. It bore the signature of Rev. W. W. Mix, secretary of the Portsmouth Ministerial Association, and carried with it the conviction that the ministers had held a meeting and conversed together. Almost exclusivly it dwelt upon the Public Library subject, opposing the Sunday opening of the institution and the subscription list now being circulated for its benefit. Occasionally and between the lines the circulator of the subscription list was slapped with moderation and his honesty of purpose questioned. The inference was left that he was by some hocus-pocus deceiving or conjuring the people—sort of hypnotizing them and getting their signatures against their will or consent. Now, the signers comprise the best of Portsmouth's citizens—bankers, lawyers, and mechanics—persons, you know, who don't sign papers blindfolded; persons who are honest themselvs and who recognize the honesty of others. Of course, being the one in whose hands this "much-dreaded" (?) subscription list is, I know something about the present Public Library movement. At first I started out with a list calling for money with which to open "three additional days in the week." That was a flat failure, a whole lot of citizens refusing to sign and giv. And here let me say that almost the first person solicited to "take stock" on that paper was a preacher—one of the members, if you please, of the Ministerial Association alluded to above. He flatly refused, and I passed on. I next consulted with some of our city's most prominent and influential people and the plan to secure a "seven-days opening" was devised. It is the same for which I am now laboring, and for which I am glad and proud to labor. So far I hav met with but one refusal on the ground that a "Sunday opening" is to occur, and this refuser occupies one of the city pulpits. Up to date nigh unto $500 has been guaranteed. By Monday next it is thought it will hav run up to $600. In the mean time a subscription list securing "ten cents per month per person for one year" will be circulated among the employees of the factories and industries of the city, and in this way the Public Library be made one of the finest and best institutions of its kind in the state. These are the facts as I know them, and they are cheerfully and publicly given.

WILL S. ANDREE.

To this David S. Tappan, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, felt called upon to answer in the appended orthodox strain:

SUNDAY OPENING OF THE LIBRARY.

Editor Blade: The card from the Ministerial Association which appeared in Monday's Blade has served one good purpose at least. It has made clear the true animus and intent of those circulating the subscription for the "daily" opening of the Public Library. Never having seen the paper, I can say nothing as to its wording, and presume from what has been said, that it was sufficiently definit, but anyone who has had any experience in circulating petitions, knows very well that nothing is more common than for people to sign papers, the full import of which they do not grasp in the single hurried reading that they giv to them. Especially is this the case when it is generally known that a movement is on foot looking toward a certain end. In very many cases signers will unconsciously interpret a petition in accordance with previously formed opinions, not thinking it necessary to weigh the meaning of each word. That this was the case in the present instance there is abundant evidence. The attendance at the weekly meeting of the Ministerial Association on last Monday was unusually large, and yet there was only one member out of the entire number who felt sure that the movement on foot for the "daily" opening of the library meant "seven days" in the week. Perhaps he was the only one who had been permitted to read the subscription paper. Again, some of the most intelligent citizens in the community who read the paper and signed it hav assured the writer that they never for a moment thought that a Sunday opening was contemplated.

I do not believe that the workingmen of Portsmouth in any considerable number favor any such step They are intelligent enough to see that in proportion as the sacredness of the Christian Sabbath is destroyed, the danger of their being compelled to labor seven days instead of six is increased.

As a matter of wisdom and good business management, I think it a grave mistake that the library should be so conducted as to antagonize anv considerable element in the community. For its greatest efficiency, if not its continued existence, it needs the united support of all classes. The Ministerial Association in the paper which was unanimously adopted at their last meeting hav uttered no uncertain sound in regard to their attitude. They may be ignored and sneered at, their good will and hearty support may be counted as worth nothing in such a matter as the management of the Public Library, but there are Christian business men and citizens of wealth and influence who feel as deeply on this subject as they do, whose hearty coöperation it may be well to secure and retain.

As a private citizen of Portsmouth, deeply interested in everything that concerns its welfare and the highest good of its people, not claiming to speak as the advocate of the laboring man, but acting, I believe, in his interest, I want to express my decided and unalterable opposition to the opening of our City Library during any part of the Christian Sabbath. This is where I stand, and these are the sentiments I would express, even though I stood alone and hoped to influence no one else. DAVID S. TAPPAN.

I retorted with these kind and loving lines which, set to music, or as they are, would, and will, cheer the heart of almost any praying, bowing man:

Editor Blade: An extravagant yarn from the pen of Rev. Dr. Tappan appeared in your issue of yesterday. It was of the same tone and tenor as the card from the Ministerial Association which came with the Blade of Monday. In fact the card and the yarn so resemble each other, that it is not at all unlikely that the author of the one is the author of the other. At any rate both contain a sort of vindictiv fling at the writer—inferring that he has acted dishonestly in the matter of a certain subscription list in the interest of the Public Library and has deceived the people into signing the same. This insinuation I will try to pardon; and while it is not an indication of greatness of mind it is to be hoped the gratuitous aspersions of myself will do their authors a certain amount of good and afford them a degree of secret pleasure. Of course, being a nativ of Portsmouth, I am inclined to think that those who hav lived here for years know me best. They are aware of my honesty of purpose and straightforwardness in the present Public Library movement. They know me, and hav known me from a toddler up. They know what I hav been, what I am, and what I am striving to be. They know that I hav fought hard to overcome mistakes of the past, and that I am making an honest effort for the future. Birds of passage may chirp a contradictory song, but their notes will lose their tone and melody before the searching rays of reason and of truth.

Now, yesterday's yarn in one place reads: "In very many cases signers will unconsciously interpret a petition in accordance with previously formed opinions, not thinking it necessary to weigh the meaning of each word. That this was the case in the present instance there is abundant evidence."

I take it for granted that by "petition," subscription list" is meant, for between the two there is a difference, the latter carrying with its terms a financial or other consideration, and the former being simply the prayers of a people. As to the signers "not weighing the meaning of words," "that such was the case in the present instance," and "that there is abundant evidence to prove the same," was easy for David S. Tappan to write, but I think it would hav been very much better to furnish the evidence than to make such wholesale, unfounded sayings. It is easy to use sweeping assertions, but there is little argument in them.

In still another place this occurs: "Again, some of the most intelligent citizens in the community who read the paper and signed it, hav assured the writer that they never for a moment thought that a Sunday opening was contemplated."

Indeed! Intelligent citizens read the paper and signed it, and then didn't know what they had read and what they had signed. A more mixed mixture of theory and blunder could not be penned by mortal man.

And, by the way, would it not be right and proper for you to giv the names of these intelligent citizens? They may not be signers at all, and a comparison of your list with the original will, you know, tell the tale. As it now stands, you do not know who are in fact signers, for you admit you hav never seen the paper. By not giving the names you probably take the course easiest for you. And how easy, indeed, it is for you to be mistaken!

As to how the sons and daughters of toil, who work six days in dust and noise, stand regarding a Sunday opening, they know best themselvs. I rather think, however, they will take advantage of the chance to get one day in seven in which to visit our Public Library and become acquainted with the volumes upon its many shelvs. The body of the people are asking it, not because certain classes affirm or oppose, but as a matter of justice, equal and impartial to all. "Let justice be done, though the heavens should fall," is a motto they want to put into practice. As Shakspere has it:

> Poise the cause in Justice's equal scales,
> Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.

WILL S. ANDREE.

Valjean followed next with a sweeping editorial thus:

I wish some of you newspaper men would take the matter in hand and find out what right the Ministerial Association has to mix in and say whether or no the city of Portsmouth shall open its Public Library on Sundays. They are only sojourners here, most of them, and none of them are permanent citizens. They are all liable to go away at any time—to be called to a higher salary. One of them who has figured conspicuously over his own signature in the matter, is even now released by his church and is going away in a few days.

We acknowledge to having been a little startled when the above observation was addressed to us, for it was by one of our oldest and most orthodox Christians, one of the main pillars of a prominent church, and who for fifty years and more has been one of its most devoted communicants. We hav great respect for the Ministerial Association, individually and collectivly, but we think they are in a minority on the question of Sunday library opening. Our friend from the pews voices public sentiment. After all, the pews are what rule, in church as well as state. Come to think about it, the Ministerial Association is not a unit against Sunday opening.

In conclusion we will state that there are military martinets who hold that it is better to lose a battle while fighting by rule than to gain it by irregular methods, and that there are people so prejudiced in favor of certain schools of medicin that they would prefer dying under the regular treatment to recovery under any other. So we presume there are ministers who think it better that a man should go to perdition under orthodox treatment than become moral and upright citizens through other means. There are lots of people who would like to go to the Library on Sunday. They do not go to saloons, and cannot afford to go carriage-riding, hence Sunday is to them a dead and dreary season of loafing.

And here the fight for mastery ends, while the people continue to subscribe and lessen the demand for pilots of the skies. WILL S. ANDREE.

The Bible Not a Reform Work.

From the American Spectator.

The recent conference of the Methodist church in Yonkers, N. Y., voted against admitting women as delegates to the general Conference. This shameful exhibition of small men denying their mothers, sisters, and wives justice, and seeking justification for their own pitiful conduct in the language of Paul, calls forth the following pointed observation from the New York Herald:

I knew how it was going to be the moment I heard those grave and reverend doctors of divinity beginning to quote scripture against her. That's what they used to do in olden times when they wanted authority for burning Christians at the stake or indulging in other pious peccadilloes. Woman, they said, was good enough when money was to be raised or missionary work to be done, but when it came to appearing in the General Conference as a delegate, with a right to talk and vote, why then the scriptures came in solidly against it.

This attempt to keep women in the background by quoting the Bible reminds me of Theodore Parker, when, a Goliath among moral pigmies, he alone of all Boston's clergy denounced slavery, and for this offense against conservativ thought and popular religion drew upon his head the anathemas of every orthodox pulpit in the modern Athens, which quoted from Sunday to Sunday the Bible to prove that the curse and shame of the republic should be upheld, even as our good Methodist brethren now quote Paul to prevent women from exercising their right. "The Bible upholds slavery," came the cry from every side. "Well," Parker is said to hav exclaimed, "if the Bible upholds slavery, away with such a Bible!" Nothing is more pitiful than the spectacle of big men endeavoring to barricade the path of progress with the Bible. Yet this is no new performance, as Bruno and Galileo knew to their sorrow. The late Dr. Howard Crosby, in common with many other leading ministers, strenuously opposed total abstinence on the grounds that it was unscriptural. They claimed, and quoted many passages to show, that the Bible clearly taught that men should use wine in moderation. In truth, almost every real reform or great discovery has been met with this old cry, It is at variance with the holy scriptures. One would think that by this time sensible people would see that if the Bible opposes true progress or reform, the cause of humanity or of justice, the least said about such opposition the better for the Bible.

MEN sometimes take upon themselvs very humble titles, provided they can obtain from others very honorable ones. Many an abbé who calls himself brother, exacts from his monks the title of monseigneur. The pope styles himself "servant of the servants of God." An honest priest of Holstein once addressed a letter—"to Pius IV. servant of the servants of God." He afterward went to Rome, to urge his suit, and the Inquisition put him in prison to teach him how to address letters.—Voltaire.

The Post-office Department Will Not Exclude the Bible.

At last we hav a decision from the Post-office Department at Washington in regard to the mailability of a volume to which some three months ago we called the attention of the Postmaster-general, Holy John Wanamaker. But, bless you! the Editor of this paper couldn't get it, for the Postmaster-general was not obliged to "act in the case when applied to;" the case was not "treated" at all "when brought to his attention," and no discussion was held whether mailing the book would violate the law or not. In short, our application has been treated with silence; the receipt of the book was not acknowledged, no reply was vouchsafed to our letters, and, so far as we could learn, the post-office department knew and cared nothing of or for the application.

But as by indirection we can sometimes find direction out, so does it appear that the post office department will do for others what it would not do for us, and thus hav we at last obtained the opinion of the department upon the book. Down in Denison, Texas, Mr. B. C. Murray edits the Sunday Gazetteer. Mr. Murray is a Freethinker, and when he read in THE TRUTH SEEKER that we wanted a decision as to the mailability of the "Holy Bible," a work which to us, at least, appears in parts to be "indecent," and thereby to come under Holy John Wanamaker's definition of excludible books, he thought he saw a way to help us. He went out and bought a copy of the volume and sat down and wrote to his local postmaster as follows:

"DENISON, TEX., April 18, 1891.

"MR. CHARLES T. DOUGHERTY, Postmaster, Denison, Tex., Dear Sir: I hav a book which I would like to hav transmitted through the mails, but before mailing the same I wish to be sure that in doing so I would not be violating the act of Congress passed March 3, 1873, and amended July 12, 1876. The book referred to, as you will recognize from the title, is one of extensiv circulation. It, however, contains passages which, by the interpretation of the laws above alluded to by Postmaster-general Wanamaker, might, I fear, subject me to the penalty for knowingly mailing indecent literature. The law declares that 'any person who shall knowingly mail or cause to be mailed . . . articles before declared to be unmailable should be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or to imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year nor more than ten years.' The law as amended in 1876 reads as follows: 'Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, is hereby declared to be unmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any post-office, nor by any letter-carrier.'

"Mr. Wanamaker, in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, in explanation of his act in excluding from the mails a questionable book, says, 'it was soon found that it was not enough merely to provide for the exclusion of "obscene, lewd, and lascivious" publications, but that publications that were simply "indecent, had also better be excluded," which led to the passage of the amendment above quoted.' 'The statute was thus broadened,' the postmaster-general continues, 'by prohibiting the transmission of any matter offensiv to modesty, or tending to subvert respect for decency or morality.' He says, furthermore, it does not matter whether or not a given publication presented for mailing appears, by complaint or otherwise, to a postmaster to be obscene, lewd, or lascivious, if it does appear to be indecent. He is obliged, in order not to become a lawbreaker, to refer the questionable print to the proper official. And again, 'It does not matter, when the referee considers the question, whether the given publication is merely "obscene, lewd, or lascivious." If it is simply indecent, he must exclude it or break the law.' Mr. Wanamaker assures us, in this letter, that he never discusses the policy or wisdom of breaking the law, and the officials of the post-office department do not; that the department treats those cases only as they are brought to its attention, and 'one complaint is considered as carefully as another.'

"The title of the book to which I call your attention reads as follows: 'The Holy Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments; translated out of the original tongues; and with the former translations diligently compared and revised. New York: American Bible Society, instituted in the year MDCCCXVI, 1889,' a copy of which accompanies this letter. I respectfully call your attention to the following chapters and request your opinion, officially, as to whether the language therein contained would be considered obnoxious to the statutes above cited, in justification of excluding certain books from the mails. Many other passages might hav been referred to, which appear to me to be 'indecent' under the postmaster-general's interpretation of the law, but those given will probably be sufficient to cover the case: Genesis, chapters xvi, xviii, xix, xxi, xxix, xxxiii, xxxix; Exodus, chapters iv, xxii, xxxiii; Leviticus, chapters xv, xviii, xx, xxi; Numbers, chapter v; Deuteronomy, chapters xxi, xxii, xxiii; Joshua, chapter ii; Judges, chapters xvi, xix, xxi; Ruth, chapter iii; 1 Samuel, chapters i, ii; 2 Samuel, chapters vi, xvi; 1 Kings, chapter i; Job, chapter xl; Solomon's Song, chapters i, ii, v, vii, viii; Jeremiah, chapter iii; Ezekiel, chapters iv, xvi, xxiii; Hosea, chapters ii, iii, v.

"Respectfully submitted, B. C. MURRAY."

Of course Mr. Dougherty had to refer the matter to the law part of the postmaster department at Washington, and this is the reply he received:

"[COPY.]
"DICTATED.

"JAMES N. TYNER,
"Asst. Attorney-General.

"OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL, FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, April 24, 1891.

"C. T. DOUGHERTY, Postmaster, Denison, Tex.:

"Sir: In your letter of the 17th instant, you stated that Mr. B. C. Murray 'is anxious for a ruling from the Department on the questions he raises,' in a certain communication of his bearing date of the 18th instant, which was transmitted with your letter.

"The question that Mr. Murray raises is, as to the mailability of the volume entitled 'Holy Bible.' I find no other question involved in his communication, and I think I do not misunderstand the full scope of the question, for he says: 'I hav a book which I would like to hav transmitted through the mails; but before mailing the same, I wish to be sure that, in doing so, I would not be violating the Act of Congress passed March 3, 1873, and amended July 12, 1876.'

"If Mr. Murray should offer the Holy Bible for mailing, you can receive and deliver it at your office, or transmit it in the mails; for it is not believed in this department to come within the prohibitory clauses of the act referred to. The penalty portions of said statute are enforcible by the courts, and the question of his liability thereunder is a proper one to be submitted to the United States attorney.

"You may assure Mr. Murray that the mailability of the volume will not be questioned by the Post-office Department or by any postmaster.

"The volume sent with your communication is herein returned. Very respectfully, JAMES N. TYNER.
"Assistant Attorney-General."

It appears from this that Mr. Tyner can see no indecency in the passages referred to in Mr. Murray's letter—nothing offensiv to modesty nor tending to subvert respect for morality. We congratulate him. But at the same time we would like to hav him point out the passages in the "Kreutzer Sonata" which he found objectionable.

We shall now, in accordance with the suggestion of Mr. Tyner, apply to the attorney-general for his opinion as to the liability to prosecution of anyone who may mail a copy of the aforesaid book.

Some Reasons Why Churches Should Be Taxed.

Mr. Richard B. Sulter, of Cleveland, Ohio, asks:

"First, Why do you want church property taxed? Is not all public property exempt from taxation? If not, name some that is not.

"Second, Is there any religious sect in your city that owns property that has business blocks on that is exempt from taxation."

We desire to hav the churches pay their taxes for the same reason that they should pay the preacher, the organist, the choir, or the sexton. It is not just to make other people pay their bills. Churches are not public property in any sense of the word. They are private corporations. And, as Colonel Ingersoll once patly put it, "public money should not be used for what a few gentlemen think is for the benefit of the public. Personally, I think it would be for the benefit of the public to hav Infidel or scientific—which is the same thing—lectures delivered in every town, in every state, on every Sunday; but knowing that a great many men disagree with me on this point, I do not claim that such lectures ought to be paid for with public money. The Methodist church ought not to be sustained by taxation, nor the Catholic, nor any other church. To relieve their property from taxation is to appropriate money, to the extent of that tax, for the support of that church. Whenever a burden is lifted from one piece of property, it is distributed over the rest of the property of the state, and to release one kind of property is to increase the tax on all other kinds."

As our correspondent does not seem to be familiar with the subject, and also for the benefit of the Christian friends of our readers, we will briefly giv some of the reasons why the taxation of church property is one of the demands of Liberalism, and the opinions also of some eminent men upon the subject.

Colonel Ingersoll said to the American Secular Union, in Congress at Cleveland, 1885:

"We want to do what we can to compel every church to pay taxes on its property as other people pay on theirs. Do you know that if church property is allowed to go without taxation, it is only a question of time when they will own a large per cent of the property of the civilized world? It is the same as compound interest; only giv it time. If you allow it to increase without taxing it for its protection, its growth can only be measured by the time in which it has to grow. The church builds an edifice in some small town, gets several acres of land. In time a city rises around it. The labor of others has added to the value of this property, until it is worth millions. If this property is not taxed, the churches will hav so much in their hands that they will again become dangerous to the liberties of mankind. There never will be real liberty in this country until all property is put upon a perfect equality.

"If you want to build a Joss house, pay taxes. If you want to build churches, pay taxes. If you want to build a hall or temple in which Freethought and science are to be taught, pay taxes. Let there be no property untaxed. When you fail to tax any species of property, you increase the tax of other people owning the rest. To that extent, you unite church and state. You compel the Infidel to support the Catholic. I do not want to support the Catholic church. It is not worth supporting. It is an unadulterated evil. Neither do I want to reform the Catholic church. The only reformation of which that church or any orthodox church is capable is destruction. I want to spend no more money on superstition."

General Grant, in his message to Congress in 1875, said substantially the same:

"In connection with this important question, I would also call your attention to the importance of correcting an evil, that, if permitted to continue, will probably lead to great trouble in our land before the close of the nineteenth century. It is the acquisition of vast amounts of untaxed church property. In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States, which paid no tax, municipal or state, amounted to Eighty-Seven Millions of Dollars ($87 000,000). In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1870 it was $354,483,587. By 1900, without a check, it is safe to say, this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who hav to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to, without taxation, may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally."

James A. Garfield said in Congress, June 22, 1874:

"The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute. It ought to be so absolute that no church property anywhere in any state, or in the nation, should be exempt from equal taxation; for, if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a tax upon the whole community."

And James Parton cites facts to prove the truth of the foregoing:

"Already, in some of our cities, the property belonging to the Catholic church is immense. In St. Louis it is computed at twenty millions; and in New York, say within ten miles of the city hall, I should suppose their property would be valued, by just tax commissioners, at not less than eighty millions.

"Far be it from me to blame the Catholics for pushing the interests of their church, with so much enterprise, energy, and tact. Their conduct is just what their belief demands of them. They could not be good Catholics if they did not regard the spread of the Catholic church as the chief interest of man.

"But the question for us to consider—for us who are American citizens first, and EVERYTHING ELSE SECOND—is, whether it is safe and right that they should go on thus absorbing the property of the country.

"Look abroad! In Sicily, Italy, Spain, Mexico, Peru—in most Catholic countries—wherever you see an edifice, or group of edifices, that overwhelm the mind with wonder, either for their magnitude or their magnificence, you may be sure that they are ecclesiastical. The people—man, sacred man, to us the most sacred object in the universe, grovels in huts and wallows in the dirt, in order that the inanimate God whom he adores may dwell in lofty temples and glisten with beautiful gems. It is a sorry sight, 'fore God, a sorry sight!' May this portion of America never witness it!

"At the beginning of the French Revolution, which was the most beneficent explosion that history records, two acres out of every five in all France belonged to the church. And the church was so good a judge of land, that, in a large number of parishes, the church's two acres were worth more than the people's three. France was then in a condition similar to that of England before Henry VIII. broke up the ecclesiastical institutions and secularized their property—that is, stopped exempting it from taxation."

Thus far the financial side of the question, upon which we could elaborate and giv figures to the extent of pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER, for every city and town in the country furnishes a financial reason for taxing the churches. There are, besides, a great many moral reasons, and some of them we will quote. James Parton givs thus:

"How heavily rests the burden of life upon the shoulders, and upon the heart, too, of an average citizen and virtuous father of a family. For ten years he toils and saves, denying himself many alluring enjoyments, in order that he may make a first payment upon a modest home for those he loves. Then he works and saves for another five years to pay off the mortgage. When all is done, when he is at last the proud possessor of the nest that shelters his family, he goes like a man every November and pays a tax upon it, from one hundred to three hundred dollars.

"The little house in which I hav lived for the last fifteen years I shall hav to pay a tax upon in fifteen days of about two hundred and twenty dollars. It was about that last year, and in New York revolutions never go backward.

"But right before my eyes, as I used to come down the steps, rises a lofty and luxurious edifice, the property of a few rich men, which they only care to use four hours a week. It is worth, I suppose, half a million dollars; and if it were fairly taxed it would place in the city treasury in the course of next month not less than ten thousand dollars. But it will not pay in one dollar, because it has two steeples upon it, and is named in honor of the patron saint of England, who slew the dragon.

"But mark, if a mob should burn it, the taxpayers of New York would be expected to pay every dollar of the damage."

Mr. Samuel B. Duryea, in a speech before the Committee on Ways and Means of the New York Assembly, said:

"Inasmuch as we hav no state belief nor national church, why should we hav an exemption relating to religious bodies, which is none other than a tax upon the whole community for the support of a doctrin or doctrins from which they may derive no benefit, and in some cases believe to be detrimental to the general welfare? It is by many believed that a republican state should not mix up its civil functions with the belief of any creed, and that all exemption of property on the ground that it is a religious corporation is a trespass upon the freedom, liberty, and equality of the thought of the people. A charitable institution, which is open to all without restriction, has a claim upon the state. Educational institutions should be founded on the principle of impartial justice. Any institution that is exclusiv has no right to claim exemption, and if it is unable to exist without state support, it should be swept away.

"This exemption from the burdens of the maintenance of the state by the exemption of many millions results in the increased burden to be borne by the breadwinners. The agricultural interests of the state and laboring classes hav to meet a larger share of burden, and the home is taxed unduly or the maintenance of institutions of a private character that do not touch the whole body politic. It is upon the homes and the public schools that American institutions are founded, and the safety of the state is in the entire and absolute separation from the church. The growth of charitable institutions is not indicativ of a healthy condition."

To the same committee Mr. T. B. Wakeman said:

"First, then, the great mass of the people who hav no connection with the churches complain that the exemption of churches and of their institutions from taxation is a gross injustice to them. It is a fact too often forgotten that the mass of our people are no longer church-members or attendants. In the city of New York, with a population of over 1,500,000, the church sittings all told do not exceed 400,000. The church people are not a third of the population. Yet this minority exempts its own property, and practically runs the city as if the majority had and ought to hav no voice whatever. In the state the majority are ignored by the church minority in practically the same way, as the census will show.

"Now, it is a mistake and an injustice to suppose that the large majority of our people who are not church-attendants hav no rights or feelings in this matter which legislators are bound to respect. They hav been ignored hitherto simply from want of organization and coöperation, while the churches are solid organizations which hitherto hav tacitly coöperated for their common exemption, although otherwise unable to agree as to their own doctrins, or indeed as to anything else.

"One consideration more is not to be lost sight of. It is founding within our secular republic an imperium in imperio; a power greater than the republic and independent of it. Finally, here, as lately in Italy and Mexico, and now in Utah, the question will hav to be tried out which is the real government of the people, the republic or the church. By exempting the churches we cut them loose from any part and lot in responsibility for our public welfare, and make them a foreign element, and whenever their interest may be adverse to our schools, our laws, our public interests, we shall find too late that we hav spent our millions to rear up in our midst a deadly foe to our republic and its institutions."

And Gilbert R. Hawes said:

"1. Justice to the state requires that every religious corporation or society owning real estate should bear its proportionate share or quota of taxation. Otherwise this burden must be distributed among and assumed by the general taxpayers. The only logical or legal reason or excuse for granting this exemption would be some benefit extended by the church to the state in return, as a consideration therefor. But in this country we hav no such hybrid combination as 'church and state.' Each is useful in its own sphere, while yet independent each of the other. No particular religion is recognized, because all are recognized. Consequently, there can be no such institution as 'the church.' We hav very many church organizations, none of which can in any way influence or affect the solidarity of the state or the autonomy of the state government. In other words, under the wise provisions of the Constitution, as framed and adopted by the patriotic statesmen of the Revolutionary period, the state in no way derives any rights, benefits, or powers from the church, and therefore the state is under no obligation to grant special privileges where there can be no equivalent quid pro quo.

"To properly sustain the government, taxation must be evenly distributed. No exemption should be allowed unless it be in a matter of public necessity. The very indirect and indefinit benefit to the state, as claimed, in the improvement of the morals of the community, thereby lessening poverty and crime, is not a sufficient reason for granting exemption from taxation for all the property acquired by the various churches, whether used by them for religious purposes or not. For very many years the churches hav enjoyed this immunity. Having received so valuable a franchise from the state, it is only just and right that hereafter they shall be asked to contribute to the support of that government which protects them in their rights."

Before the Taxpayers' Association of Baltimore, recently, the Rev. Franklin Wilson told why he thought churches should be taxed:

"The Mohammedan, the Buddhist, the Mormon, the Spiritualist, the Agnostic, may demand exemption as well as the Christian or the Hebrew. The Universalist, the Roman Catholic, the Puritan, and the Protestant, all share alike. These certainly vary greatly in their influence. Again, their moral power is not by any means in proportion to the value of their location, and the cost of their buildings. The plain, cheap frame mission chapel may do much more for the rescue of the dangerous classes than the elegant cathedral or imposing temple. The spiritual good accomplished may even be in inverse ratio to the splendor and costliness of the house. And yet the rich, refined, moral church-goers of the one receive from the state a far larger exemption bonus than the hard-working, useful, devoted members of the other."

To sum up, we take the points advanced by the president of the American Secular Union in his pamphlet upon the subject:

The exemption of churches from regular taxation is in violation of every principle of equality and justice, and is an evident disregard of the most obvious obligations of public morality.

The church does not render an equivalent for this exemption. Two-thirds of the people do not regularly attend any church; and they should not be taxed to pay for the other third. Moreover, those who attend the churches are, for the most part, of that educated and refined class who do not need any special moral restraint to secure the observance of law.

It creates a prejudice against the church, and drives the masses into an attitude of antagonism, because of the huge injustice of the church's increasing their personal taxes and receiving favors to which it has not the shadow of a claim.

It detracts from the glory and independence of true religion to be a pauper and a leech upon the state; and all honorable persons should be ashamed to imply that the church needs this favor from the state, even if an incidental service be rendered.

The people are in duty bound to carefully consider whether any given appropriation of the public money is wisely made; but, as exemption from taxation is the same as appropriation, they hav no opportunity to judge and act in this matter.

A system of mendicancy is encouraged by the exemption of convents and similar institutions, where the vow of poverty is taken, and convent expenses are paid by the proceeds of beggary.

The same reasons can be given for the exemption of many other kinds of property from taxation, that are given for the exemption of church property; and if these additional exemptions were allowed, the state would become bankrupt, and sequestration and revolution would be the result.

Why should the church assume the character of a beggar, asking remission of taxes, instead of paying its full share of the cost of protection and defense, and thus rendering unto Cæsar that which rightfully belongs to Cæsar?

We do not attack the rights of the church when we insist upon the just taxation of its property; but we champion the rights of the people, in claiming that all property, except that belonging to the state, shall be equally liable to taxation.

We hav presented but a few of the most salient points on this subject, in answer to Mr. Sulter's first question. We could fill the whole of this paper, as we said, with facts, figures, and arguments, but these are deemed sufficient for the present. In reply to the second question we would sav that in one ward of this city the church holds $600,000 worth of property exempt from taxation, from which it derives a large income in rents. Similar buildings and similar exemptions are the rule in large cities all over the country. We refer to the Young Men's Christian Association property.

Greek Catholic Church Teaching.

One of the questions and answers in an official Russian school-book is this:

"Question. What do we owe the czar? Answer. Divine reverence, obedience, payment of taxes, military service, love, prayer, long-suffering, perfect and unlimited obedience in every respect, and the most careful execution without question or examination of all he commands."

That is very like the questions and answers in the catechisms and confessions of faith of the Christian churches—Roman Catholic and Protestant—except that the word "God" takes the place of czar. But the Russians hav one advantage over the churches—they know something about the czar, while the church folks know nothing about "God," not even that he exists.

Another question in the same book is this:

"Question. By whose examples are these teachings enforced? Answer. By the example of Jesus Christ, who lived and died as subject of the Roman emperor, and submitted respectfully to the ukase that condemned him to death. We hav also the examples of the apostles, who loved the magistrates, bore patiently imprisonment according to the emperor's will, and did not rebel like evil-doers and traitors. We must follow their example and endure all in silence."

That is good orthodox Christian teaching, and is just what keeps the Russians ignorant and enslaved. It is also the sort of teaching which must come from all consistent Christians, and it is, too, that sort of Christianity which, more than anything else, has kept the world back.

What this world needs is a great deal less religion.

THE editor of the American Spectator says:

"I believe in according every Roman Catholic justice but for the public treasury of a state to be rifled in the interest of a church whose membership represents a minority of the people, merely because the church in question is arrogant in its demands, affords a striking illustration of a grave danger which confronts us."

Would the danger be any the less or the injustice at all lessened if the rifling church represented a majority of the people?

Letters from Friends.

MORGAN CITY, UTAH, April 18, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: On the evening of April 12th last, Prof. W. S. Bell, the well-known Freethought expounder and able defender, favored us with one of his grand lectures in the court-house hall of this city. The audience was large, consisting of many of the leading citizens of both sexes in the county. Good order and strict attention was given to the lecture, which lasted for nearly two hours. The professor's subject was "Popular Objections to Freethought Stated and Answered." It was well and masterly handled, and doubtless created favorable impressions upon the audience. There hav been and are now many discussions about the lecture among those who attended. Mr. Bell was on his way from California to New York. Fraternally, L. P. EDHOLM.

BARTLETT, N. DAK., April 21, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: It seems superfluous to say I am pleased with your paper; indeed, I would regard it a great misfortune to be compelled to do without it. Heston's artistic designs are far from being the least of the attractions. The "Freethinkers' Text-Book" sent me is in great demand among the Liberals; and our Protestant friends heartily indorse the thrusts at Romanism, but of course the caricatures of their own pet absurdities are terribly wicked. However, a large proportion of our orthodox brethren are more or less imbued with skepticism—do not believe all their creed—and the wild geese and brant which abound in great number at this season of the year are wise in keeping a week-day eye on the Sunday movements of the most devout even, especially if they are possessed of a loaded fusee.

Wishing you merited success, I am, E. SMITH.

BARRE, MASS., April 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I am delighted with the way you follow up the postmaster-general on the Bible question. Though it is not probable you will effect anything directly on him, yet you will show to your readers and the world the inconsistency and bigotry of the man in thus passing over a complaint against God's holy book, and in other cases persecuting where the language is not any more obscene or as obscene. Not that I am in favor of obscene matter passing through the mails, but why this discrimination in favor of this book? If it is God's book, as its lovers proclaim, then it should be all the more pure and free from taint. Follow it up, please, to the end. L. L. Goodwin's letter to his honor in THE TRUTH SEEKER, April 18th, is timely and well put. I long to see that book tabooed, as you well know, for I consider it a nest of corruption, a breeder of vermin, and a parasite on the body politic that should be abated, and if the Liberals can put it where it belongs, they will effect a signal victory.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

BURLINGTON, KAN., April 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Not having seen anything in your valuable paper from this part of Kansas for a long time I thought it might be of interest to you to know that the truth seekers of our community are alive to the pressing wants of the times, not only shown by their appreciation of your paper but also from the fact that they hav just closed a very interesting course of lectures on subjects suggested by their lack of belief in the prevailing religion of the time. W. F. Jamieson has been with us for a week, and has given us some talks in his usual excellent style, that hav set many to thinking on subjects that in many cases are not considered subjects to be investigated in any other way than with a mind made up to arrive at a conclusion that is indorsed by some branch of orthodoxy. Several of our clergymen expressed to me a wish and intention to attend some of the lectures. They were, however, only conspicuous by their absence. Mr. Jamieson is to return and giv us another course of lectures about May 1st, at which time we are in hopes that our friends the preachers will be able to giv themselvs the pleasure of hearing him.

The "Truth Seeker Pictorial Text-Book" I got of you some time ago is doing a good work. It being all of the time in use, it will soon be worn out in the service. I hav the pleasure to be one of your subscribers.

GUY I. WATT.

HOUSTON, TEX., April 22, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: As C. E. Ames, of Salem, Mass., wants to know the means and cost of getting the percent caused by Christianity of our criminal and insane population, I would say that it would be very difficult to get the history of insane cases, but quite easy to get the history and causes of the criminals. If the Liberals of the country will raise $1,000 to defray the actual expenses of taking the census of the criminals (the confined ones, I mean) of the United States, I will giv my labor and time to the undertaking free, and will personally visit each penitentiary in the United States, and ask each and every convict his religious views, his politics, whether he uses rum, opium, and tobacco; his habits, his occupation, his nationality, his age, his education, and the religion and politics and habits of his parents. Such statistics would be invaluable to our cause, as well as an important contribution to science in general. The statistics thus gathered could be published in pamphlet form and used as campaign literature. As I am an Atheist, physician, and phrenologist, and hav made a life study of mental and nervous diseases, crime, and the laws of heredity, I am specially fitted for such work. You are quite correct in saying the government does not want such a census taken, for such a census would be a stunner against Christianity. Last October I tried to get such statistics through a correspondence with the wardens of some of the penitentiaries, but they declined on the flimsy grounds that they could not secure such statistics, but the truth is that they did not want to, knowing too well the havoc such statistics would play with Christianity. The only way to collect such statistics is to employ some reliable, competent Atheist to collect them personally. Let us hear from others on the subject.

DR. C. W. MCCORMIK.

NATIONAL HOME, WIS., March 17, 291.

MR. EDITOR: I saw in my TRUTH SEEKER where at Portsmouth, O., not long since, one Rev. O. C. Branch broke a Bible agent's jaw for making improper proposals to his daughter. Hence these verses.

Bible agent (dejectedly):

"God knows it is a chilly day
When lambs of God can't even play
In lambish sport together,
Nor even frisk beneath the trees
Or jerk their tails just when they please
In April's sunny weather."

Preacher (arrogantly):

"A time for all things, I admit,
Regardless sun or April weather,
But in our parlor you can't sit
And play sheep pranks, don't you forgit,
With our ewe lambkin, never!"

Bible agent (defiantly):

"I'll hie me to some gentler fold,
I'll sell God's holy word for gold,
I'll tramp through blustering weather,
I'll find a ewe there that can charm
With cash galore, affections warm,
Thou blasted old bell-wether."

Here'pon, O Lord, with vengeful paw
The preacher broke the agent's jaw,
Which proved him no bell-wether.
Alas, 'tis sad such sights to see!
God's woolly pets go on a spree,
And fight like dogs together.

Yours truly, NELSON HUNT.

MR. EDITOR: For the first time in several months I went to Sunday-school last Sunday. That fact may not be particularly interesting to you or your readers, but it was my good fortune to find a gem of Christian teaching, and I write for the purpose of displaying that.

The Sunday-school lesson was from 2 Kings. x, 18–31, which contains an account of Jehu's little practical joke, approved of by the Lord, by which he induced the worshipers of Baal to assemble in their temple at Samaria and then murdered them. In summing up the teachings of the lesson the "Westminster Question Book" says: "A good work may be done in a wrong way and by sinful means." That is certainly a very important confession. If Christians will only stand by that "Question Book" they need not repudiate the persecutions of the church as being unchristian. It is a frank admission that the uprooting of heresy by burning the heretics has the sanction of scripture; that the extermination of Atheism by beheading Atheists is eminently Christian; that the demolition of Freethought by the imprisonment of Freethinkers has more than a parallel in the case of the Baalites.

However, that same "Question Book" contradicts itself and goes back on Jehovah in a way to make him "snorting mad," in the very next assertion, which is as follows: "We are not to seek to support God's cause by tricks and deceit." This, of course, was meant as a hit at old Jehu; but if that old sinner were here, he would certainly hav the laugh on his critics, as verse 30 of the chapter referred to says, "And the Lord said unto Jehu, . . . thou hast done unto the house of Ahab according to all that was in mine heart."

The Sunday-school in which such mischievous ideas are promulgated is composed almost entirely of children. Socrates was condemned for corrupting the youth of Athens by teaching the existence of one God. What ought to be done with a horde of mercenaries who, year after year, corrupt the youth of America by teaching the existence and supreme authority of such a devil as the last scripture quotation shows Jehovah to be? FREDERICK, KAN., April 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I send you an obituary notice of Wm. Murray, from the Frederick, Kan., News. A FRIEND.

Died March 26, 1891, William Murray. The subject of this notice was born in Kentucky Sept. 27, 1823, and moved to Indiana in 1835. In 1847 he enlisted in the Fifth Indiana Infantry, serving ten months in the war between the United States and Mexico; was married to a Miss White in 1851, and then moved to Polk county, Ia., in 1852. Early in 1861 he went with a company of cavalry to fight Indians in the western part of the state of Iowa, and was away two months, returning in June. In the fall of the year 1861 his loyalty to his country and his sense of justice induced him to forsake home, kindred, and friends, and enter the ranks of the Union army. He enlisted in the Tenth Iowa Infantry and was a brave and faithful soldier, and was discharged after serving three years and nineteen days.

He came to Kansas, settling near what is now the town of Frederick in Rice county, in the month of August, 1879. With but little capital save his own industry, energy, and integrity, never ashamed or afraid of honest toil, he worked hard, practiced economy, and by his keen foresight and sterling integrity accumulated a modest competence. His life was an open book; the worst that can be said of him is, he dared to think for himself and utter his honest convictions. He believed that happiness was the only good, reason the only light, justice the only worship, and humanity the only religion. He read, studied, and thought for himself. He rejoiced in the glorious freedom and noble truths of Liberalism, but scorned the empty professions of faith, the bigotry, the intolerance, and fanaticism of the church. He had only scorn for the false claims of divinity, but most willing help for the needs of suffering humanity. He was an Infidel and had the courage to avow his convictions. He feared not the truth, but accepted without hesitation whatever he proved was true, and rejected only what he proved to be false. He had passed on the highway of life the line that marks its meridian, and being weary, lay down by the wayside, and fell into that dreamless sleep that knows no awakening.

In the beautiful language of Eliza Cook, we say:

"'Tis a long, 'tis a last, 'tis a beautiful rest,
When all sorrow is passed from the brow and the breast;
And the lone spirit truly and wisely may crave
The sleep that is dreamless, the sleep of the grave."

MR. EDITOR: I hav read THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time, with such pleasure, and, I think, profit, that I would rather seek the truth in such company than obtain immediate possession from certain inspired monopolists. I think your "Letters from Friends" a good institution, and very interesting, and would be glad to be counted one of the friends. I like the general course of THE TRUTH SEEKER very much. Its attacks are made with a certain moderation and good temper that secures attention, where greater impatience and indignation (though seemingly called for) might result in a useless hostility all around.

Concerning the badge question, I agree with some correspondents whose views I hav seen stated, to the effect that it hardly deserves the attention it has received. We would more certainly compel the respect of the enemy by leaving all controversies concerning symbols to the members of some other church.

A letter from Mr. Conners, of Martinsburg, W. Va., in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 18th, has a good many solid and wholesome truths in it. We must not expect wrong and injustice ever to end. We are mistaken if we think there are or ever will be any people who will not trespass on the rights of others, and do it in the name of justice too. We seek the truth, and find it, only as we need it. The most precious truths are yet to be discovered; and the last, never.

It is not so much through hostil attacks on the false position of others that Freethinkers should expect their doctrins to prevail, as through the persistent influence of good literature and high conduct, their philosophy appearing in daily life; thus placing others at a disadvantage and making truth prevail because of its might. MARK RANDLES.

MR. EDITOR: To-day is Sunday, and I am feeling lonely. It is raining to-day. The reason for my loneliness is that one week ago to-day my old father was buried. He died Saturday morning, April 11th, at 6 o'clock. He was an unbeliever, and had been for fifty years or more. He was buried in the style of an unbeliever. He had no sky-piloting done for him at his burial. He said time and again while on his deathbed that he did not want any preacher to officiate at his burial or funeral, and I, feeling that his last wishes were the ones that should be respected, had the obsequies held accordingly. The funeral address was made by J. Taylor, who dwelt on the past history of my father, referring all to the business men of the county where he had done business for the last twenty years, and also referring them to the fact that it had been thrown up to him time and again that when he saw his last hour was near at hand he would change, but in answer to such taunts he calmly replied that when he died they would see an old man die that was not afraid to die, and so it proved to be. He took down sick on Friday morning, the 3d of April, and I heard him saying to one of the neighbors who was sitting by his bedside that evening that he was not afraid of the future; that it was dark (and out of this some of the Christians tried to twist out a lie, as I knew they were bound to do), a mystery, and he knew nothing about it. And time and again did he reiterate it that he believed as he always did while he was on his deathbed. His desire before his death was that the pallbearers should all be unbelievers, and they were chosen according to his wishes, consisting of David Hedrick, Jerry Bowling, J. Taylor, Thomas Hays, Gustavus Wolfart, and Thure Wolfart—all good men and men of sense and learning. He was in the seventy-ninth year of his age, and died of heart failure from the effects of la grippe. He was a subscriber for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and had been for twelve years. I am an unbeliever, the same as my father. Some of his children hav thrown away the comforts of an eternal hell. I, like himself, think that one world at a time is enough for me, and that I know that there is a life to liv here before the grave and will try and make the best of it, and if there is a life to liv beyond the grave I will try to do the same there, and not be like a great many who are trying to manage a business in two worlds at the same time and cannot make a success of one. GEORGE NORRIS.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 12, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in the "Letters from Friends" there is much said in regard to the truth or untruth of Spiritualism. Evidences both for and against it may be necessary to discuss, yet it appears to me there are much more vitally important themes which should not only be agitated, but forcibly acted upon. I admit that I am a believer in a post-mortem existence, as I hav been both clairvoyant and clairaudient from earliest childhood, and therefore seen and heard the denizens of the other world; yet I am not a Spiritualist in any narrow, theological sense of the term. I proudly proclaim myself a Liberalist and Freethinker. What does the average Spiritualist care for reform if he or she can attend the meetings and séances, hear from the "loved ones gone before," and of the beautiful home awaiting them "over there?" Hav they any interest in pulling down the costly churches erected often in sight of huts and hovels? A window of one in this city, I am told, cost $2,000. They all oppose reform, and teach us submission to our fates even if they condemn us to vainly aspire forever; to starve both mentally and physically; to be persecuted, misrepresented, slandered, and a victim of every form of injustice. Until they are pulled down there will be no world-wide reform. Said a Christian to me not long since, "There is no need of Nationalism or any of those so-called reforms; if people will only come to Jesus, and join the church, everything will be all right." Such primitiv barbarism as this has ruled the world long enough. Let us all work earnestly, and fight if necessary, at least with tongue and pen, to banish such dogmas and creeds from the earth. I notice that even some who call themselvs Liberals are loath, and appear afraid, in the presence of Christians, to acknowledge their Infidelity to the abominable, filthy, and horribly unjust teachings of their Bible, to the title of which is prefixed the word holy. Would that all were as honest, fearless, and brave as W. E. Abraham, who entered the Olivet Evangelical church one evening to listen to whatever nonsense Major Hilton, who was holding a revival meeting and receiving $30 per night for his services, would say, and stood erect and alone when the request was made "that all who would not be Christians if they could would arise to their feet." This man deserves the notice of all true Liberals and Freethinkers. He has a grand and noble soul, and his wife, who is intelligent, beautiful, and good, is an activ Liberal.

I find there are many Freethinkers in Los Angeles, if they would only bravely announce the fact instead of catering to the churches because they are popular, and sending their children to the Sabbath-school for the same reason.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of to-day's date I notice Alhaza's article, which caused me to throw down the paper after reading half a dozen lines in which he speaks of the millennium in which a few idle persons hav lived well and the honest industrious hav starved. I am tired and out of patience with this hue and cry of starving honest industry. That the lazy and shrewd get more than their share and employers grind the poor laborer, there is no doubt, but that one in a thousand or ten thousand industrious persons needs to suffer for the comforts of life I do not believe. I hav traveled from Portland, Me., to San Francisco, from Seattle, Wash., to Florida, and most of the distance more than twenty times over, and hav never found a locality outside of the cities that a man or woman could not get clothing and food for comfort if they were industrious. And in most instances it is difficult to get help. In all places where I hav been an honest laborer can soon hav land, a few acres of which everyone should hav. One trouble is that many who depend on a livelihood by the work of their hands spend in a few years more than a sufficient amount to pay for the land for alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea, and coffee, and in many other useless ways. Alcoholic beverages in the United States cost annually $1,460,000,000—to say nothing about the time lost in consequence, the crime caused, the paupers made, the expense of trying criminals and caring for them and feeding paupers, which amounts to a larger sum than the cost of the liquors. Tobacco costs $640,000,000; tea and coffee, $125,000,000. This would pay for five acres of land for seventeen million persons at $25 an acre. Five acres would be considered a small farm, yet I will venture that more than one-half of the farmers who hav a larger amount would be better off to-day if they had no more and had put their labor on five acres. There are many men who pay enough every year for cigars to pay for several farms, and very many more who squander as much or more for drinks. I hav never used any of the above-named useless articles and hav saved the money which they cost, with which I am willing to help industrious and honest laboring men to land, and let them work for me one day in a week until it is paid for and pay no interest during the time, and I will use these days' work to buy more land with for others. The land shall cost them less than they can buy the same for in cash in the same locality. I will start a dozen or more at once in the finest locality I hav found by traveling through thirty-six of the states and territories of the United States. None need to apply who use the objectionable articles mentioned, and I would prefer those who do not eat animal flesh or fish or fowl, as I use none of them. The difference in the cost of living for a vegetarian and one who uses flesh food will in a few years save enough to pay for a good home, and often much in doctor's bills.

MR. EDITOR: I send a Liberal funeral address delivered by Newton Mitchell.

A FRIEND.

Friends: We are here to perform the last sad rites for this beloved child, to tender our sympathy and mingle our tears with these bereaved friends and speak a word of cheer. Little Alice's life was like a tender plant, which perished at the first rude blast of Time's relentless breath. She seemed, indeed, a sweet and lovely flower that blossomed into life to shed its perfume on the heart, and fade away, a sweet, sad memory through all the years to come.

Life is the greatest of all phenomena and death the profoundest of all mysteries. Life to us is but a sentient, conscious existence, beginning in wonder and ending in mystery. Death is the saddest of all the experiences of the human soul.

Man's conception of the Infinit is but the reflection of his own moral and intellectual being, and the intelligence with which he interprets the phenomena that surround him. The rude savage finds himself surrounded by phenomena which he can neither explain nor comprehend, and subjected to forces over which he has no control—which he does not possess the intelligence to bend to his will for his own welfare. His idea of moral goodness is that might makes right, and that allegiance is due alone to him possessing power to enforce obedience and to punish with relentless hand every disobedience. Selfishness and cruelty are the characteristics of his nature, and his deities are beings to be feared, not loved. They are the incarnation of cruelty and revenge, who will visit condign punishment upon their enemies, and are to be appeased only by the most abject servility; who rejoice in the miseries of the tortured, and hurl fiery indignation at every offender. Pestilence and storm, disease and death, he regards as the wrathful visitations of his God, and feels himself the subject of a tyrant who, like himself, knows not the attributes of mercy and love.

Man in his higher state beholds the wonders with which he is surrounded with wonder but not with awe. He sees in all phenomena not relentless fate or merciless power, but the manifestation of forces which, through intelligent thought and right action, may become his servants, doing his bidding and adding to the sum of his own happiness and well-being. He sees that what were once thought to be evils were but blessings in disguise; that life is a grand reality pregnant with glorious possibilities; that God is not an all-powerful, relentless personality, who delights in the sufferings of those whom he has called into existence, but is a part of the great whole, a glorious, ever-abiding, intelligent force, working out the great problem of the ultimate happiness of all; and that man's life is but a part of that intelligence, as imperishable as the dust of the body it animates. And thus in death he sees, perhaps, but the beginning of a new and better existence.

Little Alice has solved the problem of that existence; and whether it be a "dreamless sleep from which there is no awakening," or a newer and better life beyond where all is peace and joy and love, we know that she is at rest; that while she has lost the loving acts and gentle endearments of loved and loving ones here, she too has missed many bitter cares.

Here ends all that loving hands can do; but loving hearts will ever hold enshrined the little form we bury here to-day.

To you, the parents of this little child, I can only say, "Misfortune comes to the heart as the tempest comes to the plain—it tears up the rough and rugged soil and prepares it for the seeds of the nobler virtues." You will be a truer man, a better woman, for having known and loved this little child. This mutual affliction will draw you nearer together, and the little mound we rear here to-day will be to you a sacred, hallowed spot through all the years to come.

DENVER, COL., April 22, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find ten demands that I hav got up with great care. As you are THE TRUTH SEEKER, I want to see if you can find truth in them. For that is the reason I wrote them—because they are the truth in a condensed form. I find Infidels no more Liberal than the most superstitious. They can afford to thrash ghosts, priests, and tear up their superstitions, but the Infidel must keep strictly to that business. He must not get out of the traces and become a labor crank. If he does, he will look upon an Infidel the same as he does a Christian. It is hard to tell which are the most superstitious, or even the most dangerous if they had their own way. Most Infidels support doctors of law. They hav not learned that no one or community ever had any right to pass a law to govern anybody. It all comes from the belief in a God and priestcraft. There is no law in nature, not even the semblance of one. If you still believe in a government passing laws to govern people, you are still under the influence of priestcraft and religious superstition.

EXPOSITION OF LAND AND LAW.

The following ten demands should be made on every government of the world.

1. That every man or woman should hav a fair share of land, without paying one cent for it, for it is justice we want, as charity is a crime.

2. A man's or woman's share should be just as much as they can attend to without hiring a wage-slave to assist them, for a wage-worker is only removed one step from slavery.

3. If anyone can attend to twice as much as another, they would be justly entitled to hav it, even if they wanted to make slaves of themselvs, for nobody would make slaves of themselvs if they had their natural rights.

4. No one can justly own land as private property, neither can they justly keep it out of use if any other one wants it, for land is nature's gift to the people and should be free to all, for nature is our only teacher that we know of.

5. No government, community, or even an individual has any right to buy, sell, or even giv a paper title to landowners, for occupancy and use is the only just and natural title to land. Neither should it make any difference when or where anyone is born.

6. And if anybody leaves his homestead for the purpose of renting it he becomes a legalized robber, for rent, interest, and profits are robbery.

7. All homesteaders can justly do when they leave the property for good is to sell the improvements thereon, for land should be free not only to the living but to future generations, as there is land enough for all, and what is left should be the common property, and kept sacred to the first one that wants their share.

8. No community or government has any natural right to enact a statute law in any form whatever to regulate the actions of anybody, for there are no statutes or laws in nature; neither can there be liberty as long as there are statute laws enforced.

9. I find that man made laws on the statute-books. They hav no action in themselvs. They are dead letters. They are compelled to hav officers and soldiers with loaded guns, and sheriffs and policemen with clubs, to enforce the laws, compelling jurors to decide according to law, ignoring justice and common sense.

10. I find that nature is just the reverse of statute laws. Nature has a continued series of actions of herself, with neither a God or man to punish or enforce her. Our lawmakers hav inaugurated the most dangerous superstition of the age. The only foundation our law-makers hav to build on is priestcraft and religious superstition; they hav imitated their God until really they are the real gods to fear.

Respectfully, from an Atheist that has been one for thirty-six years.

JOHN GILLIES.

COLUMBUS, O., ANNO ASSINI 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I will indite upon the subject of the Pulpit Ass.

In Echo cañon, Utah, overlooking the gulch below there is a famous and imposing rock called Jack in the Pulpit, which reminds one so forcibly of the jackass in the pulpit that the temptation is irresistible to draw a picture of the latter.

So far as being able to account for their existence, they are equally intelligent. The one may say that God made him, but silence is a better answer, for it contains more dignity, if not wisdom.

As there is no mention of a pulpit ass in the "Origin of Species," we are led to conclude either that he is not an evolution or that Darwin did not think him of sufficient importance to trace his lineage. Owing to his fancied resemblance, he is most probably only a transformation of the genus homo. His ass-ship, however, is purely artificial, having been either self-acquired or obtained at some manufactory where the particular brand is made to order.

A certain old book, whose authenticity is very questionable, begins about nineteen hundred years ago and makes two conflicting attempts to trace disconnected pedigrees of this oriental animal away back into ancient times, the one being lost in Father Abraham, who was a biped, and the other in some great imaginary anthropomorphic deification called Jehovah, or the unknown God. The same authority also speaks of a four-footed ass who was able to hold an argument upon the subject of corporal punishment with her master; and, as science teaches that the prototype of man once went upon all fours, may we not reasonably presume that this quadruped, being a female, might hav been the progenitor, or rather maternal ancestor, of the biped ass which occupies the pulpit of the present day?

However this may be, history certifies that after having been adopted by the Roman monarchy, and frightening its inhabitants out of their senses, and kicking its ancient grandeur into smithereens, he followed the star of empire westward, or, in common parlance, as civilization spread so the ass spread, until now he is quite common throughout Europe and North and South America. He is usually of the masculin gender, one of the opposit persuasion being a rare occurrence, owing probably to the fact that in early times the leader of one of the principal herds commanded the females to keep silence so that the males might secure a monopoly of the braying business. But had he been an old benedict instead of an old bachelor, to make the thing doubly sure, experience would hav taught him the necessity of applying for a charter or patent-right upon this exclusiv privilege.

In the United States we find about seventy-five thousand of these reverential brayfogles, owned chiefly by corporations, whose veneration for them is very much akin to that of the Egyptians and Hindoos for some of their sacred animals. They are an expensiv and useless luxury, the only benefit being derived from their braying, and as this can be divided among a thousand without any diminution of its individual effects, there is therefore no need of exclusiv ownership. He can bray for the many as well as for the few. In fact, as a general thing, the larger the crowd the louder the bray.

By his shrewd and conniving instinct this sacred ass has prevailed upon his owners to erect costly circuses, and to appoint one sacred day in seven for his special performance. The exhibition, or sacred farce, is a wonderful combination of the amusing and monotonous. The holy donkey, richly caparisoned in his gaudiest paraphernalia, ambles into the august presence of his delighted owners. The long visages of the males and the glaring eyeballs and erect ears of the females denote that they are interested, while the preponderance of the latter, which is universally the case, reminds the performer of the great necessity of doing it up brown. Here the scenery baffles all description, and we forbear. It must be seen to be appreciated. Suffice to say that the ass, weltering in his own heroic perspiration, has nearly split himself for the sake of being patted and applauded. Possibly he may hear the welcome invitation, "Come with us thou good and faithful servant and partake of the yellow-legged provender prepared for thee since yesterday." His bray is only for the pay. When the flatteries and emoluments cease he gets wroth, like other animals, and ceases to bray. It is decidedly amusing to see him exhibit his natural instinct by laying back his ears, turning up his nose, and snorting when he meets an individual who can behold his ass-ship through the lion's skin, but he soon beats a hasty retreat to seek the less discerning whom he can more easily frighten with his pseudo-majesty. When roaming at will in his every-day attire it may be difficult from outward appearance for an unpracticed observer to distinguish him from other animals, but his bray always givs him away. It is a never ending "Je—sus! Je——sus! Je——sus!"

Now, we would hav no objection to this animal running at large, if he would only mind his own business. But he makes himself an intolerable nuisance. He wants to make asses of the whole community, and even of the nation. When he gets a little authority his imperiousness knows no bounds. For instance, when he was at the hight of his glory, and held the reins of government, so jealous was he of his honors that the common herd were not even permitted to flap or switch except in perfect unison with his asininity. To enumerate the innocent doings he has punished as crimes for the sake of his time-honored, but moribund, superstition, would fill a volume, and dare not be attempted.

Although the progressiv march of intelligence has stripped him of many sacred prerogativs, he is far from being reduced to the condition of docility which an animal of his rank should occupy. By his nefarious influence with those in high places he yet receives many favors not accorded to others far his superiors in good behavior and intellectual development. He is almost as omnipresent as omnivorous, and may be found in every office from bottle-washer to president of a great nation.

Being exempt from taxation, he derives his partial support from those who hav no use for a donkey to "donk" for them. Let those pray who believe in a special providence, but not prey upon us. Let those who believe they own the seventh day, keep it holy and enjoy it as they please, but not seek to drive others into their hell. In short, let the devilish ass mind his own business and eat his own grass.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Country School.

Pretty, and pale, and tired,
She sits in her stiff-backed chair,
While the blazing summer sun
Shines in on her soft brown hair;
And the little brook without,
That she hears through the open door,
Mocks with its murmur cool
Hard bench and dusty floor.

It seems such an endless round,
Grammar and A B C,
The blackboard and the sums,
The stupid geography—
When from teacher to little Jem
Not one of them cares a straw
Whether "John" is in any "case,"
Or Kansas in Omaha.

For Jemmy's bare brown feet
Are aching to wade in the stream,
Where the trout to his luring bait
Shall leap with a quick, bright gleam;
And his teacher's blue eyes stray
To the flowers on the desk hard by,
Till her thoughts hav followed her eyes
With a half unconscious sigh.

Her heart outruns the clock,
As she smells their faint, sweet scent;
But when hav time and heart
Their measure in unison blent?
For time will haste or lag,
Like your shadow on the grass,
That lingers far behind,
Or flies when you fain would pass.

Hav patience, restless Jem—
The stream and the fish will wait;
And patience, tired blue eyes.
Down the winding road by the gate,
Under the willow shade,
Stands some one with fresher flowers;
So turn to your books again,
And keep love for the after hours.

Two Types of Firmness.

Firmness is an excellent characteristic when there is not too much of it. If persons hav that organ largely developed they are said to be pig-headed, obstinate as a mule, dreadfully set in their own ways, hard and difficult to get along with. On the other hand, if a person has not firmness enough it sometimes leads to serious results and sometimes to something funny.

One day I took a stroll through the streets. As I approached a small cottage a man came to the door and shouted to his son. "Tom," he said, "come in; I want you." "I won't do it," replied his young hopeful. "Oh, come, Tommy, that is a good boy. Come, and see what pa has got for you." "I tell you, I won't do it!" he replied, in still more resolute tones. "Very well," said his father, "do you stay where you are, for I am bound to be obeyed some way." That man had no parental authority because he had not firmness enough. The boy was well aware of that fact and took advantage of his father accordingly. Had I been the father and he still persisted in staying out, when he got ready to come in for his supper he would find the door fastened against him. He would certainly lose the satisfaction that night of sleeping in my second-best live-geese feather-bed that he is so fond of occupying. He could stay in the yard or go into the barn and stay with the cattle. In the morning, if he should come sneaking into the house for his breakfast, he could hav it only on these conditions—by asking my pardon for his disobedience and by promising to mind me like a good boy in the future. And that is the way that I would train Master Tom.

One meets occasionally people that are happily balanced in regard to firmness, having not too much nor too little, but that is the golden mean that runs between the two extremes.

MIRIAM.

An Encouraging Letter.

MISS S. H. WIXON, Dear Sister: I am more than pleased, I am delighted to see the Children's Corner crowded with letters from the young cousins.

I am glad to note, "This is my first letter," and then I like to see them followed up with second, third, and fourth. It is really interesting to watch the progress from first to fourth and further. It is indeed wonderful.

I hope to see one thousand first letters this year, and any number of the higher ones. I wonder if the dear young girls and boys hav any idea with what interest we older lads watch these early efforts, and how anxious we are to see the fourth and fifth—the pride we feel in their advancement—the strong, the yearning desire we feel to hav our places filled when we shall pass away.

It is from this army of young recruits that the ranks will be filled mainly, and I am sure the broken spaces will be worthily filled. If they are not, it will not be the fault of Miss WIXON or THE TRUTH SEEKER.

There was a time when it required the strongest moral and physical courage to take a stand for freedom of opinion, and there are some such places now, but they are growing beautifully less from day to day.

Just think of it, the preacher does not speak to over one hundred on an average, and his voice reverberates around the hollow walls of the room in which he speaks and ofttimes the more hollow heads of his hearers, while a letter in the Corner reaches thousands and thousands and circles the earth. O children, what an encouragement to write! What an incentiv to do your level best!

Giv us descriptions of your homes, your studies, and your pets. Tell us of the scenery in your vicinity, of the things you like, and your ideas of right and wrong. It will all help you in composition and freedom of expression. You will gain the use of words and an easy, graceful style. What if you make an almost flat failure at first, it becomes a motiv for some one else to "beat it" and for you to do better next time. Then remember your effort looks much better when dressed in printer's garb than it does as it leaves your anxious pen.

Try always to do your best, and every time try to do a little better. What a splendid opportunity is open before you. With best wishes for a Children's TRUTH SEEKER, I am,

Yours cordially, L. L. GOODWIN.

St. Elmo, Tenn., April 14, 1891.

Correspondence.

ASPEN, COL., March 30, 1891.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON: As I hav never written to the Corner, I hope this letter will not find its way to the waste-basket. I go to school. I am in the B 4 grade. I study reading, writing, arithmetic, drawing, language, and geography. I am twelve years old. Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER over a year. I like the pictures. We hav the picture book, "Men, Women, and Gods," "For Her Daily Bread," and "Is This Your Son, My Lord?"

Yours truly, OSCAR B. KINDRICK.

EL NIDO, March 28, 1891.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Dear Friend: As this is my first letter to the Children's Corner, I will not take the room of your grand and noble paper, but simply say a few words.

My papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for nine years. I like to read the Children's Corner and look at the pictures. My papa has the "Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book." I think the pictures mean a great deal to young America and should ever be kept in mind.

I am taking up much of your valuable space, so I will close.

Your Freethinker friends,

M. O. HENRY,
PEARL SOPHRONIA.

FT. FAIRFIELD, ME., April 5, 1891.

MISS WIXON: I write to let you know that there is another young Liberal away up in Maine.

My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like to look at the pictures and read the Children's Corner very much.

I am nine years old. I hav a baby brother sixteen months old (he is just as cute as he can be), and a sister fifteen years old, who goes to the village high school.

I hav several pets. One is a dog named Trusty. I harness him up in my sled, and he hauls me all around on the crust.

I was visiting one of my playmates awhile ago, and she showed me her Sunday-school book; I looked it over, and found a picture of a little girl hanging up by the hands and her feet in the fire, and I asked her if that was where the Christians were burning Infidels, and she said: "Why, of course not. The Christians would not do such a thing as that." Then I told her the Christians were better than the God they worshiped. She said I was wicked, and would hav to burn for making such talk. Then I asked her if she was happy. She said, of course she was. I told her I could not be happy if I believed my playmates would hav to burn for thinking differently from myself. I remain,

Your little friend, JENNIE WALDRON.

WORCESTER, MASS., April 5, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write to the Children's Corner. I like to read the letters in THE TRUTH SEEKER. My mother died March 18, 1889. I was eleven years old February 12th, and my brother Willie was thirteen February 18th. We went forty-four miles and back on Sunday to attend the funeral of Horace Seaver, Aug. 25, 1889. It was the first time we had ever seen or heard Colonel Ingersoll, but we had often heard him spoken of as that "horrid Infidel." I don't think he is "horrid." I think he "is bright as a button." I judge from his looks and writings, not what the Christians say. I hav been to school and church and to Sunday-school, missing only three times since I came here in 1889. We go rain or shine, snow or blow. We would go to Liberal meetings if there were any here, but it is nice to hear both sides. I spoke a piece last Easter. It was this:

"An Easter lily I will bring,
And surely it will tell
Of him who walked upon the earth,
And loved the lilies well."

Willie spoke, "The Boys We Need." I should like to see it in the Children's Corner. We hav been to anatomy lectures this winter, and I go Wednesday afternoons to All Saints' church to the "Kitchen Garden" school. There are twenty girls that belong. We learn how to wash, iron, sweep, dust, make beds, etc. We sing as we work. We are going to hav an exhibition the last of this month. I can play some on the piano. I will write again some time if you would like to hear from me. I will close by wishing Mr. Thomas Winter would write soon for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I remain, Yours truly, MARTHA C. DODGE.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.
Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

TRY-SQUARE: OR,
The Church of Practical Religion.
BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

The New Thought (Chicago) says: "It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw. . . . To state the whole thing in the language of another, the first book shows what a heaven is coming on this earth after it shall have passed through the necessary discipline, and the other books show what a hell of a time we have to get there."

The Chesaning Argus (Chesaning, Mich.) says: "It is one grand sublime poem . . . a perfect history in blank verse of the social and religious struggles of our earth, and would be good reading for those who have been interested in 'Looking Backward.'" Describing Book 6, it says: "This chapter will be found especially interesting to ladies."

The Phrenological Journal (New York) regards it as equal to the great epics of a hundred years ago or more.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," says: "I have read it with much interest. I am in entire sympathy with its spirit of boundless faith in human development."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says it is one of the significant indications of the signs of the times.

The Nationalist, of Boston, considers its style as equal to Milton's, and says it "engages the reader's attention with the first line and keeps it engrossed until the final word."

Brick Pomeroy's Advance Thought (N. Y.) says: "It contains much to benefit humanity."

THE telegram of Premier Rudini to Marquis Imperiali, head of the Italian legation at Washington, says: "Henceforward the federal government declares itself conscious of what we hav constantly asked, and yet it does not grant our legitimate demands. Mr. Blaine is right when he makes the payment of indemnity to the families of the victims dependent upon proof of the violation of the treaty; but we shrink from thinking that he considers that the fact of such violation still needs proof. . . . We hav placed on evidence that we hav never asked anything else but the opening of regular proceedings. In regard to this, Baron Fava's first note, dated March 15th, contained even the formula of the telegram addressed on the same day by Mr. Blaine under the order of President Harrison to the governor of Louisiana. Now, however, in the note of April 14th Mr. Blaine is silent on the subject which is for us the main point of controversy. We are under the sad necessity of concluding that what to every other government would appear to be the accomplishment of strict civil duty is impossible to the federal government. . . . Let the federal government reflect upon its side if it is expedient to leave to the mercy of its state in the Union, irresponsible to foreign countries, the efficiency of treaties, pledging its faith and honor to entire nations."

And he went up from thence unto Bethel; and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou baldhead; go up, thou baldhead.—2 Kings ii, 23.

Gems of Thought.

THE highest eminence to which Science has reached to-day, the grandest generalization which Philosophy has made up to the present hour, form the line upon which we stand—the line of our Bible, the line of our faith. But, footing this line, we do not turn round, Christian-like, and try to smite down those who stand behind us; for we believe in progress, not fixity; in mental action, not mental stagnation; and we recognize that the line we toe to-day we may be able to overstep to-morrow. Thus there is no disability annexed to investigation—no penalty attached to inquiry. There is, with us, no "Thus far; no farther;" no incontrovertible utterance of oracle; no slavish adherence to the ipse dixit of Ghost, holy or unholy. Show us the deepest depth to which human penetration can go; there we desire to be. Show us the loftiest peak to which human speculation can soar; there, on that peak, we take our stand to-day, and gaze upward and onward to a still loftier eminence, upon which we may take our stand to-morrow.—Saladin.

THE worst ill service you can do to the violent is to show them that they may work their wicked will unpunished and unchecked by the natural instincts of humanity. It is to make them "masters of the situation," to encourage them by success and impunity, to enthrone them as monarchs of the world. It is to put goodness under the foot of evil, and so to drive back the progress of humanity. . . . It is, too, to harden the sinner in his wrong, the criminal in his crime, and the brute in his brutality; to teach him to proceed in outrages and iniquities that pay so well. Hundreds that would hav been stopped at the outset of their criminal career by prompt and timely resistance are led on by the impunity which submission secures till habits of crime are formed and recovery becomes hopeless. Non-resistance, again, becomes connivance and complicity in wrong. —Greg.

MANY of our interpretations of scripture and much of their authority rest upon the assertions of the "Christian fathers." If any one would gain a true estimate of the value of the testimony of these worthies, let him read of their lives and writings and superstitions, and he will be slow to accept their dicta about "God's word."—Robt. C. Adams.

TRUTH and reason never cause revolutions on the earth; they are the fruit of experience, which can only be exercised when the passions are at rest; they excite not in the heart those furious emotions which shake empires to their base. Truth can only be discovered by peaceful minds; it is only adopted by kindred spirits. If it change the opinions of men, it is only by insensible gradations—a gentle and easy descent conducting them to reason. The revolutions caused by the progress of truth are always beneficial to society, and are only burthensome to those who deceive and oppress it.—Du Marias.

FANATICS are almost always under the direction of knaves, who place the dagger in their hands. These knaves resemble Montaigne's Old Man of the Mountain, who, it is said, made weak persons imagin, under his treatment of them, that they really had experienced the joys of paradise, and promised them a whole eternity of such delights, if they would go and assassinate such as he would point out to them. There has been only one religion in the world which has not been polluted by fanaticism, and that is the religion of the learned in China. The different sects of ancient philosophers were not merely exempt from this pest of human society, but they were antidotes to it; for the effect of philosophy is to render the soul tranquil, and fanaticism and tranquillity are totally incompatible.—Voltaire.

HOW TALMAGE AND THE PREACHERS DEMOLISH INFIDELITY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE English hav been making a great outcry against Russia for turning out the Jews; but they are not prepared to giv the chosen people the hospitality of England. A call for a meeting in London to urge the government to stop the influx of Jews has been signed by many members of Parliament and other influential people.

THIS is all the public knows of a somewhat important event. It is a dispatch from London dated May 8 h: "Madam Blavatsky, the noted co-founder of the Theosophical Society, died at 19 Avenue Road, Regent's Park, three weeks ago. The fact has only now become publicly known. The cause of death was influenza, aggravated by kidney trouble. The body was cremated at Woking, according to Madam Blavatsky's desire."

IF after Annie Besant has been with us there still remain any so dense as not to know what Theosophy is all about they should paste Mrs. Besant's Boston definition of it in their hats. "The central idea of Theosophy," said the lady, "is one great circle of light spreading from the rare to the dense, from the intangible to the tangible, from the subjectiv to the objectiv." That, thinks the World, puts the case in a nutshell.

PROHIBITION in South Dakota is a failure, conviction being impossible under the law passed last year. In the test case recently made, a detectiv swore that a man had sold him liquor. No attempt was made to invalidate the testimony, but the defense argued that under the law the detectiv had committed a crime in buying the liquor, was therefore an accomplice of the saloon-keeper, and his unsupported testimony was insufficient for conviction. The court and jury agreed with the defense.

EMPEROR WILLIAM has taken a religious turn. He is about to proceed to the Wartburg to shut himself up for meditation in the famous room in which Luther saw the devil, fired his inkstand at him, missed him, and spoiled the wall. Among his meditations, says the Sun, the youthful sovereign can reflect upon the probability that if Luther had lived in a more recent period and had served his time in the German army, he would not hav missed the devil with that inkstand.

THE great John Wesley once expressed his belief that sin was the cause of earthquakes. Col. Elliott F. Shepard appears to hav taken a leaf from Wesley's notebook. On Sunday he told the congregation of the Asbury Methodist church that the reason why Chicago has of late been in the clutches of the grip was that the directors of the coming World's Fair in that city hav not yet decided whether or not the Fair shall be closed on Sundays. It would perhaps be interesting to know, says the Recorder, what, in Colonel Shepard's opinion, is the cause of the grip in New York, and whether there is such a thing as a sin bacillus.

THE woman's rights movement in Roumania has received a new impetus from the recent election of a woman to the mayoralty of Branessci. Meetings of women are being held all over the country with a view to organizing a woman's league for the purpose of booming women for city offices. The aims of the league will be followed in observance of the fact that, while women are legally eligible to all local offices in Roumania, public opinion and the constitution are against admitting them to parliament and granting them the ballot. The league will, therefore, be an association of women, will merely plan and execute the best means of influencing their husbands and brothers to support other women for municipal electiv offices.

A MEMORIAL recently presented to the pope in the name of all the United States emigration committees, who recently held a congress at Lucerne, begs his protection for the four hundred thousand to five hundred thousand Catholics who annually emigrate. The memorial is also signed by a representativ of Canada and contains statistics of a very pessimistic character. The pope accepted the memorial and promised to giv the matter special attention. The reason urged by the memorialists why national bishops should be appointed for America to look after the emigrants of the different nationalities is that the Irish bishops in the United States only nominate Irish priests, who do not know the languages spoken by the emigrants. The result of this is that Catholic emigrants lose their religious faith. The statistics communicated prove these two points.

THE German Liberals are determined to wrest the telegraph and telephone monopoly from the government. The censorship exercised by the officials in the telegraph department is stimulating opposition, and is becoming more and more irritating. Telegrams are scrutinized on the frontier, and liberal excisions made to meet the police sense of propriety. Reports of speeches in the Reichstag and at public meetings are not permitted to pass over the wires if objectionable expressions are discovered. The Liberals hav prepared a bill to confer upon private corporations and individuals the power to maintain local telegraph and telephone systems on the proof of the possession of ample capital for that purpose, municipal governments being exempted from this condition, and rendering the state telegraph and telephone liable to the payment of damages for dispatches illegally withheld or thrown out.

THE Sun troubles the brethren this wise: "The Union Theological Seminary has elected the Rev. Dr. Van Dyke, of Brooklyn, as professor of systematic theology, and the Princeton Theological Seminary has established a new chair of biblical theology. These are both Presbyterian schools of divinity; and yet the question whether there is any basis for either biblical theology or systematic theology remains to be decided by the Presbyterian general assembly which meets in Detroit this month. If Professor Briggs is right, the Bible does not afford such a basis, unless theology is to be no more than merely speculativ. According to him, and many Presbyterians who sympathize with him, the Bible is a fallible book, containing errors along with its truths, as the human reason may determin. If that is so, of course the Bible affords no positiv foundation for theology; and without such a foundation, how can there be any theology that is more than guesswork?"

Christianity and Evolution.

PALEY'S EVIDENCES —NO. I. TACITUS.

Of the large number of works that hav been written in order to demonstrate the absolute reliability of the so-called historical evidence for Christianity, none are more popular even to-day than the famous treatis of Dr. Paley. And there are many good reasons for this. Paley knew how to write a work that would interest the reading public; he had a good method of marshaling his evidence and a fascinating style of writing, and a plausible method of arguing that was calculated to please the ordinary superficial reader; in addition to this he was a perfect master of the English language, and employed as few Latin and as many simple Saxon words to convey his ideas as possible.

Paley begins by laying down two propositions:

1. "That there is satisfactory evidence that many professing to be original witnesses of the Christian miracles, passed their lives in labors, dangers, and sufferings, voluntarily undergone in attestation of the accounts which they delivered, and solely in consequence of their belief of those accounts; and that they also submitted, from the same motivs, to the new rules of conduct."

2. "That there is not satisfactory evidence that persons, professing to be original witnesses of other miracles, in their nature as certain as these are, hav ever acted in the same manner, in attestation of the accounts which they delivered, and properly in consequence of their belief of those accounts."

The answer of the Rationalist to the first proposition is that we hav not the evidence of the original witnesses—nor even of those who "professed to be original witnesses of the Christian miracles."

Apart from the four gospels—the authorship and authenticity of which are disputed—who were the persons "professing to be original witnesses of the Christian miracles?" Paley fails to supply the names, but contents himself with advancing the alleged testimony of persons who were not born until after the death of Jesus. Moreover, even supposing it were true that the early followers of Jesus "passed their lives in labors, dangers, and sufferings, voluntarily undergone in attestation of the accounts which they delivered," it would not demonstrate that their belief was true; it would merely show that they were sincere.

The second proposition is beside the point. Even if persons who alleged that they had seen miracles performed by persons other than Christ or his followers, were not prepared to pass their lives in "labors, dangers, sufferings," it would not prove that they had not seen some remarkable performances the causes of which they did not understand; it would only prove that they did not attach the same importance to them as the others or that they interpreted them in a different way. The Rationalist, however, denies all miracles, and alleges that their performance would be a violation of all the known laws of nature.

Tacitus (born A.D. 54 or 55, died 134 or 135) is claimed by Dr. Paley as a witness for Christianity. It will be observed that this historian was not born until after the alleged death of Jesus, and could not therefore hav been an eye-witness to any of the miracles alleged to hav been wrought by Jesus. At most Tacitus could only speak to events that happened quite thirty years after the death of the alleged founder of Christianity. Such evidence is absolutely valueless so far as demonstrating the truth of Christianity is concerned. Paley quotes Tacitus for the purpose of showing that during the reign of Nero this emperor "inflicted the most cruel punishments upon a set of people, who were holden in abhorrence for their crimes, and were commonly called Christians. The founder of that name was Christus who, in the reign of Tiberius, was punished as a criminal by the procurator, Pontius Pilate. This pernicious superstition, thus checked for a while, broke out again; and spread not only over Judea, the source of this evil, but reached the city also; whither flow from all quarters all things vile and shameful, and where they find shelter and encouragement. At first, only those were apprehended who confessed themselvs of that sect; afterward a vast multitude discovered by them; all which were condemned, not so much for the crime of burning the city, as for their hatred of mankind. Their executions were so contrived as to expose them to derision and contempt. Some were covered over with the skins of wild beasts and torn to pieces by dogs; some were crucified. Others, having been daubed over with combustible materials, were set up as lights in the night time and thus burnt to death. Nero made use of his own gardens as a theater on this occasion, and also exhibited the diversions of the circus, sometimes standing in the crowd as a spectator, in the habit of a charioteer; at other times driving a chariot himself; till at length these men, though really criminal, and deserving exemplary punishment, began to be commiserated as people who were destroyed, not out of regard for the public welfare, but only to gratify the cruelty of one man" (Annals, book xv, sec. 44).

If this passage were authentic, it would not prove anything of value to the Christian. There may hav been a sect called Christians who were persecuted by Nero, although the Christus mentioned here may not hav been the Jesus of the gospels. But there are many good reasons for believing that this passage, in common with the others I hav quoted, was manufactured by Christians centuries after the death of the alleged author of them. In the first place, if this passage had really appeared in the writings of Tacitus, it is singular, to say the least of it, that it was not quoted by any of the early fathers. Apparently they knew nothing of it, otherwise their silence is inexplicable.

It was not quoted by Tertullian nor Clemens Alexandrinus nor Eusebius, each of whom we may reasonably suppose would hav referred to it had they known of its existence. Indeed, this passage appears to hav been first discovered during the fifteenth century.

The Rev. Robert Taylor, writing on this passage, says: "It rests then entirely upon the fidelity of a single individual, and he having the ability, the opportunity, and the strongest possible incitement of interest to induce him to introduce the interpolation. The passage itself, though unquestionably the work of a master and entitled to be pronounced the chef d'œuvre of the art, betrays the penchant of that delight in blood and in descriptions of bloody horrors, as peculiarly characteristic of the Christian disposition as it was abhorrent to the mild and gentle mind and highly cultivated taste of Tacitus. It is falsified by the 'Apology of Tertullian' and the far more respectable testimony of Melito, bishop of Sardis, who explicitly states that the Christians up to his time, the third century, had never been victims of persecution, and that it was in provinces lying beyond the boundaries of the Roman empire, and not in Judea, that Christianity originated. Tacitus has in no other part of his writings made the least allusion to Christ or Christians" (Diegesis, pp. 374, 376).

The valueless character of such evidence as that is seen in the fact that Tacitus knew nothing of Jesus personally, nor hav we any evidence that he was acquainted with anybody who had either seen Jesus or witnessed any of his wonderful doings; and further the passage itself was never used by Christians as a part of the evidence which they hav to present in support of the historical truth of their religion.

LATER WITNESSES.

Dr. Paley quotes the following words from Suetonius, born A.D. 65, died in the second century: "Affecti suppliciis, Christiani genus hominum superstitionis novæ et maleficæ" (Sent., Nero, cap. 16). "The Christians, a set of men of a new and mischievous (or magical) superstition, were punished." A passage from a Latin poem by Juvenal is then quoted, but it appears to hav no bearing on the subject. It is translated as follows: "Describe Tigellinus (a creature of Nero) and you shall suffer the same punishment with those who stand in their own flame and smoke, their head being held up by a stake fixed to their chin, till they make a long stream of blood and melted sulphur on the ground."

Paley believed in cumulativ evidence, and he seemed to think that a lot of weak evidence, if put together often, made up a very strong argument, and so he observes: "If this passage were considered by itself, the subject of allusion might be doubtful; but when connected with the testimony of Suetonius as to the actual punishment of the Christians by Nero, and with the account given by Tacitus of the species of punishment which they were made to undergo, I think it sufficiently probable that these were the exceptions to which the poet refers. These things, as has already been observed, took place within thirty-one years after Christ's death—that is, according to the course of nature, in the lifetime probably of some of the apostles, and certainly in the lifetime of those who were converted by the apostles or who were converted in their time. If then the founder of the religion was put to death in the execution of his design; if the first race of converts to the religion, many of them, suffered the greatest extremities for their profession; it is hardly credible that those who came between the two, who were companions of the author of the institution during his life, and the teachers and propagators of the institution after his death, could go about their undertaking with ease and safety" (Paley's Evidences, p. 21). Here we see that Paley assumes that some of the apostles of Jesus were cognizant of these events. But if they were, how is it that they did not mention them? Why are the four gospels silent respecting them? Why were these events left unrecorded until the above disputed passage was found in Suetonius?

The testimony of the Younger Pliny is then introduced.

Paley artfully acknowledges that this belongs to a later period, but quotes from the celebrated letter to Trajan, which, however, is not beyond dispute, and against which the Rev. Robert Taylor urges strong objections.

He says: "The undeniable fact that the first Christians were the greatest liars and forgers that had ever been in the whole world, and that they actually stopped at nothing. The flagrant atopism of Christians being found in the remote province of Bithynia, before they had acquired any notoriety in Rome. . . . The inconsistency of the supposition that so just and moral a people as the primitiv Christians are assumed to hav been, should hav been the first to provoke the Roman government to depart from its universal maxims of toleration, liberality, and indifference. . . . The use of the torture to extort confession—the choice of women to be the subjects of this torture, when the ill-usage of women was, in like manner, abhorrent to the Roman character" (Diegesis, pp. 383, 384).

Martial is the next supposed witness. He is alleged to hav written before Pliny, and made the sufferings of the Christians the subject of his ridicule. "Nothing, however," says Paley, "could show the notoriety of the fact with more certainty than this does. Martial's testimony, as well as Pliny's, goes also to another point, viz., that the deaths of these men were martyrdoms in the strictest sense; that is to say, were so voluntary, that it was in their power at the time of pronouncing the sentence, to hav averted the execution by consenting to join in heathen sacrifice." In further corroboration, Paley says: "The constancy, and by consequence the sufferings, of the Christians of this period is also referred to by Epictetus, who imputes their intrepidity to madness, or to a kind of fashion or habit; and about fifty years afterward by Marcus Aurelius, who ascribes it to obstinacy" (Evidences, pp. 22, 23).

Unquestionably, weak as the letter of the younger Pliny is, when viewed in the light of evidence for historical Christianity, the supposed testimony of Martial, Epictetus, and Marcus Aurelius is weaker still.

These writers, it is true, mention persons who were known by the name of Christians. Nobody, however, disputes that there existed a sect of persons bearing this name, and their existence can be traced back long anterior to the alleged birth of Jesus. What we want is evidence of the existence of the miracle-worker Jesus—not of persons calling themselvs Christians. It was a very easy matter for persons calling themselvs Christians to go about doing extravagantly absurd things between fifty and a hundred years after the supposed death of Jesus.

And as a matter of fact, all Martial did was to ridicule the stupidity of Christians who, in a stubborn frenzy, rushed to be tortured or killed out of sheer bravado. Epictetus naturally described such conduct as "madness," and Marcus Aurelius as "obstinacy;" and no doubt there was a decided mixture of both.

The Rev. Robert Taylor, in his "Diegesis," and Dr. Giles, in his "Christian Records," hav pointed out the chief defects in this supposed evidence.

The Rev. Dr. Giles sums up thus: "Though the remains of Grecian and Latin profane literature which belong to the first and second centuries of our era are enough to form a library of themselvs, they contain no allusion to the New Testament. The Latin writers, who lived between the time of Christ's crucifixion and the year A.D. 200, are Seneca, Lucan, Suetonius, Tacitus, Persius, Juvenal, Martial, Pliny the Elder, Silius Italicus, Statius, Quintilian, and Pliny the Younger, besides numerous others of inferior note. The greater number of these make mention of the Jews, but not of the Christians. In fact, Suetonius, Tacitus, and the Younger Pliny, are the only writers who mention the Christian religion or its founder" (Christian Records, p. 36). And on page 42 the same writer says: "The Greek classic writers who lived between the time of Christ's crucifixion and the year 200 are those which follow: Epictetus, Plutarch, Ælian, Arrian, Galen, Lucian, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Ptolemy, Marcus Aurelius (who, though a Roman emperor, wrote in Greek), Pausanias, and many others of less note. The allusions to Christianity found in their works are singularly brief."

Mrs. Besant puts the view of the Freethinker with great clearness and force. She says: "What does it all—this 'evidence'—amount to? One writer, Tacitus, records that a man, called by his followers 'Christ'—for no one pretends that Christ is anything more than a title given by his disciples to a certain Jew named Jesus—was put to death by Pontius Pilate. And suppose he were, what then? How is this a proof of the religion called Christianity? Tacitus knows nothing of the miracle-worker, of the risen and ascended man; he is strangely ignorant of all the wonders that had occurred; and allowing the passage to be genuin, it tells sorely against the marvelous history given by the Christians of their leader, whose fame is supposed to hav spread far and wide, and whose fame most certainly must so hav spread had he really performed all the wonderful works attributed to him. But no necessity lies upon the Freethinker, when he rejects Christianity, to disprove the historical existence of Jesus of Nazareth, although we point to the inadequacy of the evidence even of his existence. The strength of the Freethought position is in nowise injured by the admission that a young Jew named Jesus (i. e., Jesus) may hav wandered up and down Galilee and Judea in the reign of Tiberius, that he may hav been a religious reformer, that he may hav been put to death by Pontius Pilate for sedition. All this is perfectly likely, and to allow it in no way indorses the mass of legend and myth encrusted round this tiny nucleus of possible fact" (Freethinkers' Text-Book, p. 207).

Up to the middle of the second century, then, these are the whole of the external evidences which Christians had to offer on behalf of their religion, and such evidence it must be admitted is wholly inadequate to demonstrate the historic portion of the Christian case. ARTHUR B. MOSS.

The God Idea.

In these days when men do their own thinking and the cherished creeds and established doctrins of political and religious organizations are subjected to the most searching scrutiny, it ought not to seem sacrilegious for us to investigate the god idea that permeates the philosophy of all classes and conditions of men.

The most depraved savage has his god. The Hottentot of Africa, the Figi of the South Sea islands, the Digger Indian upon the Great American Desert, all believe in the existence of some sort of a god. History loses itself in the deep labyrinths of the past, but it does not go beyond the worship of a supposed deity. Ancient Egypt adored the mighty Nile and bowed down to crocodiles and bulls. Every nation had and has to-day its peculiar god or gods, shaped and fashioned after its idea of strength, courage, and goodness.

As civilization advanced the god idea advanced, and from crocodiles and bulls, from images and shrines, we find the Christian religion evolving from the shadows of superstition with a great and unknown deity who to save from his own wrath gave his innocent son to die upon the cross as a propitiation for the sins of the world. The Jehovah of Israel becomes the god of the gentiles. Taken from his chosen people, he fortifies himself in Rome and works with a broad crimson stain through eighteen centuries the march of the Christian church.

This God is supposed to hav made the world in six days; to hav made the sun to rule the day and the moon to rule the night. To gratify his own pleasure he made man in his own image to rule the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air. He endowed man with reason and subjected him to temptation. Through the machinations of the evil one man disobeyed God and ate of the forbidden fruit. For this act of disobedience God drove his creature man out of the garden, and he (God) cursed the earth he had made; he cursed man and said, "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou earn thy bread." He also cursed woman and pronounced a curse upon her daughters after her. His wrath knew no bounds, and to satisfy his awful vengeance he cursed the entire human race. What a picture! A great God pronouncing terrible maledictions upon millions of unborn men and women, and all for the sins of his own creatures that he had made from the dust to gratify his own pleasure. In his wrath he brought the flood and buried beneath its angry waves the world, sparing neither women nor children. In his wrath he destroyed the city of Sodom and saved only righteous (?) Lot, a villain whose very name is a stench in the nostrils of decent men. In his wrath he hardened Pharaoh's heart and visited his plagues upon the hapless Egyptians. He advised the Israelites to "spoil" their former masters, not only countenancing deceit and theft, but actually commanding it of his people. He overthrew Jericho and saved only a harlot, butchering in cold blood babes and women. He was the friend of David and Solomon, than whom no viler men ever darkened the pages of barbarism. And at last he grew so angry with his earthly children that nothing but the innocent blood of his own son would propitiate his terrible anger.

Thinking men, reasoning men, pure women, I appeal unto you. Is this your conception of a God? Is this your idea of justice and right? How long must this bloody conception of the deity last? The world advances in science and art—the locomotiv has taken the place of the bullock cart, the telegraph supersedes the carrier-pigeon, and the world advances in every respect save in its conception of a God. The idea of the blood atonement clings like a Nemesis to the human race. Intelligent men believe in and worship a God whose history, if true, would cast a shadow upon the record of ten thousand Neros.

How can virtuous women worship a God who gave unto David "all the wives of his master Saul," or a God who would bless and prosper such vile libertins as old Jacob and Solomon—a God who blessed the polygamist and the adulterer? How can honest men bow down before altars built to a God who led a band of outlaws and robbers from Egypt into Canaan, there to butcher the old and the young, to rob and plunder the hapless Canaanites? Will men and women never renounce this horrid conception of a God and learn to do right and respect the rights of others? Will they never turn from futil efforts to plant their bloody banner in every land and from preaching the cruel doctrin of blood atonement? Men need to be pointed to the future and not to the past. Men should forget Abraham and Lot and David and Peter and Paul; they should not be taught to adore the Jehovah of the Bible, but taught to follow in the footsteps of such men as Denton, Humboldt, Franklin, Fulton, Edison, Pasteur, Koch, and that mighty host of mighty men who are leading the human race from out the shadows of superstition into the glorious sunlight of reform. In Koch we see one mightier than the supposed Christ. One who not only heals, but shows others how to do his wonderful works. Christ was supposed to heal the leper, but Koch not only heals the consumptiv but places in the hands of others his wonderful power. Koch works by scientific principles, while Christ acted the part of a juggler. Koch goes to the root of the evil, while the Nazarene, if the story be true, simply removed the effect without acting upon the cause.

Christ was not the equal of Edison, for he entered Jerusalem riding upon an ass's colt, while Edison rides behind the lightnings of the clouds. Take the patriarchs of Israel, and place Jews at their head, and place around them the armies of Israel in its palmiest days, and one hundred men armed with Winchester rifles would scatter the entire host. Why, then, this eternal adoration of these benighted savages?

Let all Freethinkers band themselvs together and organize themselvs not upon the principle of old Moses or upon the principle of Jesus or Paul, but let them take the teachings of Newton, Franklin, Huxley, Darwin, Edison, and the great army of scientists, as our creed, and take the revelations of science as the only true revelations of God, and build up their race upon a higher, purer, nobler plane, and go forth to conquer the combined armies of ignorance and superstition. Letters to Workingmen.

Charles Lamb in his humorous way tells us of the origin of roast pig—how a building containing young pigs accidentally took fire and how the farmer, poking among the embers, ran his fingers into the roasted meat, and, clapping his burnt fingers into his mouth, first tasted roast pig, and how he, and afterward his neighbors, finding out his method, took to burning down their buildings to obtain this wonderful savory viand. We laugh at the idea of burning a house to roast a pig. Nevertheless the circumlocution performed by our public institutions discounts the absurdity. To roast a pig they would not only burn a house, but spoil the pig also. Why is it, take a question of law, of medicin, of theology, an appeal is made at once to the past? A search is begun for some old decision; and the older the better, the more honored. Men, even reformers, are continually decrying the degeneracy of the times and pointing to the "good old days" of our fathers, when politicians were patriots, ministers sincere, and lawyers were honest. We are forever looking backward for our model.

Yet history proves it a delusion. Its students must deny that the politics of our fathers were less corrupt than ours. On the contrary, intrigue was then, as now, the politician's stock in trade. If the minister was less a hypocrit, he was more a tyrant. And a conscience was less discernible in the doctors. The greater cry raised against corruption in our times, arises from the fact that our perceptions of right and justice are keener. We are losing our reverence for the divine right of things. We are beginning to question the truth of the saying that the end justifies the means. The old lady who excused her false prophecy in time of a revival by saying, "There is no sin in lying to scare sinners to repentance," proved herself a true follower of the Christian fathers. But somehow her efforts were not appreciated, and she is growing still unpopular. The age is getting critical. We are even questioning the good man in politics who in his endeavor to save the country by getting his party in power will resort to means which would not look just right if employed in his own individual advancement. The patient is questioning the methods of the physician, asking himself if he is not heeding the admonition, "Physician, heal [heel] thyself," and doing it at his expense. The mantle of "divinity" and "necessity" is getting threadbare, and we are discovering the form of a man beneath it. Even the long gown of the priest is getting thin, and the halo that was wont to encircle his beatific countenance is becoming beautifully less; like the wig of the councillor and the Latin of medicin and prayers, it is losing its value.

The trouble is, we hav accepted the assertions of men as truth simply because our fathers and forefathers so accepted them, but when subjected to the test of reason and experiment, they are found wanting the essential qualities of truth. Then we are inclined to doubt our reason and experiment; for we hav learned to love it as truth. Thus reason has been denounced as false and in league with the devil. The early history of all people shows how reason has to giv way to tradition. After man had made his God and endowed him with omnipotent goodness, reason wanted to know how his existence with that of evil in the world could be reconciled. Hence the myth of Eden, "original sin," and other traditions arose. Man was made perfect, the traditions of life were perfect. But the devil, in the form of wisdom, beguiled him. He began to question, to reason, and was lost; and this old fear that to follow our reason to a logical conclusion would lead us to the devil still dominates the masses. We are conscious of the working of certain principles for good, but so fearful of getting out of the road our fathers trod we dare not trust them. All reformers start from well-defined principles; but the moment success brings them many followers, a limit is set to the principle, and we find inscribed upon their articles of faith, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." They dare not follow their logic to a consistent conclusion; for when they leave the creed of their fathers, and claim the right to enter new fields of thought and action, to be consistent they must grant the same right to others, until every soul is at liberty to decide for himself or herself what is right, what is proper, and act accordingly. Freedom in thought is becoming popular, freedom of speech is being demanded, but freedom of action has few advocates. Yet the logic that begins with thought must end with action. Liberty must shine for all, else it is not liberty. Do as you will and be prepared to take the consequences of your acts; for as you act in liberty, by liberty your acts are judged. The principle of liberty is natural law, and based upon the perfect equality of the human race.

I know we are living in a highly artificial state of society. The idea of human equality is a modern idea, and the idea of liberty as a principle is very little understood. But the ego of man will never be satisfied until the liberty of the individual is established. Liberty is the normal or natural state of man. Prescribed morals and conduct is abnormal, artifical. Nature says, do as you please; and true education says, the pleasure of your act depends upon your doing to others as you would hav others do to you. This is the idea: like produces like. If you smile, a smile is returned; if you frown, a frown answers you. Joy givs birth to joy, and hate engenders hate. When we acquire scientific habits of thought, when we are no longer prejudiced in favor of hereditary beliefs, but shall seek the truth with unbiased investigation, then the true value of fundamental principles will be apparent. Then we shall be able to think of liberty that is in no way associated with invasion. Then we may truthfully say: "I believe in liberty, but not in license." Now it is the reverse. We believe in license, but not in liberty. When we limit liberty, we create license. We no longer say, "Do as you will," but "Do as we will." We hav established an authority, and liberty under authority is impossible. But would you giv man liberty to do wrong? I would giv man liberty; that is to say, I would make the conditions such that every man should dwell in liberty.

The idea of giving men liberty conveys a false impression. Liberty is the normal condition, man's inalienable right. Ignorance and superstition hav deprived him, and substituted license. Intelligence must restore it.

If man does wrong—that is to say, if he invades the liberty of others—then he is not acting in liberty, but destroys the condition and subjects himself to restrainment. Can there be such a thing as restrainment without government? "Self-preservation is the first law of nature." It certainly is essential with selfishness. If my liberty is invaded, my nature asserts the right to resist that invasion, and if my strength or ability is unequal to the task and I can convince others of the justice of my resistance, and that their interests will be advanced inasmuch as the help will be reciprocal, they will voluntarily assist me. In this way association for mutual protection and mutual advantage will be formed. Herbert Spencer says, "The spontaneous coöperation of men in pursuit of personal benefits will adequately work out the general good." Think it over, friends. Imagin a neighborhood. Some one is wronged. His friends and neighbors desire to see justice done and the wrong righted. They are thoroughly acquainted with all the features of the case, and left to themselvs would soon make restitution, but their hands are tied. The poor man or woman must suffer and be silent, or else appeal to the law, in which case they may possibly punish their enemy, but when they figure up the cost the satisfaction is not so apparent. The lawyer has been well defined as the gentleman who rescues your property—and keeps it himself. Think of these lawyers and judges deriving a vast revenue from the quarrels and misunderstandings of those who should be friends, and would be but for these vampires and leeches on the body of society. These differences could all be settled by friendly arbitration, without loss of time or expense of fortunes. And what is true of those cases arising from traffic and intercourse is equally true of crime and all cases of injustice.

But this is mob-law, you exclaim. Nothing of the kind. Intelligence would soon arrange matters. Mob-rule and its usual acts of violence are but the volcanic eruption of pent-up indignation at the tardiness, inefficiency, and corruption of our so-called courts of justice, where criminals are arrested by "pals," confined and guarded by comrades, and finally tried by their equals or superiors in crime. When we consider the character of these men who rule us, when we divest them of the glamour of officialism that surrounds them, we shall realize that

> Proud man,
> Dressed in a little brief authority,
> Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
> His glassy essence, like an angry ape
> Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
> As make the angels weep.

Buffalo, N. Y. A. L. BALLOU.

Mr. Laperche's Views.

For many years back I hav been suppressing a desire to express my views on Spiritualism. I did so, thinking I had better leave the valuable pages of our esteemed TRUTH SEEKER for wiser and more talented writers, but unless I am entirely off my base, my economy of the space in your valuable columns has not the desired effect. It is not all taken up by wisdom. In the mean time, my desire to be heard is getting uncontrolable, being constantly aggravated by what seems to me extremely ridiculous pleas for Spiritualism.

My views hav been many times stated exactly by other parties, but not plain enough, it seems, for those who suffer their desires to overthrow their judgment.

Allow me, Mr. Macdonald, to ask you and all the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER a pertinent question. Are all the Spiritualistic writers partially deranged or am I an idiot? One or the other seems to me an inevitable fact. Be frank and fear not to offend me. I want an impartial jury and am well disposed to abide by the verdict after the evidence is heard and properly considered.

I will take for my opposit the latest defender of spirits in THE TRUTH SEEKER, Mr. W. L. Willis.

Miss Ella E. Gibson and a certain doctor hav given this man what appears to me quite satisfactory explanation of the possibility of the medium being influenced by the surrounding circuit. Indeed, Mr. Willis is not able to deny that such a thing is at least possible if not altogether probable, and yet he positivly insists on attributing all the phenomena he witnessed to foreign spirits who he believes hav once inhabited human bodies.

1. I ask Mr. Willis, where is the proof that such spirits exist outside of his imagination?

2 If they do exist, where is the proof that they influence the medium?

3. If they influence the medium, why does the medium require the concurrence of a circle of friends to be influenced by the spirits, and that all the members of the circuit be entirely subservient to the medium and remain in (flesh) connection with him until an electric current is formed through which the volition of the whole party can flow to the medium and the consequent ravings of the overstocked medium can find ready access in the minds of those who hav temporarily deprived themselvs of their will power to cooperate in the formation of this huge maniac? Why cannot spirits communicate with their friends without a medium, and why can they not communicate with man in his normal state? Is it not as essential that all these questions be answered before the problem of spirits can be entertained at all, as it is for Christians to explain how an omnipotent and omniscient God could repent of his work before we can accept their Bible as a divinely got-up book?

Mr. Willis angrily exclaims: "Some vicious people attend séances for the express purpose of exposing the medium, etc." If an adversely disposed person can break the circuit and destroy the power of the medium, is this not a plain proof that the medium is controled by the circuit and by nothing else?

A short time ago Miss Gibson wrote a short letter in answer to Mr. Willis. It was so concise, and yet such a complete defeat of Mr. Willis, that I really expected to never hear from that man again.

To my great surprise, the same man is out again with one of his four-column epistles, proudly flourishing his great literary talent quite unconcerned about the damaging challenge of Miss Gibson which he never can meet, and still boasting that "he is perfectly at home on this subject!" At home! yes, like a blind man in a dark room.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 21 I got another surprise from Mr. C. H Green, who does not claim to be a Spiritualist. He says: "I was very sorry that Sister Ella Gibson did not choose to tell Brother Willis what she has so long known about that mysterious force, that she is so sure spirits hav nothing to do with."

The very letter that I took to be a death-blow to Spiritualism, Mr. Green understood as throwing up the gauntlet. In that letter Miss Gibson had told Mr. Willis to explain to the satisfaction of intelligent, scientific people how all those phenomena were produced by the help of spirits, and she would explain how all the same tricks can be performed without the help of spirits.

Is this not a fair offer? To be consistent, should not Mr. Willis hold his peace until that nut is cracked?

Behold a parallel case: Moses cast his rod on the ground and it become a serpent. The magician did likewise with the same result. Moses claims that he performs this wonderful trick by the power of God, and that the magician did it by the power of the devil.

In the eyes of the beholders the two performed alike. The difference claimed is only asserted by Moses himself. Hence no one could ever believe it without committing an injustice upon himself.

Now where, I ask, is the difference between the positions of Moses and Willis?

The medium does a thing that baffles the understanding of the uninitiated, and says it is done by the spirits. The magician does the very same thing and claims there is no spirit about it. I hold that no sane person is justified to believe either on his bare assertion.

The magician proves his assertion by showing us how anyone can do the same tricks. When the medium can prove his claim by substantial evidence or by a rational argument, he will likewise be entitled to credence. Until he does that it is the duty of everyone not willing to be deceived to regard him as a crank or a crook.

Mr. Willis admits that some bogus mediums hav been exposed, but looks upon this fact as a proof that there must be genuin mediums before they can be counterfeited. Fine reasoning that is. I once saw an enormous big man made of marble and exhibited as a petrified giant. It was a counterfeit. Does that prove that such giants did liv once? Not at all. It proves that the idea of a giant is not new but does not at all prove that one ever existed.

There can certainly be no objection in investigating the possibilities of an eternal existence, but this continually trying to palm off their unsupported assertions for accomplished facts is becoming quite intolerable. If I am wrong please let me know, and I will again try to muster up patience enough to patiently suffer the annoyance, since I cannot succeed in comprehending it. CHAS. LAPERCHE.

Space-Filling.

It seems that Mr. Walker, in endeavoring to refute my proposition, never advanced before, that a plethora of souls would ensue in space if the life evolved therein were immortal, has jumped from his Agnostical fence into the most pronounced Spiritualism. Which it grieves me very much to note, seeing that I shall be obliged to shake his overweening confidence in life-everlasting by "hoisting his arguments with his own petard." He tries to evade the main point at issue by reiterating his former figures of the extent of soul-evolution presumably going on in this planet or system, deliberately ignoring the fact to which I hav repeatedly called attention that no matter at what rate souls are evolved a plethora would be the inevitable result. Admit that the life of the higher or lower orders is immortal and how can he reconcile it with the postulate of science, generally accepted, that life has been evolved during all eternity, if not from this planet or system, from the infinit number of systems preceding it, without filling all space an infinit number of times over again, showing the fallacy of this doctrin beyond all doubt, because after the first filling—though there could be no "first" in eternity—soul-evolutions would necessarily hav to cease, which would involve the finiteness of nature. What need, therefore, of wrangling about millions or trillions of years? With his admission that it would "take our solar system twenty-three million years to form a globe (of souls) the size of our earth," can he not comprehend that though it took twenty-three million centuries to form such a globe, nature has the necessary time at her command to fill the entire distances separating us from other systems with such globes? Can this be denied, and does "necessary time" not imply an epoch no matter of what duration it may be, and did an infinit number of such epochs not precede this particular one, and will an infinit number not succeed it? But when space is once filled, as it must evidently be at some time, seeing that spirits are supposed to be an imponderable matter occupying the same amount of space as when in the flesh, where can any more room be found for the souls subsequently evolved? How insignificant, therefore, Mr. Walker's period when compared to the duration of eternity. "Dame Nature" would laugh it to scorn, if she could. Is the entire life of our planet and of our solar system not to her as that of a single individual is to us? Are solar systems not individuals to her, preceding and succeeding each other ad infinitum? And to figure on what nature can accomplish in a paltry hundred trillion centuries, and pit such an insignificant period against eternity, what folly!

But Mr. Walker thinks he can invalidate these propositions by the "axiomatic truth which I [he] stated in my [his] former communication in these words, viz: 'It is a self-evident proposition that if you continue to giv, without any equivalent being returned, the supply will ultimately be exhausted,'" and that "this principle applies to all products, spirits not excepted." Is it possible that this axiomatic truth has been revolving all this time in his mind without his perceiving how fatal it is to the doctrin he upholds? He says I ignored it. So I did, but the reason was that I thought I had stretched the editor's patience to its utmost extent in one article. But now that Mr. Walker has given me the opportunity not to ignore it the second time, I will work this "axiomatic truth" for all it is worth, "biling it down" at the same time.

A Materialist might hav advanced this axiomatic truth as an unanswerable argument against Spiritism; but how a votary of life-everlasting can adduce it in defense of his doctrin passes my comprehension. "If you giv without any equivalent being returned, the supply will be ultimately exhausted." Well, doesn't nature, or "matter" (so-called), not giv, yield, or evolve souls or spirits according to spirit-philosophy, and would therefore, seeing that no equivalent is claimed to be returned for these spirits, the supply or source from which they were drawn or derived, not ultimately became exhausted? In other words, would nature or matter not become extinct if spirits were continually evolved from it, seeing that no parts of these spirits are ever returned? What plainer and more unanswerable argument to show the fallacy of immortality could be adduced? It is the very principle of the law of the conservation of energy which teaches that "matter" can neither be increased nor diminished by one atom, but as spirits are presumed to be matter is the sum total of it, therefore, not constantly augmented in space, seeing that nature's matter eternally yields soul-substance without ever receiving an equivalent in return, and holding her own at the same time? It cannot be possible that he means that as spirits increase in space, matter diminishes, so that, after space is full of spirits, there will be no matter to produce any more from. His instancing that if a fertil field were not constantly replenished with fertilizers, it would soon become a barren desert, almost points in that direction. From which I conclude that he actually believes Dame Nature intends to commit suicide, or degenerate to a barren, impotent state, after she has given birth to a certain number of souls. That this would be the result if she evolved souls at all, is self-evident, but that these facts should be cited in support of the spirit-doctrin, when they sound its death-knell, is a mystery beyond my capacity to solve. He says in elucidation of his proposition that "If the earth furnishes the material from which spirits are evolved and none of it is returned, the supply will be exhausted and the production cease as certainly as if it were a grosser substance. It seems difficult," he continues to say, "by any illustration to make this proposition plainer." Yes, it is perfectly plain. I don't ask anything plainer to show the utter absurdity, from a scientific and rational standpoint, of the doctrin of everlasting life. If the earth, or nature (for the earth without nature could not "giv" anything), furnishes the material from which spirits are evolved, and none of it is returned, the supply will be exhausted and the production cease. Hence spirit evolution implies that the material furnished by any planet, or nature, will finally be exhausted, and then she may as well "shut up shop." If he or anyone else can make anything else of his "proposition" (!) I would gladly be apprised of it.

Hoping that he will learn to be content with the only life nature is able to bestow, so as not to unreasonably yearn for a "next," I remain as ever, etc.,

Death in the Communion Wine-Cup.

Concerning the inquiry by F. G. McCauley in your last issue: "Are there any well-authenticated cases of persons rescued from the drink habit relapsing into it through the use of fermented wine at the communion-table?" I will say that I had a step-father who was a reformed drunkard, and for a time lectured upon temperance. He remained sober for about nine years. He removed from the East to the West, where he joined the church, but absented himself, or declined to partake of the sacrament for fear of bringing back that appetite for strong drink. This caused remarks among the church people (who knew not the reason for his abstaining) that all was not right at heart with the man, which reached his ears, and caused him to yield and partake of the sacrament, which brought back that strong appetite, and, after several other attempts to reform, carried him to his grave.

I could giv cases where the sacramental wine (which is by some denominations taken weekly) has led to drunkenness and poverty.

I do not see how people can consistently advocate the cause of temperance and sanction the motto, "Touch not, taste not, handle not," and put the sacramental wine to their lips. WM. HART.

Twenty-One Conundrums.

1. If, at the last day, "all the dead shall be raised up with the self same bodies and none other" (Presbyterian Confession of Faith, p. 165), in what shape will the missionaries appear who hav been eaten by the cannibals in the Fiji islands?

2 Now, as the bodies of the missionaries hav been eaten by the cannibals, they in turn compose part of the bodies of the cannibals. Now, if the missionaries appear in their self same bodies, how can the cannibals appear in their self-same bodies, which are composed in part by missionaries?

3. How are we to understand the language Jesus used, if the three are one, when he said, "O father, if it be possible, let this cup pass," etc., "but not my will but thy will be done," showing clearly they had two wills at least?

4. If the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one, how did the killing of Jesus affect the other two?

5. If Christ died to save the sons of Adam, did he die to save himself, as he was one of the same race?

6. If the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one, then Jesus must be his own father.

7. If the father or Holy Ghost is Jesus's father, how can Jesus be of the line of David through Joseph?

8. If Joseph is Jesus's father, how can Jesus be the only son of God?

9 How could Jesus be the only begotten son of God if the sons of God cohabited with the daughters of men, as stated in Gen. vi, 4?

10. "Fear not to take unto thee Mary, thy wife, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost." Then why is Jesus called God's only son?

11. If God created man in his own image (Gen. i, 27), is man in God's image yet, as the Bible says that God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam (Gen. ii, 21), and he took out one of his ribs to make Eve? Now, if he was in God's image before the surgical operation, how can he be the same now?

12 Adam was told that, on the day that he eat of the tree of knowledge, he would surely die, yet he lived nine hundred and thirty years.

13. If God created the world and all that in it is, in six days, how long were the days before the sun and stars were made?

14. If of twenty-four hours each day, how were they calculated or measured?

15 If, as some say, a day was a thousand years, would not the days that Christ was said to be in the tomb represent several thousand years?

16. If Christ was several thousand years in the tomb, how was it that his mother, the Marys, and his disciples were living at the time of his resurrection and crucifixion too?

17. If God created all things for his pleasure (Rev. iv, 11), why should he repent that he made man?

18 If God be omnipotent, why should he be grieved at what he knew would come to pass?

19. If the command to man to love your enemies be just and right, should not mankind love the devil, as he is said to be man's greatest enemy?

20. It says in the Bible, "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." And again it says, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Now, were Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob all living on the earth at one time?

21. If ignorance is more desirable than wisdom, why hav schools and colleges to educate the masses? See Eccl. i, 18: "For in much wisdom is much grief, and he that increaseth in knowledge increaseth in sorrow." WM. LEWIS.

Items of Foreign Freethought News.

Mr. Carl Scholl, Nürnberg, has been found guilty of blasphemy by the court of that city. The wicked expressions appeared in an article on "Christianity and Education," by Amedee Jacques, published by Mr. Scholl in his magazine, Es Werde Licht Twenty-five years ago the same article was published in the magazine Freie Stimmen, but was not deemed blasphemous enough to call for the arrest of anybody.

The official bigotry in Prussia is something surprising. We see in Das Menschenthum that a teacher's certificate was denied a young lady, Miss Mary Braun, of Düsseldorf, although she had passed the examination ahead of everyone else, only because she was not a church-member and positivly refused to join any of the two hundred and fifteen different Christian sects. Yet the young lady can deem herself fortunate, since she escaped imprisonment for irreverent conduct.

Editor Grimpe, of Elberfeld, has been sentenced to two months' imprisonment for "insulting Catholic church institutions." It appears that Mr. Grimpe wrote an article on "The Terrible Doings of Monk Orders." The Prussian law guarantees liberty of speech, press, and illustration, and of scientific pursuit, and the article in question was strictly historical, but Mr. Grimpe was found guilty. It is the old story of flirtation between church and state. When will people wake up and cause their total separation?

Three new Freethought societies hav been formed in Belgium during the past month, and money subscriptions for the erection of a monument for César de Paepe increase in number as well as in amount. Leon Furnemont, editor of La Raison, proves himself an excellent member of the executiv committee. To giv our readers an idea of the spirit of the Belgian Freethinkers we cite the following data as to the little Freethought society at Souvert. It was formed Dec. 2, 1888, with eighteen members, and has now fifty-three; it has registered seven civil marriages and thirteen births, and eight more civil marriages are announced to come off before the summer has passed.

In Sweden the Freethought movement is spreading. Mr. V. Lennstrand has now entirely recovered from the illness that he contracted while imprisoned, and he travels from place to place lecturing to ever-increasing audiences. Captain Thomson, on whose shoulders hav fallen the business part of the movement and the management of Fritänkaren—which excellent paper we heartily recommend to our Scandinavian friends—is not heard of so much. His business confines him to one place. Still, now and then he takes time enough to deliver a lecture in some city. Our Swedish friends can but congratulate themselvs on having with them a man like Captain Thomson, for had it not been for his superior business qualifications the Swedish Freethought movement would not be what it is to-day. We may add that that movement has received a great boom from a very unexpected quarter. The boomer is no one but the bigoted little King Oscar II. According to Stockholms-Tidningen the king resolved, in a cabinet meeting held April 10th, to banish Henry V. Berghell from Sweden. Mr. Berghell, who, as our readers are aware, is at present serving a three months' sentence for blasphemy, is a Finn by birth and has been in Sweden only a few years. Mass-meetings hav been held in various cities of Sweden protesting against this new royal attempt to degrade Sweden in the eyes of foreign countries. The royal decree is condemned by the press, with very few exceptions, and especially by the Stockholm papers. The latest case of banishment took place in 1850 when the Baptist minister F. I Nilson and a couple of others were sent across the border; it caused a tremendous sensation, and loyal Swedes hoped that that would be the last time Sweden would be thus degraded. The recent decree proves the contrary; only now it is not Christians but Freethinkers who are banished. Subscriptions are being gathered in for Mr. Berghell, and a monster protest, signed by some of the most eminent lights of the Swedish scientific and literary world, is being circulated. What the outcome will be we do not know, but we do know that it will prove a boom to the Freethought movement, and that the blush of shame covers the face of every Scandinavian-American when he reflects that "gammla Sverige" is trying to occupy the position of Russia number two. We ourselvs are glad that we are not born in the domain of King Oscar the little.

Will the Trustees Yield?

From the Herald.

A popular cause triumphs, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, with all its superb treasures, will surely be thrown open to the wage-workers of the city on Sunday.

It is now announced semi-officially that the sub committee of the executiv committee of the board of trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art will, at their meeting on May 18th, report favorably to the board on the question of opening the Museum to the working men and women of the city on Sundays.

This information comes from a trustee who is thoroughly cognizant of the details of the report that will be submitted to the board. For obvious reasons he does not wish to hav his name appear as revealing the secrets of a committee room, but the information he givs cannot be questioned.

The sub-committee will recommend first, the opening of the Museum upon every Sunday in the year, between the hours of 1 o'clock in the afternoon and dusk. Moreover, they will go a long way beyond this, and recommend that the Museum be thrown open to the public on every day of the year.

To accomplish this object entails an absolute and complete change in the financial department of the Museum, and in fact a revolution in the entire policy by which it has been governed. It necessitates a provision of money from the city, and for that reason the proposition which is thus briefly outlined will be submitted to the city authorities as soon as it has been adopted by the board of trustees at their next meeting.

Of necessity some time will elapse before the city can act in the matter. The people will accept the generous proposition of the public-spirited citizens who will thus place one of the grandest collections of art in the world at the free disposal of the public of New York. Meanwhile money is necessary to accomplish the object the Herald has undertaken—that of opening the museum during the months of June, July, August, and September.

Since the board of trustees hav responded so nobly to the voice of the people, it is only right that the public should come forward with their contributions.

The time of the year the Museum is most accessible to the working men and women of the city is during the summer months. Four thousand dollars is needed to do this. Come forward with your money, then, and don't let the poor of the city be longer denied the privilege of witnessing the noble works of art.

Central park was alive with the families of orderly and intelligent working men and women last Sunday. The mall, the carrousel, the meadows, and every available spot was black or parti colored with the throng that went there to enjoy the beautiful scenery and to seek recreation after a week of toil.

They gazed upon the animals in the menagerie with delight, looked at the beautiful natural and artificial landscape, and passed a glorious day in the bright sunlight and on the soft green sward. They even looked at the few bits of statuary and busts of eminent men that the park contains with pleasure. A curious crowd of large proportions gathered around the foot of the ancient obelisk and tried to decipher the hieroglyphics on its face.

None of them felt the more wicked for so doing, and yet they were denied the privilege—and hav been for years—of witnessing representations of landscapes, sculpture, and curiosities within the walls of the Museum.

Some people did enter the Museum, but they were not the poor. They were the wealthy friends of influential members of the board of trustees and members of the institution itself. It is safe to say that these latter, too, had no feeling of having sinned when they left the structure. While the poor men and women hav but one day in the week upon which it is possible for them to inspect the contents of the Museum to advantage, they were denied the privilege which was accorded to the wealthy, who hav leisure to devote to such study during six other days.

It is pleasant to contemplate that this shameful inconsistency is likely soon to be corrected.

Hebrew Polytheism.

It is generally conceded by intelligent persons that a careful study of nature's operations affords but very little presumptiv evidence in favor of any known form of Theism; but it is not so generally understood that the Bible itself, in the hands of its ablest apologists, constitutes a very far from consistent and intelligible representation of any believable scheme of theological faith. In fact, if the statements of leading theologians are to be credited, God is about as hard to find by turning the leaves of the holy book as by turning the leaves of the book of nature.

Says Neander: "God reveals himself in his word as he does in his works. In both we see a self-revealing, self-concealing God, who makes himself known only to those who earnestly seek him; in both we find stimulants to faith and occasions for unbelief; in both we find contradictions whose higher harmony is hidden, except from him who givs up his whole mind in reverence; in both, in a word, it is a law of revelation that the heart of man should be tested in receiving it, and that in the spiritual life as well as in the bodily, man must eat his bread in the sweat of his brow" (Life of Christ, Preface to first edition).

The author's idea seems to be that if a man would find conclusiv evidence of a God, either in nature or revelation, he must subordinate his reason to his reverence, and then toil, sweat, and agonize till he succeeds in working his faith up to the believing point. The same plan would evidently suffice to excite belief in any existing or imaginable scheme of religion.

We are commonly informed by Christian people that the Bible is a product of the benevolence of God, who saw that man could not, unaided, discover in his surroundings sufficient proof of the existence and goodness of deity, and who therefore concluded to inspire good men to write a book in which these essential matters of belief would be made so plain that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, might not err" in the faith. But how great must be the discouragement of the would-be believer when he learns from such eminent Christian authority as the great Neander, that only by "a base abandonment of reason," by forced reverence, by toil and sweat, can "the higher harmonies" of God's book be discovered! Says Prof. Moses Stuart, "whose candor," says Dr. Haley, "was commensurate with his erudition:" "In our present copies of the scriptures there are some discrepancies between different portions of them, which no learning nor ingenuity can reconcile" (Critical History and Defense of the Old Testament Canon, p. 179).

The polytheistic import of many portions of the Bible seem to cause especial perplexity to the commentator. Thus Dr. Haley, after admitting the curious fact that Gen. i, 26; iii, 22, "hav the word for 'God' in the plural form," turns for help to his assistants, as follows: "Gesenius considers this a 'plural of excellence or majesty;' Nordheimer, a 'plural of preëminence;' Baumgarten, a 'numerical plural, originally denoting God and angels together;' Delitzsch, a 'plural of intensity;" Fuerst, as used 'because the ancients conceived of the deity as an aggregate of many infinit forces;' Bush thinks the plural implies 'greater fulness, emphasis, and intensity of meaning;' Lange takes it as denoting 'intense fulness;' and Hengstenburg says, 'It calls attention to the infinit riches and the inexhaustible fulness contained in the one divine being;' Ewald says, 'It was an antique usage, more especially in this Semitic tribe, to designate God, as also every other superior, externally by a plural form, by which no more than the sense of a kind of dignity and reverence was simply expressed.' As to the plural pronouns 'us' and 'our,' which God here employs, Aben Ezra thinks that he addresses the intelligences; Philo, Delitzsch, and others, that he spoke to the angels; Davidson, with Sedaiah a Gaon, that he spoke like a sovereign, 'we, the king;' Kalisch, Tuch, and Bush, in substance, deem it the plural 'employed in deliberations and self-exhortations;' Maimonides asserts that God is addressing the earth or the nature already created; Keil, that he is speaking of and with himself in the plural number 'with reference to the fulness of the divine powers and essences which he possesses.' On the other hand, Lange thinks the phraseology may 'point to the germinal view of a distinction in the divine personality,' and Murphy, that it indicates a plurality of persons or hypostases in the divine being'" (Doctrinal Discrepancies, pp. 60, 61).

Thus it appears that the voices of the commentators are somewhat discordant and Babel-like. But the Bible plainly says, "The Gods created the heavens and the earth," "And the Gods said, Let us make man in our image." And "the man is become as one of us." How could there be "one" of "us," and yet only one God speaking to himself? And how could God thus properly address any beings totally unlike himself, as angels, earth, created nature, etc., as some of the commentators suppose? Not one of the writers elucidates the question in the slightest degree. Each of their explanations needs explaining. The passages show plainly that the writer, whoever he was, did not believe in one, but in many gods.

It is also said that God gave the law to Moses; but St. Stephen says (Acts vii, 53) that the Jews received the law from the angels, and elohim is often translated angels in the Old Testament.

In Gen. xviii, 1–3, Abraham worshiped three angels as Lord. Haley says, of "three men—superhuman beings in the form of men—the patriarch appeared [how does he know?] to single out one as prëeminent among the three, whom he addressed as 'my Lord.' Keil says, 'Jehovah and two angels, all three in human form.' Murphy says, 'It appears that of the three men, one, at all events, was the Lord, who, when the other two went toward Sodom, remained with Abraham while he went with Sodom, and afterward he also went his way.' Lange says, 'Abraham instantly recognizes among the three the one whom he addresses as the Lord in a religious sense, who afterward appears as Jehovah, and was clearly distinguished from the two accompanying angels.'"

If Abraham was so accustomed to seeing God that he could instantly recognize him when seen among others, his eyesight must hav been considerably better than that of Moses, who was only allowed to gaze upon Jehovah's back parts, the Lord saying to him, "Thou canst not see my face and liv." It seems rather singular that Jehovah and the other two should be spoken of in exactly the same terms, as "men" and "angels," but the commentators make the subject so plain that it must be a sin to doubt. They tell us that Jehovah only was addressed as Lord, and that he remained with Abraham while the others went to Sodom to see Lot. But how does it happen that, as Abraham found a God among the three, Lot finds a God among the two, addressing him as "My Lord?" (Gen. xix, 18). Could those old patriarchs, by the exercise of some magical power, transform an angel into a Jehovah whenever they wished? or did the word "God" then only signify a chief angel? It seems as though whichever took the lead as actor or spokesman might properly be called God.

"Worship him all ye elohim-gods" (Ps. xcvii, 7). "Maimonides and David Kimchi say that the word elohim in this case means angelic powers" (Discrepancies, p. 62). Then the "angelic powers" created the heavens and the earth, and said, "Let us make man in our image." "Alexander and Hengstenburg explain it as meaning false gods." But false gods are idols, and Paul says an idol is nothing. Is it likely that Jehovah would inspire men to coax or command false gods to worship him? Delitzsch defines elohim here to mean "the superhuman powers deified by the heathen." The Jews were the heathen, then, for the Syriac Peshito reads, "Worship him all ye his angels."

There is another text (Gen. xlviii, 15, 16) which, considered in its most reasonable and literal construction, imports the existence of a plurality of Gods. The word angel here is not from elohim, but from a Hebrew word which means an agent or messenger. Jacob affirms this angel to be the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, yet his own guardian angel. If this God of Abraham and Isaac was an agent, there must hav been a superior divinity. It could not hav been the son of God, for the writer of Hebrews says that God, who formerly spake through the prophets, had now first spoken to the world by his son. Besides, the bold charge of tritheism preferred against the trinitarians by Swedenborg still remains unrefuted. Just try to imagin a God who is everywhere, yet equally exists in three separate persons, and is one supreme God, his own messenger between himself and his patriarchs! Can a person carry a message from himself to some one else without changing his local position? Can a principal who transacts all of his own business and performs all his own errands be said to employ an agent? or is he his own agent? In short, how can a person be at the same time his own agent and his own principal?

Now, is it not plain that, if the elohim (plural) created the heavens and the earth; if the elohim said, "Let us make man in our image;" if David could say, by divine inspiration or by his superior knowledge of Hebrew theology, "Worship him [God] all ye elohim;" if Jacob could properly describe the god of Abraham, Isaac, and himself as an angel, agent, or messenger; and if St. Stephen could declare with his dying breath that the angels brought the law to Moses—I say, is it not plain that, if all of this is true, either the Jews never had any knowledge of a supreme being, a god proper, or that they had and worshiped during a long period a multitude of gods? Both of these propositions may be true; and if either one is, the doctrin of inspiration, and with it Christianity, certainly stands upon a logical vacuum. The truth undoubtedly is, that the Jews found their search after a god as unavailing as others hav found it; and they worshiped they knew not what. Jesus exhorted them to search the scriptures, but they had long before asked in despair, "Can man by searching find out God?" And Solomon appears to regard the search as being useless, for he says, "Be not righteous over much, neither make thyself over wise: why shouldst thou destroy thyself?" Although the Jews had gradually abandoned polytheism, and, like the Greeks, adopted in its place the idea of one supreme being, the wisest of them regarded God as an object of faith only. They did not pretend to be able to prove his existence. At first they imagined gods were as plentiful as stars: at last they were content if there might be one left, and dared no longer assert that he had ever been seen.

Were the Chaldeans Irish?

The serpent symbol is one of the oldest extant and comes down to us as the first distinctiv symbol of the creation. The man and the woman, being created and established in possession of the land, were confronted with the serpent at the outset. This is the Jewish account and is received by the Christian people as a literal fact. But a little close analysis of these Jewish scriptures will show that during the course of their development from a nomad tribal people to an organized hierarchy and nationality they had various successiv stages of belief and alterations of creed.

There was a continual war or party fight between the conservativ Moloch or Chronos Saturn worshipers and the followers of Baal, the sun god. The worship of Ashtoreth Ishtar or Astarte, the queen of heaven, was varied with that of Ramphan or Mars and Chemosh or Jupiter. They had their high places (druidic circle temples) and their sacred groves. They had bulls, Pegasean horses of the sun, serpent symbols, and all that is commonly denoted as heathenism alternately as a creed.

This came to an end with captivity. The nation was driven at the spear's point out of the land into a strange country into slavery. Their gods, their books and records, were left behind. The rapacious soldiery plundered them of their wealth, and those that survived the long and toilsome march brought nothing with them but a memory of the past. In a laborious captivity of one hundred and fifty years this had faded into tradition which had become blended with the myths of the land where they toiled in slavery and ignorance. Then came liberation and a return to the land of their fathers. But the Hebrews were strangers in the country which had belonged to them. Esdras was the mind that planned for them. Esdras wove a fabric of religion for them out of the fragmentary myths of the land of their captivity. But to stamp it with divine authority he gave out that he had been through a remarkable supernatural experience (see Esdras, book 2, chap. x, etc.).

Now, the conservators of religion in Babylon were, the Chaldeans or Chaldees, who erroneously are supposed to hav been a nation because reference is made to the land of Ur—Ur of the Chaldees, etc. Assyrians, Babylonians, etc., are all well defined, but in politics only we find reference to the Chaldean magicians and astrologers. Now, by referring to our northern history we find that Ur or Ir was the ancient name of Ireland, and is derived from aur (gold). Eur Inis (Golden Isle) is the original form of Erin. And Culdee, or Chaldee, was the name commonly given to the druid priests until the last of them passed away at Iona.

"I SAY unto you that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man . . . take away thy coat, let him hav thy cloak also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain" (Matt. v, 39–41). "Put up thy sword, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. xxvi, 52). "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. v, 5). The doctrin of non-resistance would mean nothing but the destruction of the gentler and finer races and the rampant tyranny of the stronger; the reign of violence, not of peace.—W. R. Greg.

AMERICAN STATE PAPERS bearing on Sunday Legislation. Edited by Wm. Addison Blakely, Counselor-at-law, Ann Arbor, Mich. Cloth, octavo, pp. 368. Price, $2 50.

This book is a veritable thesaurus on the question of religious legislation. It contains the views of the founders of our government and of America's greatest statesmen on what promises to become the most prominent political question of the day. It contains writings of Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, Patrick Henry, John Adams, Colonel Johnson, Senator Blair, Dr. A. H. Lewis, and many others. It adds notes from Roger Williams, George Washington, Herbert Spencer, John Stuart Mill, George Bancroft, General Grant, Lord Macaulay, and many others. Among the documents are bills of rights, constitutions, treaties, statutes, memorials, petitions, reports, etc. In addition to the foregoing features, it contains, in whole or in part, the decisions of the supreme courts of the states of Ohio, California, Missouri, Wisconsin, and Arkansas, on the question of the constitutionality of Sunday laws, and of the reading of the Bible in the public schools, with numerous notes from various other decisions in England and America. Jefferson's disquisition on the common law and Christianity is the most important paper on the subject which appeared during the last century. Another valuable feature of the book is the presentation of all the Sunday laws of the United States, accurately transcribed in full from the original statute books of the several states and territories. Also, all the provisions of the state constitutions guaranteeing or restricting religious liberty. Thus it is an invaluable compendium to every person in the United States who is in any way interested in the question of "Sunday laws or no Sunday laws."

FORCE AND MATTER; or, Principles of the Natural Order of the Universe, with a System of Morality based thereon. A Popular Exposition. THE SOUL OF MAN. By Dr. Paul Carus. Chicago: Open Court Pub. Co. Pp. 435. Price, $3.

This volume contains several informing chapters on psychological topics, presenting them, its advertisment says, "in their connection with philosophy, physical science including mechanics, physiology, experimental psychology (hypnotism, etc.), religion, and ethics." As to the "religion" in the foregoing category, we think that there is nothing to be said on its connection with the mind of man except by way of exposition of how it came to delude that mind, and how it has stunted it. The author, however, insists on more. He wants to hav his "soul of man" harmonized with "God" by a new "religious development." But the accurate information on the latest results of psychological and psycho-physiological investigations is so good that it is far from being irredeemably spoiled by the few specks from the fingers of a religious reconciler.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE.

Of this superb work the Arena says:

The great oration delivered by Colonel Ingersoll for the benefit of Walt Whitman has been brought out by the Truth Seeker Co. in a worthy manner. It is well printed on heavy paper, consists of 50 pages, bound in brown and gold, and contains a fine picture of the "good gray poet." Of this oration it is difficult to speak too highly. It is, in my judgment, one of the greatest and most timely utterances of recent years, and should be in the home of every American who values liberty and appreciates the danger that threatens Freethought in the republic by a class of stealthy, Jesuitical conservatives, who hav imbued the spirit of a cowardly and bloody past, and who are strenuously seeking to foist that spirit upon this generation. In order to giv the reader an idea of this work, I giv the following extracts:

In the republic of mediocrity genius is dangerous. A great soul appears and fills the world with new and marvelous harmonies. In his words is the old Promethean flame. The heart of Nature beats and throbs in his line. The respectable prudes and pedagogs sound the alarm, and cry, or rather screech, "Is this a book for a young person?"

A poem true to life as a Greek statue—candid as nature—fills these barren souls with fear.

Drapery about the perfect was suggested by immodesty.

The provincial prudes, and others of like mold, pretend that love is a duty rather than a passion—a kind of self-denial, not an overmastering joy. They preach the gospel of pretense and pantalets. In the presence of sincerity, of truth, they cast down their eyes, and endeavor to feel immodest. To them the most beautiful thing is hypocrisy adorned with a blush.

They hav no idea of an honest, pure passion, glorying in its strength, intense, intoxicated with the beautiful, giving even to inanimate things pulse and motion, and that transfigures, ennobles, and idealizes the object of its adoration.

They do not walk the streets of the City of Life; they explore the sewers; they stand in the gutters and cry "Unclean!" They pretend that beauty is a snare; that love is a Delilah; that the highway of joy is the broad road, lined with flowers and filled with perfume, leading to the city of eternal sorrow.

Here is a thought which, till recently, all sensible men accepted as axiomatic. Not until our irresponsible censors took to marking here and there a passage in the "Kreutzer Sonata" did a true man suppose that a work of a life was to be judged by a line or an act. The work of the life, whether it leads upward or downward, that is the only true question; whether it is calculated to awaken society and bring about a healthy revolution, or lull it to sleep in the lap of sin.

No writer must be measured by a word, or line, or paragraph. He is to be measured by his work; by the tendency, not of one line, but by the tendency of all.

Which way does the great stream tend? Is it for good or evil? Are the motivs high and noble, or low and infamous?

If I were to edit the great books of the world, I might leave out some lines and I might leave out the best. I hav no right to make of my brain a sieve, and say that only that which passes through belongs to the rest of the human race. I claim the right to choose. I giv that right to all.

"Miracles and Medicin" is the fruitful subject which Dr. Andrew D. White now takes up in his "Warfare of Science" papers in the Popular Science Monthly. The May number contains the first part of this chapter, telling how tales of miraculous cures arose and grew in the Middle Ages, and how the early progress of medical science was hampered by the jealousy of relic-peddlers and theological oracles. In the "atmosphere of theologic thought, medical science was at once checked. The school of Alexandria, under the influence first of Jews and later on of Christians, both permeated with Oriental ideas, and taking into their theory of medicin demons and miracles, soon enveloped everything in mysticism. In the Byzantine empire of the East the same cause produced the same effect: the evolution of ascertained truth in medicin begun by Hippocrates and continued by Herophilus, seemed lost forever. Medical science, trying to move forward, was like a ship becalmed in the Sargasso sea: both the atmosphere about it and the medium through which its progress must be made resisted all movement. Instead of reliance upon observation, experience, experiment, and thought, attention was turned toward supernatural agencies. Especially prejudicial to a true development of medical science among the first Christians was their attribution of disease to diabolic possession. St. Paul had distinctly declared that the gods of the heathen were devils; and everywhere the early Christians saw in disease the malignant work of these dethroned powers of evil. The Gnostic and Manichœan struggles had ripened the theologic idea that at times diseases are punishments by the almighty, but that the main agency in them is satanic. The great fathers and renowned leaders of the early church accepted and strengthened this idea. Origen says: 'It is demons which produce famin, unfruitfulness, corruption of the air, pestilences; they hover concealed in clouds in the lower atmosphere and are attracted by the blood and incense which the heathen offer to them as gods.'" Among the other articles are "Professor Huxley on the Warpath," by the duke of Argyll; "An Experiment in Moral Training," by Dr. Mary V. Lee, and "The Evolution of Patent Medicin," by Lee J. Vance. This valuable magazine is published by Appleton & Co. at $5 per year, 50 cents per number.

"The Popular Religions, and What Shall be Instead." A Discourse delivered in Boston and in sundry other places by Parker Pillsbury. Many of our readers are familiar with this distinguished Abolitionist and veteran in all reforms. There are few truer and better than he. There is no difficulty in understanding his sentences. Each is driven straight to the mark. His plainness and force are those of our good John Peck and John Prescott Guild. In the first part of this work he rains blows upon Christianity on its every side—historic, dogmatic, ethical. The Catholic church, he says in one place, had orders to quit at the Reformation, as Judaism had similar orders nineteen hundred years ago. Now, says Mr. Pillsbury, "the same command has gone forth from the same high source to Protestant Christianity as well. And it will be obeyed. Not that the world's work is yet done, but Christianity has failed utterly, hopelessly, in its performance. It has never even enlightened the world. It has ever been, to the extent of its size and power, a total eclipse to the sunlight of scientific research and investigation, from the days of the Ptolemies in Egypt to Copernicus and Kepler and Sir Isaac Newton, and onward to Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndall in our own day, whom it opposes still. It has not elevated morality and virtue more than it has enlightened the understanding of mankind. Before the giant evils of slavery, intemperance, war, oppression of labor by capital and by caste, oppression of woman by everybody—that sublimation and 'high art' of all slavery; before these and other similar scourges of humanity Christianity has trembled and bowed, has often become chief of sinners, or denied that such were sins at all. And we long ago went away outside the Christian church, and organized other armies and agencies to do battle against these foes of the human race." This writer knows by personal experience what he is talking about. Consult his books narrating his long fight against churchly defense of slavery. The latter pages of this book denounce liquor, tobacco, and lust, and predict a glorious future in which the enemies of man, even death itself, shall perish. The book would suit missionary work. Pp. 26. Price, 10 cents; twelve copies, $1.

The Arena, that interesting magazine which is not afraid to publish the newest thought of the time, in its May number givs three excellent portraits, of M. J. Savage, Julian Hawthorne, and Professor Isaacs. Among the articles are "Russia of To-day," by Prof. Emil Blum; "Is Spiritualism Worth Investigating?" a discussion by Julian Hawthorne and M. J. Savage; "What Is Judaism?" by Prof. Abram Isaacs; "The Survival of Faith," by H. Chapin, M.D.; and "Thomas Jefferson," by E. Powell. In "The Anglo-Saxon 'Unco Guid'" the noted French writer, Max O'Rell, has this paragraph: "In a moment of wounded national pride, Sydney Smith once exclaimed: 'What a pity it is we hav no amusements in England except vice and religion!' The same exclamation might be uttered to-day, and the cause laid at the 'unco guid's' door. It is he who is responsible for the degradation of the British lower classes by refusing to enable them to elevate their minds on Sundays, at the sight of the masterpieces of art contained in the museums, or at the sound of the symphonies of Beethoven and Mozart. They must choose between vice and religion, and as the poor wretches know they are not wanted in the churches, they go to the taverns." And, adds our bright Gallic critic, "All over New England and, indeed, in most parts of America, the same kill-joy, the same gloomy, frowning 'unco' guid' is flourishing, doing his utmost to blot the sunshine out of every recurring Sunday. Yet, Sabbath-keeping is a Jewish institution that has nothing to do with Protestantism." The Arena is 50 cents per number, $5 per year.

"The Reader's Guide in Economical, Social, and Political Science" is a catalog of works on the vital problems of society, politics, and labor. Its titles include not only the leading works by American and English authors, but those in French and German. In addition, recent magazine articles bearing upon political questions are mentioned, and full references are given to government publications. Three brief reading courses are planned for youths, for readers in a second stage of progress, and for students. An appendix shows in summary the courses in political and economic science offered in the leading colleges to both men and women. The little volume photographs in a most interesting way every existing means of education in American citizenship; it will serve to advance that education by giving trustworthy guidance. It contains 170 pages. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Price in cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

The Freethinkers' Magazine for April presented the following interesting contents: Portrait of the Horace Seaver Monument, as a frontispiece. "Life and Career of Charles Bradlaugh," by George Jacob Holyoake; "The Evolution of the Devil," by Ex-Rev. Henry Frank; "Spiritualism," by Lyman C. Howe; "Shall the Bible be Read in the Public Schools?" by Richard B. Westbrook, LL.D; "The Samarian on Change," by Moncure D. Conway; "The Secular School Manual on Morality," by Ida C. Craddock; "The Dirge of the Sea," by Voltairine DeCleyre; A poem, "Dwight L. Moody," by Parker Pillsbury; "Doubt," by "Agnosticus," and much other valuable matter. For sale at this office. Price, 20 cents.

We hail with rejoicing every contribution to the development or popularization of the great doctrin of Evolution. When Christians ask what Freethinkers hav done, the citation of the discovery of this tremendous principle will alone be sufficient to strike them into silence. Appleton & Co. hav begun the publication of an "Evolution Series." No. 1 consists of a biography of the eminent laborer in evolutionary discovery, Alfred Russell Wallace, and an exposition of his views, by Edw. Cope, Ph.D. Its matter is excellent, and a portrait is prefixed. In No. 2 Ernst Haeckel's personality and doctrins are well handled by T. B. Wakeman. This book also contains a portrait of the distinguished furtherer of science and enemy of religion who forms its subject. The technicalities of these works are few. We recommend them warmly. They are neatly printed and bound. Price, 10 cents per number.

A "Social Science Library" has been started by the Humboldt Publishing Co. In No. 1 J. Thorold Rogers recounts the history of "Six Centuries of Work and Wages." No. 2 is a reprint of the famous and valuable consideration of "Socialism" by the distinguished John Stuart Mill. High praise is deserved by both. The volumes are a handsome 12mo, with large type and illuminated cover. Pp., No. 1, 160; No. 2, 214. Price, 25 cents each. The volumes are also furnished in cloth at 75 cents apiece.

Zola's latest novel, "Money," has been published in translation by Benj. R. Tucker, of Boston. Its scene is the speculating and financial sphere in Paris. The data, like those of all Zola's novels, are collected by the laborious realist from actual life, and may be received as faithful and instructiv. In the attractiv guise of fiction the work offers a valuable exposition of the seething, dazzling, and trying financial life of our time. Pp. 435. Portrait. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

"Looking Forward" is a book for young men, counseling as to "their interest and success." It says some sensible things as to the young man's "physical and mental equipment, his friends, his business, his politics, his money, his habits, pleasures, reading, home, etc." The worth of the book suffers a certain depreciation from the sprinkling of religion applied by its author, Rev. George Weaver. New York: Fowler & Wells Co. Pp. 218; cloth. Price, $1.

The time-proved friend of ourselvs and al Freethinkers, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., prints in one 10-cent pamphlet the two treatises, "Food—What's Best to Eat;" and "Everybody's Health Primer, about ordinary habits of living favorable to maintaining health, and essential in regaining it." We are willing to think that the worthy doctor displays in medicin the same sterling sense that he does in Freethought.

Dr. Sheffield, of Nashville, Tenn., advocates homeopathic theory in a pamphlet of homeopathic size. Its 18 pages conclude with the summary: "It is a negativ good to abstain entirely from the use of all kinds of drugs and medicins. It is a positiv good to take infinitesimal homeopathic remedies when sick, for they are certainly curativ." The writer perhaps charges 10 cents for a copy of his brochure.

The dissertation on "The Eleusinian and Bacchic Mysteries" by the learned Thomas Taylor has been issued in a new edition by J. W. Bouton. It is edited, with introduction, notes, emendations, and glossary, by Alex. Wilder, M.D. A. L. Rawson contributes 85 illustrations. The printing and binding are of the finest library style.

"Letters to Farmers' Sons on the Questions of the Day, being Familiar Talks on Politica Economy," is a 25-cent book by Henry Chase, published by the Twentieth Century Co. Its title will afford all necessary indications of its character but one, and that one we will add in the form of the information that it advocates the single tax.

"Ghosts, Devils, Angels, and Sun-gods" is the group of formidable beings against whom Mr. E. C. Kenney declares war in a pamphlet of that name. We say yes to most of its positions. Its 126 pages are afforded at the reasonable price of 25 cents.

"A Song for My Son" is the title of long poem in which George Henry Martin expresses sound Antichristian views that seem to us good for the sons of everybody. London: Watts & Co. Pages, 64; fine paper, full gilt. Price, $2.

"Finger-posts to Truth" is a compilation of gems of Antichristian thought from many authors. It is said that he who first quotes a good thought is but second to him who indites it. London: Watts & Co. Pp. 48. Price, 25 cents.

"The Biography of Dio Lewis," the agitator on medical, hygienic, and educationa reform, has been written by Mary Eastman and published in a $1.50 cloth-bound volum by Fowler & Wells Co.

Important and Urgent.

Those of our subscribers who are in arrears are very strongly urged to forward their renewals at once, as we need money badly. Paper merchants, printers, and landlords cannot be satisfied without cash, and that cash must come from our friends who owe it to us. We hav no other resource. Hundreds are owing us from one to four dollars each, and upon these amounts, small in individual cases, but large in the aggregate, we depend to pay our bills. We hope no one in arrears will longer put off his plain duty.

We hope, too, that our friends everywhere will take sufficient interest in our work and in the paper to make a slight effort to get us some new subscribers. It can be done with a very little effort. Please do it.

Has Christ Risen?

An Illinois friend sends here a copy of one of the Christian Advocates that the Methodist church publishes, in which is an editorial asserting "Christ is Risen." Our friend wants to know if this is so. The Advocate says:

"That our Lord rose from the dead is no longer debatable. No other historical fact has more conclusiv evidence. The witnesses are the two Mary's who, on the first day of the week, came to the tomb, 'found not the body of the Lord Jesus,' and to whom the angel said, 'Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, he is risen;' the soldiers who watched the sepulcher on the morning of the resurrection 'came into the city, and told unto the chief priests all the things that were come to pass;' Peter and John who, to verify the report of the women, 'ran to the tomb, and looking in, saw the linen clothes by themselvs' and all the disciples. To two of them Christ revealed himself on the way to Emmaus. Next he appeared to all except Thomas on the evening of the day on which he rose, when they were assembled with closed doors 'for fear of the Jews,' and 'stood in their midst and said, 'Peace be unto you.' And when he had so said, he showed unto them his hands and his side.' Again, 'after eight days' he appeared unto the disciples, Thomas being present, who, when he had touched the wounds in Christ's hands and side, exclaimed, 'My Lord and my God!' At the sea of Tiberias, Jesus manifested himself to Peter, Thomas, Nathaniel, and the sons of Zebedee and two other disciples when they were together in the boat fishing. Again, at an appointed place in Galilee, 'he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once, of whom,' Paul says, 'the greater part remain unto this present time, but some are fallen asleep.'

"These eye-witnesses saw the risen Christ. The facts recorded by the evangelists are confirmed by apostolic writers. The credibility of their record has never been impeached. The slight variations in their accounts prove that there was no collusion. They had no motiv to testify that Christ had risen if he did not rise. They might indeed hav remained silent, or hav testified exactly the reverse of what they did declare. They suffered bitter persecution unto death because they asserted the resurrection. Men are not apt to die to sanction and vindicate a lie. Nor were the disciples fanatical enthusiasts, deceived by false appearances. The fact that they were at first 'slow of heart to believe,' proves that they were sound of mind. Whence came the supposed false appearances to impose upon their credulity? They had no conceivable motiv to fabricate false accounts of Christ's resurrection and appearances. No impostor would hav dared persecution and death by personating the risen Christ, nor could one hav overcome his doubts and natural aversion to persecution. The more we test the testimony of the apostles to Christ's resurrection, the more impossible it appears that they should be deceived, or that they bore false witness. Moreover, among the original witnesses were thousands, who, on the day of Pentecost and subsequently, received the Spirit, which gift was conditioned upon Christ's resurrection and, therefore, proved it.

"The existing church with its institutions and sacraments, the commemoration of Christ's resurrection by the observance of the first day of the week from its occurrence until now, the fruits of Christ's gospel, all these are monuments to the fact of Christ's resurrection. Against these conclusiv evidences Infidelity hurls its bolts in vain. When all argument is ended, the individual Christian may hav the witness within himself. A heart witness may be as competent as an eye witness of that resurrection."

For a matter which is no longer debatable, literal resurrection is perhaps an event most generally disbelieved in of any of the alleged miracles of Christianity. That Christ was really dead and then came to life and ascended bodily to heaven, is not now generally believed except by the most ignorantly conservativ Christians—those who discard all rationalistic researches and cling faithfully but stupidly to the teaching and traditions of unlearned ancestors.

The allegation which these faithful make is that a certain person called Jesus, and alleged to be the Christ or Messiah for whom the Jews were looking, after being crucified, dead, and buried, became alive, did not die again, but ascended into heaven. Now this is a statement either of an objectiv fact or a subjectiv doctrin—that is, an imaginary thing necessary to complete the Christian scheme. That it is not the former, but is the latter, has now come to be generally recognized by the better class of Christian scholars. As the learned authors of the "Bible for Learners" put it, "when the faith of the apostles and other disciples, recovering from the shock [the execution of Jesus as a malefactor] under which at first it had tottered and collapsed, appeared once more in renovated strength, it took the form of a belief that Jesus had risen up from the dead and ascended to heaven. This is what is generally meant by the 'Resurrection' . . . for, amidst all the doubts that hang around this subject, of one thing at least we may be sure, namely, that it forms a chapter of the inner life of the disciples, not of the outward life of the master. In other words, the resurrection of Jesus is not an external fact of history, but simply a form of belief assumed by the faith of his friends and earliest disciples" (Bible for Learners, vol. iii, pp. 462–3). Scott, in his "English Life of Jesus," though devoting his attention to the historical study of the subject, and not to the subjectiv doctrin of which it is a part, says: "How these narrativs, unhistorical as they hav been shown to be, came into existence, it is not our business to explain; and once again at the end of the task, as at the beginning and throughout, we must emphatically disclaim the obligation. Whether a reasonable hypothesis may be advanced to explain their growth, or whether it may not, the narrativs are still no narrativs of historical fact. It is possible or even likely that in Galilee, when the disciples were removed from the depressing influences of Jerusalem, the idea may hav dawned on their minds that Jesus could not be holden of death, and that for the idea thus awakened they would immediately seek confirmation in the Old Testament scriptures. These might tell them of one whose soul was not left in hell, of a saint who was not permitted to see corruption. With such words they would link those in which the Messiah was, as they supposed, bidden to sit at the right hand of God, until he had made his enemies his footstool. The earlier forms of the tradition giv no precise period during which Christophanies were vouchsafed; but as they were multiplied, it was natural to extend them to the period which was suggested apparently by the fast of the forty days immediately succeeding his baptism. But if he once appeared among his disciples as a conqueror over death and the grave, he must either vanish unseen, or depart from them visibly to resume his majesty in heaven. The gospels giv us chiefly the former notion; the latter is found in the Acts, and carries us at once to the ascent of Elijah on the fiery chariot. As in that narrativ the descent of his prophetical powers on Elisha is made to depend on Elisha's seeing his master taken up, so here the disciples are represented as standing with Jesus at the moment when he is parted from them" (English Life of Jesus, pp. 342–3). And the author of "Supernatural Religion," in considering the matter, says: "The explanation which we offer, and which has long been adopted in various forms by able critics [he cites nearly a score without exhausting the list], is that doubtless Jesus was seen, but the vision was not real and objectiv, but illusory and subjectiv; that is to say, Jesus was not himself seen, but only a representation of Jesus within the minds of the beholders" (Supernatural Religion, pp. 1052–3). But, that there may be no mistaking his position in the matter, the author prefaces the explanation with this caution: "It must be clearly understood that the suggestion of an explanation is quite apart from our examination of the actual evidence for the resurrection. Fifty explanations might be offered and be considered unsatisfactory without in the least degree altering the fact that the testimony for the final miracle of Christianity is totally insufficient, and that the allegation that it actually occurred cannot be maintained" (Supernatural Religion, pp. 1050–1).

Having thus paid some attention to the subjectiv side of this phenomenon, and incidentally shown that it has no historical side, we may briefly refer to the other points asserted by the Advocate. First as to witnesses. There were none. Throwing aside the gospel of John, in the last chapter of which it is related that Peter testified to having seen Jesus in the flesh after his death, and which gospel is acknowledged to be spurious even by those who maintain authenticity for the other gospels, there is no witness at all to the resurrection. On this point Greg says:

"It is clear that to prove such a miracle as the reappearance in life of a man who had been publicly slain, the direct and concurrent testimony of eye-witnesses would be necessary; that two or more should state that they saw him at such a time and place and knew him, and that this clear testimony should be recorded and handed down to us in an authentic document. This degree of evidence we might hav had; this we hav not. We hav epistles from Peter, James, John, and Jude, all of whom are said by the evangelists to hav seen Jesus after he rose from the dead, in none of which epistles is the fact of the resurrection ever stated, much less that Jesus was seen by the writer after his resurrection. This point deserves weighty consideration. We hav ample evidence that the belief in Christ's resurrection was very early and very general among the disciples, but we hav not the direct testimony of any one of the twelve, nor of any eye-witness at all, that they saw him on earth after his death. Many writers say, 'He was seen;' no one says, 'I saw him alive in the flesh'" (Creed of Christendom, p. 284).

Secondly, as to the argument of the so-called witnesses. In all the narrativs of the gospels, the only point of agreement is that when the women went to the sepulcher they found Jesus absent, and a person in a white garment who assured them that he had risen. The four narrativs agree in nothing else, nor do they afford any basis for Paul's dogmatic assertions. Instead of the account being a straightforward affair, as given in the Advocate, it is hopelessly mixed. The differences in the gospel narrativs are thus summed up by Greg:

"They differ as to the number of the women. John mentions only one, Mary Magdalene; Matthew two, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary; Mark three, the two Marys and Salome; Luke several, the two Mary's, Joanna, and 'certain others with them.'

"They differ as to the number of persons in white raiment who appeared to the women. Mark speaks of one 'young man;' Matthew of one 'angel;' Luke of two 'men;' John of two 'angels.' According to John also, the appearance of the two angels was not till Mary's second visit to the tomb, after Peter and John had been there.

"They differ as to the words spoken by the apparitions. According to Matthew and Mark they asserted the resurrection of Jesus and his departure into Galilee, and sent a message to his disciples enjoining them to follow him thither. According to Luke, they simply stated that he was risen, and referred to a former prediction of his to this effect. According to John they only asked Mary, 'Woman, why weepest thou?'

"They differ in another point. According to Matthew, Luke, and John, the women carried the information as to what they had seen at once to the disciples. According to Mark 'they said nothing to any man.'

"They differ as to the parties to whom Jesus appeared. According to Mark it was no one. According to Matthew it was first to the two women, then to the eleven. According to John it was first to one woman, then to the assembled apostles. According to Luke it was first to no woman, but to Cleopas and his companion, then to Peter, and then to the assembled eleven.

"They differ as to the locality. According to Mark it was nowhere. According to Matthew it was first at Jerusalem and then in Galilee, whither the disciples went in obedience to the angelic command. According to Luke it was in Jerusalem and its vicinity, and there alone, where the disciples remained in obedience to the reiterated command of Jesus himself. According to the genuin part of John, also, the appearances were confined to Jerusalem."

But this is not all. We hav, further along, a statement by Paul, which differs from all the others, as follows:

"For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures, and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve; after that he was seen of about five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that he was seen of James, then of all the apostles. And last of all, he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due season."

This, says Greg, "must hav been second-hand, and is valuable only as showing the accounts which were current in the Christian church at the time at which he wrote," and he "puts it to any candid man whether the discrepancies in these accounts are not of a nature, and to an extent, entirely to disqualify them from being received as evidence of anything except the currency and credit of such stories among Christians thirty years after the death of Christ. The evangelists contradict the apostles. Nay, more, they show that the belief of the Christian church was not simple, uniform, and self-consistent, as Paul's statement would lead us to suppose; but that it was singularly vague, various, and self-contradictory. Nay, worse still, they not only show in how many fluctuating shapes it existed, but they suggest how the belief may hav formed itself by specifying a number of the circumstantial details around which it grew and solidified so rapidly. In the epistles and the Acts we find simply the assertion of the fact and evidence to the universal conviction. In the gospels we read the several traditions accepted in the Christian community thirty or more years after the event as to the nature and surrounding context of that event. Now here commences our serious embarrassment; and the embarrassment consists in this, that the new witnesses called—possibly very incompetent ones—make it impossible to arrive at any clear or definit conclusion as to the what or the how. That is to say, we cannot frame any theory whatever as to the resurrection which is not distinctly negatived by one or other of the evangelical accounts" (Greg's Creed of Christendom, pp. 288, 24).

It is seen from these things that the women were no evidence. They spread the news solely on the word of some one else; the soldiers did not see him rise, and it is not even recorded that the person in a white garment was an eye witness to the rising. Even if Peter and John saw the linen clothes, their evidence is too much like that of the minister who brought a stone from Mount Ararat and showed it to the Sunday-school children as proof of the truth of the story of the flood, to be accepted. To those who pin their faith on the travelers who saw Christ on the way to Emmaus, we must say that the assertion only plunges them deeper into trouble—removing the tale further and further from historical ground, and putting it deeper and deeper into the region of myth and allegory. Hear the words of the authors of the "Bible for Learners" on this: "No such place as Emmaus has been found within two leagues of Jerusalem. There is an Emmaus (or Nicopolis) at a distance of six or seven leagues from the City of the Temple, but this cannot be the place intended. There is a bathing-place of the same name on the sea of Gennesareth—and this tempts us to ask whether the scene was not originally laid in Galilee (which really witnessed the reviving faith of the disciples), and subsequently transferred to Jerusalem without change of names. Finally, we may note that Jesus appears in different places—to the two travelers and to Simon—at the same time. But in spite of all these traces of composit origin, the background and general outline of the picture still furnish us with precious materials for retracing the origin of the belief of the disciples in the resurrection; for we must never forget that a powerful imagination, supported by the symbolical forms of expression then current, might well translate reminiscences into present facts, suspense or other emotions into external events" (Bible for Learners, vol. iii, p. 466).

And when he "stood in their midst and said, Peace be unto you," the disciples did not believe it was Jesus, but were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit (Luke xxiv, 37). And according to Luke, the two disciples who had passed many hours in his company, did not recognize him. "Their eyes were holden that they should not know him" (Luke xxiv, 16). According to John (xx, 14) even Mary Magdalene, after Jesus had spoken to her, did not know him. When Jesus made himself manifest to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias (John xxi, 4–6) he was not recognized. "If, then," Greg asks, "he was so changed—so entirely not his former self that they could not recognize him, how could they know that the person assumed to be Jesus was actually their risen Lord?" (Greg's Creed of Christendom, p. 26). Paul's statement is, as we hav seen, secondhand and valueless as history, but is accounted for on the subjectiv doctrin theory. "In speaking of the 'resurrection,' he does not mean the reanimation of the body of Jesus; and indeed he expressly excludes such a thought by ascribing to the Christ a glorified and spiritual body not made of flesh and blood (1 Cor. xv, 42–54; 2 Cor. v, 1–4; Phil. iii, 21). It is equally certain that he thinks of the Christ as having appeared from heaven; and his ranking the appearance to himself—unquestionably the product of his own fervid imagination (compare 2 Cor. xii 1–4)—as parallel with those which preceded it, seems to indicate that they were all visions alike. And indeed the return to earth of one already dead and glorified, or the veritable apparition of a spirit is a thing which far transcends the limits of credibility. And, besides, we know that the Israelites, though well aware of the difference between a vision and something seen under ordinary conditions (see, for instance, Acts ix, 7; x, 10, 11, 17, 19), were yet firmly convinced that what they saw in the ecstasy of a vision had an objectiv reality corresponding to it (see 2 Kings vi, 17; 2 Cor. xii, 3). It may deserve our attention also that in this passage Paul first supports the faith in the resurrection of Jesus by an appeal to the scripture (1 Cor. xv, 4), and subsequently confirms it by a reductio ad absurdum (1 Cor. xv, 12 19). In other words, he is more inclined to demonstrate that Christ must hav risen than to build upon adequate testimony to the fact that he had risen" (Bible for Learners, vol. iii, pp. 467–8). Paul believed that he had seen Jesus after death; there is no evidence that he ever saw him during his life (Supernatural Religion, p. 1048).

This, we think, pretty effectually disposes of the evidence cited by the Advocate. Instead of the apostolic writers and the evangelists confirming each other's statements, they mix the case inextricably, for "we cannot frame any theory whatever as to the resurrection which is not distinctly negatived by one or other of the evangelical accounts." Their records impeach each other by variations impossible of reconciling. They were ignorant, superstitious, credulous men, and the accounts of the whole matter are simply traditions. Martyrs prove nothing; faith proves nothing. Assertions are easily made; and the value the Advocate editor sets upon tangible evidence is seen in his closing sentences—"when all argument is ended, the individual Christian may hav the witness within himself. A heart-witness may be as competent as an eye-witness of that resurrection!" Such a man can prove anything.

But there is an argument against the truth of the alleged resurrection which the church writers always overlook. We hav alluded to the spuriousness of the last chapter of John. There are other admittedly spurious parts of the four gospels. And to crown all, the gospels in their entirety are anonymous and of no worth as establishing anything historically. Biblical criticism has settled that none of the men wrote the gospel bearing his name, and that none of the gospels was in existence for nearly one hundred and twenty years after the alleged resurrection miracle occurred. This is the opinion, not of the opponents of Christianity but of its friends, and the best biblical scholars Protestantism has produced. Catholicism never produced a real scholar. The Acts of the Apostles, too, is equally removed in time from the scenes it describes, and is consequently as valueless as the four gospels. Add to this, the indisputable fact that these books contradict each other, and we see at once how unreliable and worthless is any argument for the resurrection which does not go outside of the gospels. But if they were as harmonious as they are discordant their unknown authorship and distance of writing from the time of the alleged occurrences would invalidate their statements. And again, the belief that a dead man rose from the dead, and appeared to several persons, truthfully says the writer of "Supernatural Religion" (p. 1050), is at once disposed of on abstract grounds. The alleged occurrence is contrary to universal experience; but on the other hand the prevalence of defectiv observation, mistaken inference, self-deception, and credulity, any of which might lead to such belief, are only too well known to it. Appearances, says Greg (page 360), all testify to the reality and permanence of death; a fearful onus of proof lies upon those who contend that these appearances are deceptiv. When we interrogate the vast universe of organization, we see, not simply life and death, but gradually growing life, and gradually approaching death. After death, all that we hav ever known of a man is gone; all we hav ever seen of him is dissolved into its component elements; it does not disappear, so as to leave us at liberty to imagin that it has gone to exist elsewhere, but is actually used up as materials for other purposes. So completely is this the case that, as Sir James Mackintosh observes, "the doctrin of a resurrection could scarcely hav arisen among a people who buried their dead."

The consensus of the intelligent world, then, rejects the story of the resurrection for three reasons. First. That the resurrection of a dead man is contrary to all natural laws and all human experience. Second. If the accounts we hav of it were all written by the men and at the time alleged, their inconsistencies, contradictions, and discrepancies of statement would render their evidence of no value. Third. That the tale is found in books of whose authorship we know nothing, and they are therefore entitled to no credence. On the other hand, we know that the books were written in an ignorant and superstitious age when men believed in the miraculous and thought no event too strange to be true. The writers had an object, and that object was to set up their religion. They were probably priests. One of these, a church father, asserted that he believed a statement because it was impossible. A resurrection from the dead was just nothing for them to believe, and a stupendous miracle or a convulsion of nature was a mere trifle too common to excite wonder. Of course in such an age we should expect just such tales as the gospels giv us. In the nursery, Jack-the Giant-Killer is a hero as real as Lincoln.

JOSEPH MAILLE, president of the Bayou Laforche Central Railroad Company, of New Orleans, writes: "The 'Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book' came to hand a few days ago. After digesting it thoroughly, I am of the opinion that it is as yet the very best exposition of the falsehoods of our present religions. It is bound to do good work toward enlightening the intellectually blind. It should be advertised broadcast, and passed around as is the bread of life. It is on my desk, and whosoever wants to look at it, is welcomed. My compliments to Mr. Watson Heston for his pluck, self-reliance, and vividness of intellect."

THE Roman Catholic bishop of Rochester and ditto of Buffalo are at loggerheads, and the former has protested against the circulation of the Catholic Union and Times in his diocese. The grounds for this protest are that the paper "is not fit reading for decent and pure-minded children; it labors to foment insubordination among priests and people; it keeps alive un-Christian feelings between the two dioceses; it disturbs the peace of this one; it is a constantly recurring source of scandal to many, running into sin and shame." This is hard on poor Father Cronin, who prides himself upon his literary skill, especially as a judge of poetry, but it is mainly true, we judge. At least, the paper is not fit for children to read, for it prints tales of miracles, fairy stories, and church legends with the intent that its youthful readers shall believe them to be truth. This is fully as injurious to children as printing anything commonly thought to be unfit for "pure-minded" people to read.

THERE are few Freethinkers in the country who do not hav a wondering kind of interest in George Chainey—that is, wondering what he will do next. The following paragraph in the Agnostic Journal is the latest about him: "George Chainey, or—as he was called among his intimates here in London—'God,' has left for Palestine, accompanied by three ladies. On whatever continent 'God' sets foot he has a following of 'devout women' of the Anna Kimball type. Psyche, the organ of Unintelligibility, which got starved to death in London, is shortly to be published from the Mount of Olives. The moon would, no doubt, afford a more appropriate publishing office; but the state of the psychic exchequer, and other considerations, prevent 'God' and his three devout women from going there, at least in the mean time. 'God' favored us with a complimentary visit before he shook the dust of London from his celestial feet. He knows 'the Supreme' will send him money. We are anxious te know if his 'Supreme' (with a big S) was one and the same with our old friend Jehovah; but he evaded our question. Possibly he thought, if we got introduced to 'the Supreme,' we too might ask him for money, and that 'the Supreme' might write such a large cheque to support the Agnostic Journal that he would hav nothing left with which to endow Psyche. In spite of this, we own to a species of personal liking for 'God,' and we wish him well wherever he may go, be it to the Mount of Olives or to sheol." Chainey and Schweinfurth ought to go into partnership.

Letters from Friends.

ATWOODVILLE, CONN., April 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: The paper is first-class. Mr. Robert Ingersoll is the Christ I worship, and John Peck is a "hot second," and I hope Heston will get a harp.

Yours respectfully, J. S. MACFARLANE.

BOSTON, April 17, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I want just to say, that letter to Wanamaker is just the right thing in the right place; and I think that you hav put him in a very small hole that he will find it hard to crawl out of. And I like your liberality toward Spiritualists, being one myself, as I think we are a very large spoke in the wheel of progress. MRS. L. D. FRANCIS.

RENO, NEV., April 29, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $7.50—$3 for renewal, $2 75 for a new subscriber and the ANNUAL for 1891, $1 for the pictures or Heston, the balance in leaflets for mission work. The delay has been to get new subscribers. I will try and get some, if possible. Hoping you may hav a prosperous year, I remain as ever, yours in the only true faith of seeking for the truth, H. L. WRIGHT.

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 26, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I sent you $5 some weeks ago for renewal of subscription one year and for the "Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book." The latter pleased me very much, and it proves a terror to the pious hypocrits and a hard blow to the church. I wish Watson Heston a long life of usefulness and that he may liv to see the complete triumph of science, truth, and Freethought over superstition and bigotry. His ideas are immense. A. FRANTZ.

PLAZA, April 26, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: While sending for THE TRUTH SEEKER and "Text-Book," I thought that I would giv you a short history of myself. I hav been a Liberal, or Infidel, as my orthodox friends call me, the last thirty years, and always strike from the shoulder. I am everlastingly down on that old filth-pot the Bible, and all its creeds and dogmas. You struck the right note when you blew that trumpet at Holy John. Stay with them, and may you liv long to battle for the light.

DAME WHALEY.

MANHATTAN, MONT., April 26, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $3.25 for the ANNUAL and THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year. I must hav it. I like the way you giv it to Holy John; but look out for him, he will do you some hurt, for preachers and praying men strike in the dark and do their dirty work on the sly. If he can suppress your paper or send you to the penitentiary you will hear from him; if not, he will make no reply. But rap him on the fingers every time he reaches for you. Long life to Heston. May his shadow never grow less. J. O. CLARK.

DEXTER, MO., April 27, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith inclose $5 to set me up with the most admirable leader of our great congregation, whom I hope to stay with until the end of my sojourn here below. And if it is left to me to select the time for me to emigrate to the Christian heaven, I will be here for ten thousand years yet. If I don't learn something I hav never learned yet, I will remain in this nation; that is, this country is good enough for me. Best regards to all THE TRUTH SEEKER family. Very respectfully, J. W. MCCALLUM.

DESMET, S. D., April 23, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I received a short time ago a catalog of the officers of a Western college. Most of the professors had one of the titles of the almighty prefixed to their names. One was styled, "professor of biblical science." Biblical science forsooth! Expressed algebraically:

x plus 500,000 = x plus 470,000,

x plus 800,000 = x plus 1,100,000.

See 1 Chron. xxi and 2 Saml. xxiv. That is biblical science! Q E. D.

OAK MILLS, KAN., April 27, E.M. 291.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find stamps, for which send me a few extra copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 18th. If you hav any circulars or anything of the kind that you want distributed, send them to me and I will gladly distribute them where I think they will do the most good. I will help you all I can in this way.

You are doing grand service in the great cause of mental freedom, and you deserve the hearty thanks and support of all true Liberals. I could not get along without the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. I do not exaggerate when I say that it is the best journal published on this continent, if not in the whole world. All honor to you, Mr. Macdonald. With best wishes, I remain, Yours fraternally, GEO. J. REMSBURG.

HAMMONTON, N. J., May 5, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 to entitle us to the good old paper Brother Bennett founded another eight months. I wish we were able to contribute some to the Sec ular cause. I am sorry to hear you hav to carry so many deadheads. The illustrations must add to the expense, and it seems as if the majority are in favor of their being continued. I think they are good, and that Heston is a genius developed for the occasion. The "Letters from Friends" are very interesting. Hacker on the Holy John affair is cute and cutting. So is the brother who sent the order. And your notice where you slap the Bible in his face is a grand hit, well done, timely thought of, and should tell. Little did he think what his course would lead to. I hope Johnny will attend to all, and if he finds them to be wrong correct them, but if he finds himself in error be honest enough to acknowledge it and good enough to let well enough alone. It seems to me that creedists fear their craft will fail them and they will hav to look in some other direction for bread and butter, instead of one-seventh of time in which to giv small talk for a thousand or two dollars per year. D. R. WOLLISON.

ALMIRA, TEX., April 30, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5—$3 to renew my subscription and $2 for the picture book. There are some honest Liberals in this country, but very few who hav nerve enough to express their opinions. We certainly need a good lecturer here. I hav tried several times to make up the $25 to get Brother Remsburg to come here and lecture, but the people are poor and money is scarce. One friend says he will pay $5, and I will giv $5. But we both liv sixteen miles from the railroad. I do not know that we could even get the court-house for him to lecture in. There is more religion in this country than any place I ever saw, but it is of poor quality. With the best of wishes for you and the cause you hav espoused, I am,

Yours, etc., DR. J. P. MILLS.

LONGSTREET, GA., April 1, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I hav claimed, and still claim, that it is not proper, or a correct use of language, to say, "I know so and so, and hence I believe it." Even our colonel says, "I believe what my consciousness certifies is true, after being examined and cross-examined by the reason." Ah, is that so? Is absolute truth, demonstrated fact, knowledge, a matter for "belief?" Or must belief always (correctly speaking) relate to what we do not know?

What has been claimed and executed on the authority of this word has filled this world with a terrible history of blood, and we are not sure but attempts may be made to repeat the bloody history, by the same authority.

Does belief hav anything to do with, or can it hav any relation to, known truth? T. N. MASON.

LEON, N. Y., April 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: When I first sent for your paper last summer I did it partly as an experiment. I had during a rather long life been in the habit of reading the religious papers of various denominations, without much preference for or prejudice against any creed or denomination, and I had rarely met with any publications of a Liberal kind. I find one can get more reliable information in relation to the moral and religious status of the country from your "blasphemous little sheet," as it has been called, than from the more pretentious orthodox publications. Mr. Heston's pictures excite considerable interest. Even professed Christians look at them with an amused smile, and cannot well deny that they generally point a moral. I hope your scriptural cartoons may be put in book form before long.

Yours truly, E. C. DURFEE.

AUBURN, IA., April 27, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2, for which send me the "Cosmian Hymn Book," also the ANNUAL for 1891, and one copy of J. Remsburg's "Bible Morals." I see the subject of the badge is stirring up some of the truth seekers to quite an extent, and I foresee that if each one could be listened to we would hav as many badges as readers of your paper. Therefore I hav no suggestions to make, but think the Otto Wettstein badge beautiful, and we hope some time to at least send for one. We hav the Bennett Memorial framed. It makes a handsome picture, one that we shall be happy to explain to all friends and callers that may gaze upon it. You will see by one book that I hav sent for that I feel the need of something to sing besides "Jesus, Jesus," as we can hear that anywhere and at almost any time. Wishing the whole TRUTH SEEKER family success in all their undertakings for good and making the whole world better for their having lived in it, I remain well-wisher to all, MRS. E. M CARR.

LIMESTONE, ILL., March 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Say, do you suppose that it was only Elijah's body that went up into heaven? It could not hav been his spirit; Elisha got a double portion of that, you know. Elijah must hav thought that Comstock was around, else why didn't he drop his mantle before he went up? I've been wondering whether or not his body was burnt to a cinder when he reached heaven. Elisha must hav been a heartless old bachelor, or else he didn't follow the Golden Rule. For proof read 2 Kings ii, 24; in fact, read the whole chapter; also the Song of Solomon iii, from tenth to last verse. Would not a museum pay a big price for a man like that nowadays? Why, there'd be "millions in him." If the Bible is inspired, why don't the preachers preach now as the one did in Eccles. ix, 5?

Ex. xx, 13: "Thou shalt not kill," the Bible says,
That well-known book of light;
Ex. xxii, 19: And "shalt not suffer a witch to liv;"
Please tell me which is right.

Liberally, ANNA M. MOHN.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA., April 21, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Mrs. Herman Bohda would like to send a lot of second-hand TRUTH SEEKERS to some Liberal (postpaid) where they will do the most good, if some one will designate the person through the columns of your paper or by corresponding with me or Mrs. Bohda on the subject.

To Miss Ida Craddock, the secretary of the American Secular Union, I desire to say: Do not think it hard when somebody calls you an Infidel. It is only the loving Christian that means harm. Liberals hav faith that progress and truth will overcome superstition; if it was not for that faith and hope, I for my part would not spend a cent for the Liberal cause. Therefore, it matters not what the faithful in Christ call us.

One question I would like to see answered through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER in reference to Italians, of whom so much has been said since the New Orleans trouble, and that is, Who is the cause of that undesirable element landing in this country? My opinion is, it is the greed of the capitalists of this country for cheap labor, in addition to desire for persons contributing to the strength of the Catholic church.

Yours for Mental Liberty and humanity,

LOUIS WOLFES.

COLUMBUS, O., April 27, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER I will not do without. My wife and children are as anxious to see it as I am. As soon as it comes, no matter who gets it, the first thing is to look at the pictures.

I hav seen no account of the death of my old friend and employer, John Ruth, who departed this life in March, E M. 291, near his eightieth year. Truth, honesty, and industry were his creed, and he was an uncompromising Infidel and Freethinker. His word was as good as his bond. By untiring industry he amassed a competency for those he left behind. He was a great devotee to the Investigator and Ironclad Age. He had been a resident of South Bloomfield, Pickaway county, O., since 1836, and was widely known and respected, having been before the public as a hotel-keeper for over twenty years, and also elected county commissioner two or more terms. I had the pleasure of being with him in the hotel during the late war, and I never knew him to turn a person out hungry and without lodging, money or no money, in that time. He died as he lived. When interrogated upon his future he answered, "I am an Infidel. I will die as I lived." E. P. WRIGHT.

LAGGATER, TEX., April 16, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $9 for renewal, a new subscriber, and two more picture books. I think the old TRUTH SEEKER has opened the eyes of some of the people around here at last, and if possible I will try and send some new subscribers and for more of the picture books. Heston knows just where to strike, and a blow is never lost.

I heard an old preacher say the other night in his pulpit, "Now, dear parents, is the time to hav your children come to Christ;" and it struck me as though that old hypocrit had good argument on his side, for if they do not come now while they can be fooled into it on account of their youth, they will very likely never come at all. How any intelligent man can get up and preach the divinity of that old book, the Bible, the mother of falsehood and father of bloodshed and crime, is a mystery beyond my solution.

My parents were religious and brought me up in the way they thought right. But, alas! as soon as I reached a mature age I commenced to reason and read, without a biased mind, and only in a short while I discovered their error and learned to my own satisfaction that the Bible was only false from beginning to end, without the least argument, or even decent language.

I think I will "convert" some more of the people here, and then hope to giv you more business. W. P. JEMISON.

LONGSTREET, GA., April 10, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Now that the bickering is over about a field lecturer, let the machine roll. The field is broad enough for a thousand lecturers.

As far as I know, Remsburg has delivered the first Liberal lecture in this, the Empire state of the South. I know that a very large majority of the people are anything but orthodox. They are Deistical, Theistical, Agnostic, Freethinkers, or whatever you please to call them; but entirely without organization. Not the first effort has been made to organize Liberals, unless you class Spiritualists as Liberals.

True, so-called orthodox people look slantingly at a Freethinker, but what does that signify? The Freethinker, having no sins to be "pardoned," and none to be covered by a Christian cloak of hypocrisy, walks erect in his liberty, without fear of Gods, devils, or those who believe in them. They are not so concerned about those imaginary beings as to lose any good sleep on that account. And hence, if we find things going wrong, if troubles come and our peaceful moods are disturbed, and we are even made unhappy, we naturally conclude that we ourselvs or some persons else hav made a mistake, committed a blunder, and are necessarily reaping the consequences, no outside deity or devil having anything to do with the case; and so we meekly bow to the inevitable, as we must. Hence all our experiences are the results of natural causes, and we hav no grounds for accusations against imaginary beings which we know nothing about. Yours for truth, T. M. MASON.

ST. ELMO, TENN., April 28, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: There are several families in this vicinity who hav been attracted toward Washington on account of her Liberal legislation. They are all Freethinkers, earnest, intelligent, enterprising, the very best class of American citizens. They desire me to write for information concerning the two states of Oregon and Washington.

I would like to hav some letters from the north part of Washington telling the *dis*advantages of Oregon, and some from southern Oregon telling the *dis*advantages of Washington. I already know the best that can be said of them—I want to know the worst in truth.

Before coming to Tennessee everything was rose-colored and golden, but we hav discovered streaks that are mighty blue. In the above manner we may get some of the blue ready-mixed with the pink and yellow. We fear that Washington has too much rainy weather, and is much colder than Oregon. In that we may be mistaken.

Here is one thing certain—the state that givs the most Liberal or just laws is the one that will catch the best emigration. Of a dozen or more of these families I doubt if a single member of any of them has ever been arrested for a misdemeanor, and it is doubtful if they hav ever sued or been sued. They believe in the utmost possible liberty of the individual, so they do not infringe on the rights and liberties of others. They want the Congress of the United States to enact Sunday a national holiday—for people to be as free to do and act as they are now on any other national holiday. They are opposed to class legislation, believing that a law that is just and proper for one person should be so for all, and for days as well.

The liberal legislation of Washington givs them a prejudice in that direction, but Oregon might legislate still more liberally—justly.

I would like to receive letters and descriptiv pamphlets from different parts of the two states within the next three or four months. L. L. GOODWIN.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA., April 24, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 18th I noticed Miss Ida Craddock's article making an explanation why she objects to being called an Infidel. I regard Miss Craddock as a considerate, impartial, and able secretary of the American Secular Union. I always read her articles with interest, and I generally approve her sentiments. She recognizes the rights of those who differ with her. Courtesy and respect are due to those who happen to believe as they must. I may say, we should stand out strong in our individuality before the world. If this great principle of love of truth universally existed, more truth and positiv facts would appear and prevail. The thoughtless and misconceived application of words is an unfortunate evil that causes serious harm, and many persons are falsely represented, all due either to willful perversion of facts or words or lack of knowledge. It is painful to be the victim of misrepresentation. It is evident that the dictionary has been neglected by many. The true meaning of all words should be correctly applied, and the courteous secretary of the American Secular Union is entirely justified in defining her true position. No man or woman possessing true qualities of heart and mind is or can be ashamed of what they believe to be the truth. I am proud of my honest conviction, but should be ashamed of insincerity and false character. The true definition of "Infidel" is, unfaithful. The word truly applies to husbands and wives who are unfaithful to each other. It also applies to people who profess religion but do not practice what they preach. Anyone in church or out of church who is unfaithful to his individual convictions is an Infidel. I honestly believe that Freethinkers are the most sensible people on earth, the best lovers of truth, and whose convictions cannot but be strong and candid. For them to be called Infidels is incorrect. Agnostics, Materialists, positivists, and Spiritualists are the correct names for Freethinkers. So Miss Craddock is right in defining her true conviction and not suffering herself to be the victim of misrepresentation.

T. J. CONNERS.

QUINCY, ILL., May 4, 291.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Charles Watts, the noted Secular evangelist of Toronto, Ont., made the welkin ring last Sabbath at Turner Hall in this priest-ridden city in giving us two lectures in his inimitable and happy way. In the afternoon he expounded to an intelligent and enthusiastic audience the beauties and advantages of what the sky-pilots and their deluded followers call unbelief—which is a word, as generally used, devoid of meaning and common sense, for is not every man differing from some other man an unbeliever? Brother Watts showed plainly, and in language easily understood by all, that doubt and skepticism as applied to the duties and obligations we owe to each other are as far above the teachings of theology as the sun is above the moon in illuminating the dark corners of this terrestrial sphere.

The evening lecture was better attended, the larger part of the congregation being ladies. Here Brother Watts was at home. The subject of his lecture was Secularism vs. theology, and the way he handled it was enough to make ecclesiasticism quake in its boots. The lecturer took the ground that our duties to each other were paramount to each and every obligation that Christianity teaches us; that Christianity teaches it is our bounden duty to giv to some one or some thing whom we know nothing about, and never can know anything about. He showed conclusivly that the man or woman who thinks of nothing but what will become of a mythical and infinitesimal something called a soul in the hereafter, is a creature not fit to associate with his fellows in the daily walks of life.

During the evening lecture the speaker was several times applauded, and the applause was given with a hearty good will, especially by the ladies, who appear to be as good judges of far-reaching points in a lecture as they are of the last style in a duck of a bonnet. Brother Watts wound up his lecture in a peroration addressed to the God of Nature. He, if I may so express myself, threw himself body and mind into this prayer, during which the congregation appeared to be in unison with the speaker. So quiet were they that a pin dropping on the floor would hav been a disturbing element. Charles Watts while here made many friends, and a cordial reception will always be given him. Whenever in traveling this vale of joys and good will he happens to come this way, the friends of a day will be glad to see him. Yours truly, J. L. M.

NEW ORLEANS, April 22, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just completed what may be called a greedy reading of your TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 31, 1891, sent to me by you at my request as a sample copy. This is my maiden step at expressing myself publicly. I must say that your TRUTH SEEKER and its correspondence express my views, thoughts, and feelings in letter and spirit.

It is my firm belief that the time is fast approaching, particularly at present, when all known religions will be completely eradicated from the face of the earth, even if it goes so far as a bloody revolution to do it. Religions are the curse of humanity, and only inspire fear, cowardice, ignorance, laziness, hypocrisy, superstition, and all known crimes, thus preventing the grand and divine development of mankind nearest that divinity attributed to the universal mythical humbug called "God."

For fully ten years past I hav given this religious subject my attention, and only awaited the time when I felt that I might be able to speak, write, and publish my views, so that the other Infidels may know that there is another Infidel in a city practically domineered by religions of all kinds, tastes, and desires, except Truth.

I was considering the advisability of adopting a nom de plume, but concluded that it would be cowardly and an insult to my manhood. Let my name go down to posterity as one more advocate in the struggle for liberty. There is nothing nobler, nothing grander nor more sublime, than truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Can you or any of your readers refer me to any matter pretending to be the handwriting of the alleged Jesus Christ? I hav read and heard preached everything about his alleged sayings, but never anything about his alleged writings. It seems to me that if he did liv for thirty-three years, he should hav had occasion to at least sign his name. My opinion is that no such mythical fool ever lived and that there never was any fool or idiot stupid enough to undergo any part of his alleged sufferings without "kicking" once.

I am compiling a Directory of Freethinkers, with one or two lines of their terse sayings. All those who want to send me their names and their terse sayings will accordingly be inserted.

Inclosed please find $5 for one year's subscription and one copy of your "Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book."

Yours in the fight for freedom, JOS. MAILLE.

HARTFORD, KAN., April 20, 8 P. M. 291.

MR. EDITOR: There are several reasons why Mr. Ingersoll should be nominated for president of the United States.

First, because he is the first choice of a large and rapidly increasing class of Freethinkers in this country.

Second, because he would be supported not only by many Seventh Day Adventists and Baptists who fear Sunday persecution, but also by the more liberal and fair-minded among Christians and many non-evangelical church-members who fear church encroachments upon the realms of civil authority.

Third, because it would bring into prominence the claims of the American Secular Union for a complete divorcement of church and state, and thereby cause discussion upon one of the most important political topics, and one of the most vital to the preservation of the principles of constitutional liberty that can be thought of.

Fourth, because his name at the head of a presidential ticket would arouse enthusiasm among the "old guard," vivify the forces opposed to religious persecution, and convince weaklings that Freethinkers hav principles that are worth fighting for.

Fifth, because it would convince orthodox people that Freethinkers mean business; that they possess some of the spirit that fearlessly faces martyrdom in defense of cherished liberties, and are therefore not going to sit idly down while superstition marshals its hosts for the demolition of the safeguards against the destruction of the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

More reasons might be added, but these are sufficient. I attach no importance to the personal dangers which such a nomination would bring upon Mr. Ingersoll. No enemy would expect his election, and no one would therefore think to do God service by slaying him. Besides, such an act would not be countenanced by the Christian church, for the reason, if for no other, that it would open the eyes of a world to the justice of the representations of church malice and bigotry which are contained in "The Pictorial Text-Book."

I would advise a national ticket containing the names of the nominees for president and vice-president, with the names of the electors for each state. The rest of the ticket should be left blank, and it should provide space for the names of all other nominees down to road overseer, for Freethinkers are men who activly engage in local issues. This would of course necessitate the appointment of some prominent Liberal in each state to act as secretary, who should see to it that the tickets for his own state should provide for all the officers to be elected. The laws of Kansas do not permit the printing of names of persons not belonging to the same party as the head of the ticket, but they can be written.

A. H. DARROW.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., April 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: The Society of Liberals, composed of the best people of Chattanooga, hav organized, adopted constitution and by-laws, and elected officers and directors, and are to-day a complete and thoroughly organized body of truth seekers. The officers are: B J. Robertson, president; John W. James, first vice-president; Mrs. Mattie E. Hurson, second vice-president; J. B. Zeigler, secretary; Chris. Bathman, treasurer; M. M. Murray, P. C. Cramer, and W. C. Mills, directors. Every one of them seems to think like the others. Mr. Robertson is an elegant gentleman; is rather large, handsomely built, with a fine intelligent face, splendid voice, and good address. Mr. James is a far-seeing man of great ability; a builder of railroads and cities, not a builder of churches and tabernacles; a kind-hearted, Liberal-minded man, who is loved by every good citizen, and in fact would make a good president of the United States. Mrs. Mattie E. Hurson is a tall, well-built lady, with firm but pleasant and rather handsome features; full of determination and energy; a great worker, and will be a great acquisition to the Freethinkers' association at Chattanooga. The secretary and treasurer are two of a kind, who never know when to stop, and the outcome will only be told later on. We hav adopted the constitution and by-laws of the American Secular Union, somewhat changed so as to make them suitable for our local Freethinkers' association, with all the demands and preambles therein contained.

We had an elegant lecture delivered by Mrs. Lois Waisbrooker; subject—"Natural Laws vs. Personal Authority." I send you a poster to show you how we do it here. We distribute three thousand or four thousand such a day or two before each lecture, and the people come from all quarters. It is surprising how quick the people in the suburban districts learn it; but they hav become acquainted, and they go out of their way to let each other know that there is a lecture at Freethinkers' Hall.

We hav had a challenge from a gentleman by the name of Wm. Rennie, who proposes to furnish a reverend doctor of divinity who is ready and willing to settle and lay to rest for ever after "That the Bible is what it purports to be, a revelation of God's will and purpose to man, and it is consistent and harmonious with itself." I hav been thinking if it would not be a good idea to just refer the reverend gentleman to the different chapters and books cited in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 11th for Wanamaker. I think that will take the starch out of his shirt for a while and put him to studying up another plan to get up notoriety in his flock.

The subscription list for THE TRUTH SEEKER will hav to be increased, as well as those of all other Liberal papers and magazines taken here. We hope to trouble you often hereafter.

What we now most desire in Chattanooga is a weekly publication of more light on Freethought and Liberalism. Then look out, for this would surely be the Hub of the South.

Very respectfully yours, CHRIS. BATHMAN.

NEWARK, April 30, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: The pope is tackling economics. Can it be possible, after cautioning his priests of his pagan church to not meddle in politics, that in the next breath he commands his followers to take a hand in politics in all countries wherever they can get a footing? The old fellow is a simon pure Democrat of the Tammany kidney. If Father McGlynn had been a Tammanyite and worked with Corrigan he would never hav been excommunicated, for if a man is an intelligent Democrat and works against the interest of the church, he is a heretic and no good. The pope has discovered that in a democratic or republican government he is allowed more privileges, and he can colonize all cities and Catholics can take all the offices, as he has done in all our large cities in North America. Kings will not allow the old pagan to be master of the situation, and he must hav killed his God with prayers or else his God has discovered he is a fraud and no good to humanity. A few years ago a heretic could not be buried inside of Rome, but his brigands and murderers could pay their money to the church, get absolution, and go up to horse heaven and sing their everlasting song. Pius IX. was the son of a brigand. He cut throats to educate his son for holy orders. And when Garibaldi knocked at the doors of Rome and the brigands came from their robber dens, carbines and stilettoes in their belts, to fight for their comrade in crime, he, the pope, greeted them with "My dear children," and gave them his blessing. Garibaldi's god was the stronger, and the pope and his ghost-God and his wooden idols of saints were again defeated. And now in his dotage this pious pauper who wears a crown of gold and has $30,000,000 in the hands of Rothschild the Jew banker, has the cheek to preach economics. Well, most holy fraud, again I advise you to cut down your household expenses and relieve the poor of their heavy burden. If you hav turned plebeian and believe in democracy, then turn adrift your aristocratic monseigneurs, cardinals, nuncios, bishops, prelates, chamberlains, and papal guards. Your God should be your only guard. No use praying to anything that cannot protect you. If your God would allow the heretics to erect the statue of Bruno before the doors of your palace, the Vatican, and allow the Methodists to build a meeting-house where they sing their Methodist hymns to disturb your holiness, why not pray to the Buddhist or Chinese Joss god? Perhaps you would hav greater success. A few months ago I read in THE TRUTH SEEKER there were over four thousand masses said in Rome. Four thousand beats or paupers supported by the people praying to a lazy old God or ghost that no person can locate, and if any person should see him he would be struck dead! Is it any wonder that God says, "In the thickest of darkness shall be my hiding-place?" I should want to hide, too, from such a lot of violators who are trying to beat nature's laws.

Now a word and I am done. Can it be possible that the pope contemplates coming to America and taking possession of Corrigan's palace that was built for him? It looks like it, for there are many papal guards and assassins and thieves coming from the "Infernal City" of Rome. Immigration should be stopped and all clergymen should be made to pay $100 license, and church property and idols and wooden gods would make good fires on a cold day to keep a fellow from freezing. The heat is all the spirit that would come from burning such trash. Not that I would destroy any man's church or idol, but they should bear their burden of taxation. Napoleon melted their twelve apostles to pay his soldiers, and I would do likewise with all their golden idols, or tax them for their full value every year. That would be better than weeping blood from the pictures of saints every year to rob the poor and ignorant. W. W. MORRIS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Boys We Need.

Here's to the boy who's not afraid
To do his share of work,
Who never is by toil dismayed,
And never tries to shirk.

The boy whose heart is brave to meet
All lions in the way;
Who's not discouraged by defeat,
But tries another day.

The boy who always means to do
The very best he can,
Who always keeps the right in view,
And aims to be a man.

Such boys as these will grow to be
The men whose hands will guide
The future of our land, and we Shall speak their names with pride.

All honor to the boy who is
A man at heart, I say,
Whose legend on his shield is this:
"Right always wins the day."

A Pledge to Keep.

The editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine, which is among the best of Freethought journals, and one that everybody ought to take, has made an excellent offer in the last number. It concerns us in the Corner. He copies Elmer W. Pride's letter from our Corner, and not only commends it highly, but offers to mail the magazine one year, free of charge, to any young man between the ages of eighteen and twenty-six years who will follow the example set by Mr. Pride and will send the following to the editor of the magazine: "I do truthfully state that I do not drink intoxicating liquors, use tobacco in any shape, or use profane language; and I solemnly and sincerely promis not to do so for the next ten years."

Mr. Green would initiate a new order, to be called "THE YOUNG MEN'S FREETHOUGHT TEMPERANCE SOCIETY." Mr. Elmer W. Pride he nominates for president; the first name reaching the office will be secretary; the second, treasurer; and the next five names will constitute an executiv committee. He hopes to get a hundred names during the next month.

We heartily agree with this project of the editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine. If it is true that any of our boys do "drink, chew, smoke, or swear," they had better reform instantly. These are very bad habits, and we are fain to believe they do not stick to any of our Freethought boys. It will do no harm to take this pledge, and keep it, not only for ten years, but forever.

Tobacco is injurious, drinking vile compounds is bad, deception in any form is degrading, stealing and swindling are great evils, using profane language is silly and ridiculous. It is only indulged in by Christian nations, and is a very foolish habit.

It is a great thing to be pure in mind and morals. It is the mark of a gentleman to be clean and sweet in thought, word, and deed. We want the boys and girls of Freethought to be among the best, yea, to be the very best in the world. We expect them to continue to make the Liberal cause great and grand, noble and illustrious. The mantle worn by older champions of the cause will soon descend upon their shoulders. They must be worthy to wear it. One way to become worthy is to frown upon all bad habits, to liv uprightly and deal honestly. The above pledge will help to do that.

S. H. W.

A Little Sermon.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS: Many of the prophets mentioned in the Bible were very ignorant, though well-disposed, men, whose views were marked by a practical common sense much at variance with the pompous airs of the regular priesthood, the splendor of an imposing religious ceremonial, the haughty disdain of kings for the opinions of the people.

These monarchs were willing to sustain a theocracy which gave them, apparently, the position of secondary fiddlers to God, who was the real ruler.

What little civilization the Hebrew nation was possessed of, reposed in the hands of this humble and inferior set of philosophers, whose efforts to repress vice in all places was rewarded in the usual way. They were despised and rejected of men, stoned, cast into pits, and sawn asunder, of whom the world was not worthy. Listen to their terrible rebukes: "To what purpose are your sacrifices? your solemn fasts? your holy days, new moons, and Sabbaths? When a clean heart and a contrite spirit are all that the Lord requires?" But this generation of vipers forbids a mother to kiss her child on the Sabbath, and suppose her little boy should play ball on that day?

Once I bought a few crackers on Sunday, but I feel as cool as a cucumber about it, under our noble constitution, as well as the most decent opinion of the world in all ages. I never did like a gorgeous heathenism, which honors God and tramples the poor.

But now the scene changes in the great drama of human events! The bold impostor, Schweinfurth, is soon to be ushered into the arena of a gorgeous ceremonial and belief. The faces of the clergy are already marked by a deadly pallor—they know their fate. That the old religions are dying. The thoughtless masses pant for a faith at once wild, passionate, dreamy, and strange.

But let us hope on that Colonel Ingersoll, or some friend of his, may be nominated for the presidency. ALHAZA.

Correspondence.

MCMINNVILLE, ORE., April 17, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I hav never written to the Corner I thought I would write you a few lines. I am twelve years old. I go to school and study Fifth Reader, geography, grammar, history, arithmetic, spelling, and writing. My brother takes the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, and I always read the Children's Corner before anything else. The spring flowers are all in bloom. As this is my first letter to the Corner, I will close.

VINA FARMER.

OSCEOLA, IA., April 14, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a letter to the Corner for the first time. I go to school now. I study reading, arithmetic, geography, grammar, spelling, and physiology. My teacher's name is Oren Henderson. He is a very good instructor. I hav no pets except cats. The piece that I spoke the last day of the other school was "The Little Brown Hands." I selected it from THE TRUTH SEEKER. Father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and thinks it is a very nice paper. I remain, MYRTLE JONES.

HENDRICK, IDA., April 5, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As we hav not seen any letter from this part of the country, we thought we would write. We are little Liberals thirteen and twelve.

Our school starts to-morrow morning. Our teacher's name is Miss Carrick and she is not religious.

We are very fond of looking at the cartoons and reading the Corner.

Please tell us through THE TRUTH SEEKER what Robert G. Ingersoll's middle name is.

Well, as this is our first letter, we remain,
Your Liberal friends,
FLORA E. WRIGHT,
VIOLA G. WEAVER.

CUSTER, ILL., April 6, 1891.

MISS SUSAN WIXON, Dear Friend: I thought I would write a letter to the Children's Corner to-day, as I am not very busy. I am sixteen years old, and go to school every day. I study reading, spelling, arithmetic, language, writing, drawing, and physiology. I liv in a small village. My teacher's name is Mr. Barnes. Our school term will be out about the 7th or 8th of May. We had a literary Friday night, but not a very big attendance. The Sunday-school is nearly played out, there are so many sick. I hav two brothers and one sister. My papa is a carpenter, and he gets plenty of work to do. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. I will close for this time. Hoping to see this in print, I remain, Your little Freethinker,
MARY D. ROBINSON.

BOULDER CREEK, COL., April 16, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I wish this time to tell you about our pack train—there are seven donkeys in it. It is a curious sight to see them when they are going up a trail with their big loads on their backs; they are quite small, and can carry remarkably big loads. I hav often seen them carrying two big bales of hay weighing no less than two hundred and fifty pounds, making five hundred pounds, which is more than the average donkey weighs. They are used in the roughest of places, and very seldom slip or fall; but sometimes they do and go rolling down the hill with their big loads of wood, or anything they may be packing, but they very seldom hurt themselvs. Some donkeys are very smart, and when they are loaded they will go up the trail a little way and then go into the brush and lie down where you cannot see them, just to get out of packing their big loads. Generally they cannot get up until they are unloaded. They are very cunning in getting a good chance to kick you, and when they do kick they kick hard. Young donkeys are very cute; they hav very long legs, long ears, small bodies, and long necks. Mules and horses are also used for packing, but they do not carry much larger loads than donkeys. Well, I must close now, as I can not think of any more to say; so good-bye for this time. Your Liberal friend,
EDWIN D. RODGERS.

VERNON, TEX., April 12, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav been a Liberal nearly a year. I cannot praise THE TRUTH SEEKER enough. It has taken the place of almost all the children's papers we take. Our town of Vernon is beautifully situated on the Fort Worth & Denver railroad, and has about four thousand inhabitants. We hav large schools here, but they are principally controled by Christians. The public school has six hundred and forty-six pupils enroled. We hav several prominent Freethinkers in our town. We had a debate, which commenced March 31st and ended April 5th. The subject of discussion was, "The Bible is of Divine Origin." Affirmativ, L. W. Scott; negativ, A. L. Phelps. It lasted six nights, Scott being on the affirmativ the first three nights. Then the subject was reversed and O. A. Phelps thrown on the affirmativ the three remaining nights. Mr. Phelps got the best of Mr. Scott, or, to use a more common phrase, "snowed him under." There are few Liberal ladies in our town, but more step to the front all the time. Several times, when there were but few letters in the Corner, I was very much afraid our Corner would fall out of sight, so I was real glad when I saw so many young Liberals stepping forth and declaring their views on Christianity. Every time I read the Corner I am delighted at the progress it is making. When we get THE TRUTH SEEKER the first thing I look at is the pictures; then I turn to the Corner. My father is a Liberal of but two years' standing, but he is very strong. I hav three brothers and one sister. My oldest brother is a Christian, which we regret very much. Many of my school-mates beg me to send my sister to Sunday-school, but asking is all the satisfaction they get, for I will not comply with their wishes. This is the first letter I hav ever written to any paper, so you must excuse mistakes. I think I am the second Liberal who has written from Vernon. I think Mr. Heston is doing much good, and would be disappointed if THE TRUTH SEEKER should come minus Mr. Heston's pictures. I am fourteen years old. My mother is dead and I hav to keep house for papa. I do not want my first letter thrown in the waste-basket. If this is worth printing I will contribute a better missiv next time. I will close, wishing you much success as the editor of the Children's page, and as the spreader of truth and knowledge in the minds of the young.

Your Liberal friend, MYRTIE MARTIN.

P. S.—Correspondence solicited from both young and old.

PORT OF SPAIN, TRINIDAD, April 12, 1891.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON: The last Corner is very interesting. I notice now more correspondents than heretofore, and I hope that they will increase. I am quite in accord with suggestions which were made to establish a children's paper. I earnestly wish that if such an enterprise is started, it may prove a success. I shall help all I can.

In my last I volunteered a few descriptiv remarks relativ to this place. I shall in this, and others that I may forward from time to time, endeavor to continue with a few "At Random" notes.

When Christopher Columbus discovered Trinidad he found it inhabited by Caribs, who were almost all destroyed or carried away about the year 1518, when the inhuman Spaniards made captivs of all the free and happy aborigines they could find to work their mines. We hav seen and observed the effects produced upon the people of other countries by the Romish hierarchy, but the effect produced here has been, and still is, double fold. It has exterminated millions of inoffensiv mortals in this part of the world; still priests tell us that the light of the gospel has proved a blessing to other countries, but alas! we see the baneful effects it has produced in the Western hemisphere. As in North America the red Indians hav gradually disappeared before the encroaching white races, so in Trinidad the Arrawars and the Chaymas, the Tamanacos and the Cumanagotes, hav little by little faded away out of the community, and are now barely represented by a few families of mixed descent.

When Columbus discovered Trinidad, a certain Cacique, an Indian chief, so goes the tale, took off Columbus's cap of crimson velvet and replaced it with a circle of gold which he wore.

Alas for them! That fatal present of gold brought down on them enemies far more ruthless than the Caribs of the northern islands, who had a habit of coming down in their canoes and carrying off the gentle nativs, to eat them at their leisure, after the fashion which Defoe has almost certainly immortalized in "Robinson Crusoe." Crusoe's island is, almost certainly, meant for Tabago; man Friday had been stolen in Trinidad.

The Spaniards came. Gold they could not get, but slaves they could, and the history of these gentle Indians is the same as that of their brethren in the other West Indian islands: a history of murder and cruelty.

Wishing yourself and the Cornerites success, Yours truly, E. DOS SANTOS.

P.S.—I fully agree with and indorse your remarks in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 28th with regard to the adoption of the Pansy as the badge of Freethinkers.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

The New Thought (Chicago) says: "It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw. . . . To state the whole thing in the language of another, the first book shows what a heaven is coming on this earth after it shall have passed through the necessary discipline, and the other books show what a hell of a time we have to get there."

The Chesaning Argus (Chesaning, Mich.) says: "It is one grand sublime poem . . . a perfect history in blank verse of the social and religious struggles of our earth, and would be good reading for those who have been interested in 'Looking Backward.'" Describing Book 6 it says: "This chapter will be found especially interesting to ladies."

The Phrenological Journal (New York) regards it as equal to the great epics of a hundred years ago or more.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," says: "I have read it with much interest. I am in entire sympathy with its spirit of boundless faith in human development."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says it is one of the significant indications of the signs of the times.

The Nationalist, of Boston, considers its style as equal to Milton's, and says it "engages the reader's attention with the first line and keeps it engrossed until the final word."

Brick Pomeroy's Advance Thought (N. Y.) says: "It contains much to benefit humanity."

News of the Week.

A CATHOLIC agitator on schools, in urging state incorporation of parochial schools, particularly because Protestants make the public schools proselyting institutions, cites a Protestant clergyman who boasted that in twenty years 100 000 children hav been won by the agency of public schools from Catholicism to Protestantism.

ST. LOUIS will hav a $1 000,000 Catholic cathedral.

THE German parliament has refused medical license to women.

BRAZIL has enacted that civil marriages precede all religious ones.

ITALY has prohibited taking "the Blessed Sacrament" through the streets in procession.

A STATUE of Leo XIII. has been shipped from Civita Vecchia for the Catholic University at Washington.

BARON HIRSH is seeking in the Argentine Republic suitable tracts for colonization by the Jews driven from Russia.

FATHERS SZMEIGEL AND WERTZ, of Pennsylvania, denounce the labor reformers who are exhorting the striking miners.

BLAINE has remonstrated with Germany on the sending to America by the officials of a town a lunatic, pauper, and murderer.

FATHER IGNATIUS, the Church of England mountebank touring America, pushes his demand for Heber Newton's expulsion.

THE Chilian rebels hav organized a government in the eight provinces they hav won.

THE latest of the pretended miraculous cures by Father Mollinger, of Pittsburgh, Pa., is that of a cancer on a New York woman, who received "three blessings and a few simple herbs."

BISHOP LOUGHLIN of Brooklyn has received from Italians—"presumably Catholics," admits a Catholic journal—a petition to dismiss Priest Nicco of the Catholic Church of the Sacred Heart of Mary and Jesus, who denounced the Mafia.

A NEW sect called the Anticipators has been started in Pike county, Pa., by Zachariah Myers, a farmer. He says that one day last fall while he was plowing a cloud hove in front of him and from it a voice said: "Before the century closes the world will end and man shall be no more. Go tell thy people to prepare. Tell them not to wait an hour. There must be everlasting prayer. The world is wicked; it is reeking in its own corruption. There must be an end to all soon." He hastened home and reported, and when neighbors who had heard the rumor applied for information he said, "Before we go any farther we will organize a God-fearing congregation," and started his sect, which has crippled neighboring churches. He says that all will join his church before the end of the world, to be saved; and that first a ball of fire will fall and then the final conflagration begin.

THE New Orleans grand jury has rendered a presentment denouncing the Mafia, censuring the jury that acquitted, and sanctioning lynch-rule thus: "Law is truly regarded as the embodiment of the wisdom of all ages, and its just execution the safeguard of society by the punishment of transgressors. Its just execution expresses the will of the people in condemnation of crime, but where this lofty principle is condemned by the practice of assassination for revenge or spite, and concealment under the most binding oaths renders powerless the efforts of the law to reach the chief actors and to secure witnesses, it becomes the duty of the people in the exercise of their sovereign rights to issue their decree of condemnation." The concluding words are: "We hav referred to the large number of citizens participating in this demonstration, estimated by judges as from 6,000 to 8 000, as a spontaneous uprising of the people. The magnitude of this affair makes it a difficult task to fix the guilt upon any number of the participants—in fact, the act seemed to involve the entire people of the parish and city of New Orleans, so profuse is their sympathy and extended their connection with the affair. In view of these considerations the thorough examination of the subject has failed to disclose the necessary facts to justify this grand jury in presenting indictments."

THE clergy hav the strongest interest in the depravation of the human intellect. For the demand for their services as agents for the temporal aid of the deity altogether depends upon human ignorance and incapacity, and is exactly proportional to it.—Grote.

PHILOSOPHERS hav no aggressiv tendencies. With eyes fixed on the noble goal to which they tend, they may, now and then, be stirred to momentary wrath by the unnecessary obstacles with which the ignorant or the malicious encumber, if they cannot bar the difficult path; but why should their souls be deeply vexed? The majesty of fact is on their side, and the elemental forces of nature are working for them. Not a star comes to the meridian at its calculated time but testifies to the justness of their methods; their beliefs are "one with the falling rain and with the growing corn." By doubt they are established, and open inquiry is their bosom friend.—Huxley.

IT is not by shirking difficulties that we can remove them or escape them; nor by evading the perplexing problems of life or speculation that we can hope to solve them; nor by saying, Hush! to every oversubtle questioner, that the question can be answered or the asker silenced. Men cannot go on forever living upon half-exploded shams, keeping obsolete laws with admittedly-false preambles on their statute books, professing creeds only half credited and quite incredible, standing and sleeping on suspected or recognized volcanoes, erecting both their dwellings and their temples on ice, which the first dreaded rays of sunlight they know must melt away. —Greg.

ALL mental phenomena are simply transformed sensations.—Condillac.

THE mind is physical, wholly material. The phenomenon of consciousness is the direct result of our organization.—Hobbes.

WHATEVER a man may pray for, he prays for a miracle. Every prayer comes to this: "Great God, let twice two not make four."—Ivan Turguénief.

SUPERSTITION, of whatever kind, whether earthly or divine, has hitherto been the weight which clogged man to earth and prevented his genius from soaring aloft amid its nativ skies.—Shelley.

EVERY violation of truth is not only a sort of suicide in the liar, but is a stab at the health of human society. On the most profitable lie the course of events presently lays a destructiv tax.—Emerson.

ALL hail to those bold and fearless natures—the heretics and innovators of the day—who, rousing men out of their lazy sleep, sound in their ears the tocsin and the clarion, and force them to come forth, that they may do battle for their creed! Of all evils, torpor is the most deadly. Giv us paradox, giv us error, giv us what you will, so that you save us from stagnation. It is the cold spirit of routine which is the nightshade of our nature. It sits upon men like a blight, blunting their faculties, withering their powers, and making them both unable and unwilling either to struggle for the truth or to figure to themselvs what it is that they really believe. —Buckle.

WHAT could the Holy Ghost hav been thinking of when he inspired that chapter [Num. xxxi]? If we were a friend of the Holy Ghost, we should be prepared to take the responsibility of striking out the thirty-two thousand virgins which he directed to be set aside for lechery. When we met the Ghost we should explain to him the liberty we had taken in expunging the thirty-first chapter of Numbers. This would be a much more honest course than the one his pious lackeys are taking, swearing by the Bible with this unspeakable impurity in it, and yet attempting to preach the people up to a standard of purity. To preach against the ruining of maidens is to preach right in the teeth of the Holy Ghost, as long as the thirty-first chapter of Numbers is recognized as an integral part of "the word of God."—Saladin.

Notes and Clippings.

Mrs. Annie Besant, W. Q. Judge, and Colonel Olcott are to get together in London and reorganize the Order of Theosophists.

A Boston preacher came out boldly and said he not only liked good beer but must hav it to drink. His congregation did not threaten to burn him for a heretic, but advanced his salary $180 a year—a sort of genteel invitation to him to invite his soul with the amber fluid and good luck to him.

The people of Australia are reported to be hostil to the project of sending large bodies of Russian Jews to their country, which Baron Hirsch was said to hav entertained. The baron himself, however, now declares that the Jewish refugees from Russia are to be sent, not to Australia or to the United States, but to the Argentine Republic.

The Presbytery of New York has decided to try the Rev. Dr. Briggs on a charge of heresy. Dr. Briggs, it is announced, will appeal to the synod. And the beautiful little Episcopal quarrel, says the Recorder, that has just come to an end by the departure of Father Ignatius bids fair to be succeeded by a Calvinistic bear-garden among the Presbyterians.

The Rev. M. J. Darcy, of Lockport, was so incensed at a five-year-old girl who put her tongue out at him as he drove past her father's house that he chased the child into the house and struck her several times with his whip. He was arrested therefor and was convicted of assault, the court having no confidence in the clergyman's plea that he "did it to teach the child better manners."

If the stories told by Mr. Thomas Maddern, of Tonganoxie, who has just returned from Port Natal and the interior of Africa, are true, the influence of Mr. Stanley and missionaries hav had bad effect in the Dark Continent. Mr. Maddern says Mr. Stanley has exaggerated many things and that the missionaries do more harm than good. He says the nativs are converted from happy, frugal, abstemious heathens into discontented bummers and lazy, drunken vagabonds. When the Kaffirs get religion, he says, they brood over it and consider only its spiritual side.

If our orthodox friends, says the Unitarian organ Unity, do not succeed in carrying their point about closing the Columbian Exposition on Sunday, it will not be for lack of early attention to the subject and ceaseless industry. The Independent publishes in a late issue a symposium of opinions gathered from a hundred bishops, Roman and Protestant. Among the thirteen in favor of keeping the great Fair open seven days in the week, it is worth noting the large proportion of known names of Roman Catholics and others presumably so. The spirit of Puritan rule and disciplin dies hard among its Protestant descendants, even of this free and progressiv age.

"I had rather a remarkable experience while I was chaplain in the army," remarked one of the ministers at the pastors' union at Cleveland. "What was it?" "I had been working and talking to the boys about gambling, and they finally turned all the cards in the camp over to me. The next day they were paid off. The following day I was passing out and saw a blanket spread out with two lumps of sugar on one corner, and about half the money in the camp spread out." "What were they doing?" "They were betting on which lump of sugar a fly would first light, and all the money on the blanket changed hands on the result." "What did you say to the boys?" "I said: 'Here, boys, come get your cards.'"

Father Lambing gave advice to the strikers in the Scottsdale, Pa., coke region the other Sunday. Speaking from the pulpit, he said: "I am not addressing or advising the strikers. They, or their leaders, hav joined hands with anarchial Socialists, who prefer the red flag of riot to the Stars and Stripes of law and order. I am speaking to Catholics, whose temporal and eternal welfare would be in better condition had my advice been followed. I say, 'Go to work upon the conditions offered. There will be few good men in the region when the strike is over, and they will be in demand at a premium.'" He pictured how, if they remained out of work, they would be evicted from their homes and compelled to take their families to liv in tents, at the peril of their health and morals.

One of the propositions for disposing of ex-Senator Blair of New Hampshire is to make him commissioner of immigration. This is an office, says the Sun, which Blair can giv good reason for refusing to take. When it was created in March last, through the passage of the new immigration act, Congress failed, through an oversight, to make any appropriation for the salary of its incumbent. How could Mr. Blair wait for his salary till the next Congress assembles and makes provision for its payment? Furthermore, the commissioner's salary, as established by the act, is small; it is only $4,000 a year. Under the circumstances, it cannot be supposed that President Harrison will further wound Mr. Blair's already wounded feelings by offering him the office of commissioner of immigration.

Jews are not admitted into the vast body of the Russian empire, but only into about seven provinces in the west and southwest. In St. Petersburg only Jews who are merchants of the first guild and possessing certain large amounts of wealth are admitted, and also under great restrictions members of some of the learned professions, and also under great restrictions mechanics, who are not permitted to trade, but merely to repair. When it is known that as soon as the children of these people attain to the age of twenty-one years they must either leave or are thrown into prison, it is no wonder that such a large proportion of the inmates of the prisons were found by a late anti-Jewish correspondent to be Jews. In Moscow about five years ago a Hebrew synagog was closed by the government for no other reason than that it was too magnificent and too beautiful to be used by Jews, and the Jews were compelled to desert it and permit it to be closed. Even in Western Russia, where the Jews are permitted to liv, the Jews may not even build and endow a charitable institution such as a hospital, without providing for a superintendent who is a member of the Russian church, and whose salary must be paid by the Jews.

Jehovian Christianity.

I hav noticed that orthodox Christians may be divided into four classes, viz., 1. Those who are tickled to contemplate a future existence of eternal torment for their enemies. 2. Those who care nothing for the after-death welfare of unbelievers, being solely enraptured with their own prospects. 3. Those who dislike to think of the terrible torture awaiting the impenitent. 4. They whose lives are embittered by the thought of relativs, friends, or even savages among the destined to everlasting unendursable agony. My appeal is to classes three and four. Those of the other divisions need infant education.

So long as God refrains from showing himself, herself, or itself, and refuses to restore life to the dead, there will be doubt.

A few centuries since all Christians were positivly sure of "beyond the tomb" future. They knew little of nature; but of a life following death their knowledge was immense. They knew the little life of man on earth was insignificantly incomplete compared with eternity. They knew it was far better to protect souls than to defend bodies. They hesitated not to take the life of heretic or unbeliever. Their duty was plain to understand. Better one dissenting voice silenced forever, than lambs enchanted from the "fold of Christ." They were honest certainly. With inconceivable ignorance of nature's laws, they regarded all phenomens instantaneously created relativ to themselvs. They burnt, they hanged, they invented all manner of devilish devices to torture and betray honesty; and also decided for us whether it is or is not divine, the Christian Bible. These ignoramuses were sincere, but a trifle too ignorant for me to wholly rely on for my religion. If they were mistaken concerning the ordinary operation of nature, why could they not also hav formed errone ous opinions of religion? It has generally been supposed that Moses—a murderer—Solomon—a polygamist—David—a criminal syphilitic—and some others equally disreputable are authors of important parts of the Bible. If this book is inspired, the men who wrote it, and also those who decided thus, must certainly themselvs hav been inspired. If they were inspired by God in one affair, why were they not inspired in matters other than spiritual? Why were they not inspired with sense of decency? Of justice?

During the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth centuries after Christ there existed a lot of alleged true accounts of his life, other than what we now hav in the New Testament. In these centuries the bishops and daddies of the church were exceedingly puzzled to ascertain which were the proper and which the improper biographies and gospels of Jesus. One scripture was apparently as godly as another, and it was not until after numerous councils had occurred that the early Christ adorers determined near preciseness the acts of their adored one, and this hundreds of years after his ærial voyage to heaven. These councils were mostly not attended by the spirit of Christ, as shown "on the mount," but were the scene of bigoted jealousy, quarrels with sword, and religious abuse. In the words of D. M. Bennett (to determin what the nineteenth century Christian should believe), "on one occasion the matter was put to a vote of the frenzied fanatics. Some gospels were voted up and some down. The gospel of St. Mary, the infancy of Jesus, the gospel of St. Barnabas, the gospel of St. Bartholomew, the gospel of St. Hermas, and a number of others were voted down, while those of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John were voted up and pronounced divine, though Luke was barely admitted, having a majority of a single vote." Now, if they had tied on Luke, how would that hav exhibited inspiration in voting? Of course, as it happened, the majority were inspired. Were the minority uninspired, and why? If Jesus was, and did as claimed, it can only seem that carelessness was in his make-up, for otherwise would he not hav seen that futurity had a record of his existence and gospel, the correctness of which was not guaranteed by the ballots of bigots?

Thomas Paine has been deceased less than a century, and during this time a multitude of conflicting stories about him hav been circulated, which are now believed and denied. Suppose the voters of this country ballot to see which are true and which are false accounts of Paine's life; how ludicrous even Christians would regard such decision. Yet they accept as true the alleged life of one who never authorized it, or wrote a word concerning himself or anyone else; told by contradictions in the New Testament, and its genuinness decided by votes cast by men of less intellect than many of the occupants of our insane retreats. Our savior had said "it is finished" nearly six hundred years before the primitiv Christians ceased growling about God's word as contained in his New Testament. Certainly Jesus did not mean the New Testament was finished, but with what consistence was this utterance when he knew future generations, believing not in him, would go to hell, and that plenty of contrary reports about him would be made, the merits of which would remain unsettled for centuries? Why did not Christ, if his career was necessary for futurity to be fully aware of, write himself or dictate his gospels? None of the four are known to hav been in existence in manuscript until at least one hundred and fifty years after he is said to hav lived. Why did not Christ, if it is necessary for us of to-day to believe he was God, invent the phonograph, and talk his gospel to it, thus furnishing abundant evidence of his divinity? No, this could not be. The Bible had to be voted true, while an uninspired Infidel—Thomas Edison—was decreed to invent this instrument. The fact that for centuries the Catholic church monopolized possession of the New Testament should convince intelligence that the subject of inspiration ought to be carefully investigated. Sixteen hundred years after the reputed birth of Christ there was considerable doubt about the authenticity of several books of the so called God's New Testament. Then, Martin Luther—with great, unusual sense—discarded the book of lunacy—Revelation—the book of Jude, the epistles to the Hebrews, and questioned the genuinness of others. To-day many eminent professed Christians doubt the genuinness of some of these books, in whole or part, and nothing is truer than that for "our particular superstition" we rely on fathers of the church who are noted chiefly for their credulous ignorance.

The past witnesses an age of wonderful wisdom of futurity. The present is one of almost peaceful doubt. The past was most assuredly an ignorant affair compared with now. In the gloomy years, dead religiously beyond resurrection, spiritual matters were rigidly attended to. The soul first and the body afterward, was once the Christian's motto. Only by strictly observing that maxim can one be a consistent Christian. Of what importance is this life paralleled with a life of never-terminating joy? A real believer should "take no thought for the morrow" and should pass all leisure time in seeking to save souls from hell. To be a non-absurd Christian one should eat and drink only just enough to keep living. One should not spend a single cent for superfluities. One should labor for pay only sufficient to supply one's modest Christian wants, and the remainder of one's time should surely be devoted to the "cause of Christ"—that is, saving souls from everlasting flames. One whose mind is shackled by the infamous dogma of eternal punishment really should do as is claimed consistent with, yea, despotically necessary to, a Christian. Do you find such Christians? Do we see men with tears in eyes beseeching us "escape the wrath to come?" Do we meet in the street implorers for "God's mercy on us?" Little of the kind is discovered. Yet only a few short centuries ago almost nothing else was done. In those splendid days, "Hell, hell, fire, fire," was the cry. Brimstone was burnt under the noses of offending children to remind them of the venomous vexation of a most merciful maker. In those happy times the parson's sermon ever was illuminated with the flames of hell. How is it to-day? To-day believers are not only "ashamed of Jesus" to the extent of failing to light the fires of hell before the unrepenting, but they are also rather shy about discoursing on this imaginary "fiery furnace" to fellow-believers.

Most people arrive at the conclusion, after philosophical reading and reflection, that the future of man ahead of release of life is undiscoverable, that this life is the one to enjoy, and that "happiness is the reward of good deeds alone." We hav ascertained that man, by knowing nature, can invariably prophesy correctly of earthly futurity. We know fire burns, and that water will quench flames. We know the small-pox kills, and that vaccination will prevent this dreadful malady. The bite of a mad dog is no more a death-warrant, for Pasteur—an Infidel—can prevent the hydrophobia.

We believe nature can be so completely controled that the time may be when every human on the globe need know not what fearful suffering is. We can only aim at this desirable state by carefully studying nature. Not in Bibles or religious creeds is found a nucleus for the grand reform. Let every individual realize that all is the result of causes, and that all will become causes, and in time a happy, prosperous people will everywhere be found without visiting heaven.

Infidels are perfectly satisfied that only by relieving man of his superstitious fears can paradise on earth be for all. "While there is one sad and breaking heart in the universe, no perfectly good being can be perfectly happy." And why should some survive in luxuriance, while others dwell in pain? It need not be. The churches should be turned into places of discussion and material instruction. Let the parson teach hygiene, discarding theologic medicin. Let him tell how to attain comfort on earth, and not how to evade the awful anger of a charitable creator. Instead of telling Mr. Rich how he in heaven can blissful be, let the clergyman inform Johnny Poor how he, after making Mr. Rich's riches, can be as rich as Mr. Rich. Let the minister cease to boast of the Holy Ghost and insist on cleanliness—justice first and godliness next. The time is near when the dirty laborers will all see, understand, and obtain their rights.

It seems to me no church can be Christian—one interpretation—that refuses Infidels the privilege of entering its pulpit for the purpose of attempting to show the falseness of its dogmas. This would be loving enemies with unheard-of Christian affection, yet it is fair to say Jesus himself would not refuse to hearken unto the argument of Infidels. How can you love an enemy to whom you refuse to listen? Beware of reason, for it parts you from your faith.

A pastor visits members of its flock, and of course is received with a loving, Christian spirit. Christian sheep are saints angelic in the presence of priests. If the pastor really wishes to know the exact effect of his religion in humanizing the genus homo, let him masquerade as an Infidel, and openly proclaim unbelief in the presence of Christian lambs. Why? "Oh! it is better to leave a house of prostitution undisturbed than to respect an Infidel's religious opinion. It is more Christlike to license the rum curse than to listen to Infidel arguments. Yes, anything is better than to allow Infidels privileges. Oh, yes. But we like to hav Infidels vote for us. We always employ the best physician, even if he is an Infidel. When our lives are slipping from us, or rather when our souls hav concluded to emigrate to that 'happy land,' we never disclose aversion if an Infidel doctor feels our pulse and attempts to retard the inevitable. We dislike not in the least to make a dollar in bargain with an unbeliever; but when he trys with the decoy of reason to rob us of our faith, we protest. Our kind used to years ago protest pretty greatly. Nowadays we are not allowed to protest so hard as some of use desire. However, Christianity is the 'same yesterday, to-day, and forever.'"

There are other religions in this world at present. Compared with Buddhism, Christianity is merely a side-show. To-day Buddha has over four hundred million followers. While the history of the propagation of Christianity is a horrible one of bloody crime, that of Buddhism is bloodless. Buddha was one of the wisest teachers, one of the purest men, and nearest a just god this earth has ever produced, or heaven sent. The same as Christ, Buddha is said to hav been miraculously born. His doctrins are in many particulars superior to those of Jehovah. His commands compare favorably with those of our God. They are as follows for men: 1. Do not kill; 2. Do not steal; 3. Do not commit adultery; 4. Do not lie; 5 Do not become intoxicated.

Now, our God, in place of forbidding intoxication, as did Buddha, said, "Giv strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more." Our God said, "Wine that maketh glad the heart of man." He also said, "Wine which cheereth God." Could not the Christian temperance folks find more consolation in Buddhism than in their Bible? This noble religion began 500 B.C., and does not insult us with as much nonsense as Christianity.

Brahminism is another supernatural religion which, although it is somewhat more foolish than Christianity, numbers its victims one hundred and fifty million at present. These devotionists also hav "sacred scriptures"—Hindoo—which were inspired centuries prior to the time when Moses penned his first mistake. These "scriptures" are a clear anticipation of the Christian religion. They specify the doctrin of the trinity—Brahma the creator, Vishnu the preserver, Siva the destroyer. They allege that gods could hav intercourse with virgins and produce progeny half human and half divine. They institute the belief in Christna, a supposed incarnate son of God, who led a faultless life, performed miracles, raised the dead, had disciples whose feet he washed, and who was at last crucified on a tree near the river Ganges. The savior Christna was believed in five hundred years before Jesus saved a sinner by dying on a cross. The analogy between these redeemers, Christna and Christ, evidently evinces that Jehovian Christianity is a second-hand thing. It is curious God's "scheme of salvation" is so identical with one gotten up by the heathen centuries before Christ. In the matter of God's generosity is there no room for invention? Was the great Jehovah absolutely obliged to adopt a heathen plan?

Few Christians are aware that in America years before Christ a savior was butchered to appease God's wrath. "Historical authority relativ to the crucifixion of the Mexican god, Quexalcote, and his execution upon the cross, 587 B.C., as a propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of mankind, is explicit, unequivocal, and ineffaceable. The evidence is tangible and indelibly engraven upon steel and metal plates. One of these plates represents him as having been crucified on a mountain. Another represents him as having been crucified in the heavens, as St. Justin tells us Christ was. According to another writer, he is sometimes represented as having been nailed to a cross, and by other accounts as hanging with a cross in his hand. The "Mexican Antiquities" (vol.

vi, p. 166) says: "Quexalcote is represented in the paintings of 'Codex Borgianus' as nailed to the cross. Sometimes two thieves are represented as having been crucified with him. That the advent of this crucified savior and Mexican god was long anterior to the era of Christ is admitted by Christian writers. In the work above mentioned, 'Codex Borgianus,' may be found the account, not only of his crucifixion, but of his death, burial, descent into hell, and resurrection on the third day. And another work, entitled 'Codex Vaticanus,' contains the story of his immaculate birth by a virgin mother. Many other incidents are found related of him in his sacred biography, in which we find the most striking counterparts to the more modern gospel story of Jesus Christ, such as his forty days' temptation and fasting, his riding on an ass, his purification in the temple, his baptism and regeneration by water, his forgiving of sins, being anointed with oil," etc. (Graves, The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors, pp. 109, 110). Is it possible Satan superintended establishing the religion of Quexalcote? If our Bible is true of course God did not, miraculously or otherwise, originate this ancient Mexican Christianity. Therefore it must hav been the devil's job. It seems Satan is forever getting the best of God and continually knocking the chip off his shoulder. The landlord of hell through Eve first helped us to knowledge, and also promulgated the Christian religion in both hemispheres ahead of his opponent. What does humanity need more than wisdom and Christianity? Will mankind in mass ever realize that if our Bible is true our God is a dunce? If it were not for the very valuable service rendered Jehovah by the priests and ministers, I fear the evil one would quickly obtain control of the universe and toss Jehovah through the "windows of heaven" into the "fountain of the great deep."

In the United States to doubt the holy origin of any worship except Christianity is a commendable act, but to reveal a candid opposing view of this superstition is a fearful wickedness. He becomes a victim of malice who assaults popularity, entices the hisses of hypocrisy, is the foe of blackguardism, and for recompense can only admire his own conscience. Formerly the issue of this essay would sentence the writer to imprisonment in the great unknown, the key of which is death. Such would hav been the sequence in the doleful days when people were Jehovian Christians.

I suppose my writing will be condemned by those who when struck "turn the other cheek also." I know many of the arguments are old unanswered ones. I admit being satirical, as the subject can not be justly treated otherwise. The least whisper against the divinity of Christ is by his foolish followers considered a terrible sin. Therefore I shall whisper loud. The reader will find no trace of timidity in this essay, and if you cannot bear to hear an opinion contrary to your own of Jesus Christ you had better quit reading at once.

I deny appealing to the vulgar. The needless is the only vulgar. I freely confess I see no earthly necessity for popes, priests, parsons, and Testaments as they now are. I hav no great enmity toward anyone. I wish to help rid the world of the expensiv, unnecessary priests and believers in a God who burns in fire forever an innocent mortal whose only crime is not believing what he cannot. The regular hell-fire Christians are like the buffalo. If Catholics are truth-tellers, such believers are not numerous even in their church. Certainly the creeds of orthodoxy, and also God's latest Testament, distinctly set forth the damnable divine doctrin of "everlasting fire." How many believe it? The few who really do we fain would crucify on reason's cross.

Publishing thoughts is becoming a candidate for unconcealed criticism. And if Rev. De Witt Talmage, after reading this attack on his cherished particular nonsense, which will be contained in this worthy paper for several issues, concludes to attempt to disprove the logic, or even to pray for the author, let him do either openly in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and not in his closet (Tabernacle).

Ecclesiastical vs. Civil Authority.

Ecclesiastical authority is now being tried before the bar of civil justice by that veteran pleader, Parker Pillsbury. He makes an able defense on behalf of humanity in general, and woman in particular, and mentions the fact in strong terms that God is about to be, if he is not already, enthroned in the Constitution of the United States, while man and woman are, or will be made, to abdicate. He disposes of the woman question in a manner to cheer the hearts of all noble emancipators, and his logical conclusions will bring pallor to the cheek of every priest. If the women who are dominated by priestly rule (and their numbers are legion, but they are not aware of it) would read this little brochure with unprejudiced eyes, what an awakening there would be! He is terse and concise but never arrogant or austere, entertaining and dignified without being stilted. I take him to be the sort of a man to whom, when he chooses to speak, people are ready to listen, certain of hearing something. All I can say will giv no idea of the book, and you must read it for yourselvs. The women should read it by all means, every one of them. MARY BAIRD FINCH.

Emily Bouton on the Author of "Is This Your Son, My Lord?"

Emily S. Bouton, in the Toledo Blade, publishes the following entertaining facts about the brave, bold little woman who in her recent novel, "Is This Your Son, My Lord?" has crested such a genuin sensation by her fearless unmasking of conventional immorality and hypocrisy.

The personality of an author who has won a wide reputation by long-continued and excellent work, or by some sudden and brilliant stroke of genius, always becomes of interest to the great world of readers. They want to know just how this wonderful woman—if it be a woman—carries herself; what is the color of her hair, her eyes; who were her father and mother, her grandparents, and where is her home—in short, every minutest bit of information is greedily gathered in order to bring up a complete picture before her readers of the person who has so won their admiration.

This is true of the writer, Helen H. Gardener, of that much-talked-of book, "Is This Your Son, My Lord?" and all sorts of paragraphs hav been going the rounds of the papers regarding her, of which the following is a specimen:

Mrs. Helen Gardener, author of the novel, "Is This Your Son, My Lord?" is about thirty years old, and is described as a really beautiful woman, a little above medium hight, of well-rounded proportions, with an intellectual face, deep brown eyes, full red lips, and high, broad forehead. She is a daughter of Julia Ward Howe, and possesses Radical views.

This appeared in Current Literature, and it being naturally supposed that that excellent magazine must be correct, it has been widely copied.

Helen H. Gardener is not, however, a daughter of Julia Ward Howe, nor is she even of New England origin. Her ancestors hav always lived in Maryland or Virginia, and she herself first saw light in the latter state, near Winchester. She traces her family directly from the daughter of Lord Baltimore, Miss Calvert, who married a Mr. Chenoweth, he being the first sheriff of Baltimore county, Maryland. Her own father was Rev. A. G. Chenoweth; her mother a grandniece of Sir Robert Peel, so that it is evident that she has back of her the culture of generations.

The personal description given in the paragraph quoted, is, I think, very nearly correct. Her face is full of intelligence, and the earnestness that is visible in all that she writes looks forth from her dark eyes.

It is easy to see that intense inward conviction points her pen, and it is this quality that makes her novel, with its background of realism, so vitally pregnant with meaning. This book has taken an almost unprecedented hold upon the thinking public, and, I learn, has sold to the extent of twenty-five thousand copies in five months. A knowledge of this fact will explain the raison d'être of the following communication from the author, who, I can well believe, is almost submerged by the tide of communications setting toward her:

I hav been asked a great many times to write things about myself for the papers. I hav always declined. In the first place I dislike the looks of anything like personal advertising, and in the second place I did not feel that my personality was of great interest to the public; but I do wish I could—without seeming to advertise myself, my personality—say one or two things.

A great many people write to me or send me little tokens that touch me deeply, and yet I cannot reply to half of them. Each one, doubtless, expects a full reply and feels hurt that none comes. It is not want of appreciation, but want of time and strength that prevents me from sending a kindly recognition and sincere thanks for the attention.

To-day brought me a large mail. It contained strange, beautiful, and pathetic things. I appreciate them all, but cannot reply to all. Let me explain and let me beg my unknown friends to accept my earnest thanks for their interest and warm expressions, whether these expressions take a written or an objectiv form.

A sample of my mail is the one received to-day. It was composed of innumerable advertisments, of course, a number of letters from friends, a number from literary and scientific men and women who are known to me by name only; two sermons recently preached upon my last book, with the "compliments" of their authors; several books with a request to "read and giv your opinion;" two manuscripts of aspiring authors with the same request—one a novel, the other a "new system of geometry;" the latter manuscript to be read with sufficient care to enable me to recommend it to a publisher! A pile of newspapers with notices more or less personal and interesting marked for me to read; a box of gold ore from a miner in New Mexico; a live horned toad from a miner in old Mexico, with a letter saying it was his desire to send me something no one else in this climate would own, and a very queer and amusing little fellow Bildad (that is the toad's name) is, too; a silver filagree bracelet, a most beautiful thing of Spanish workmanship from Central America; another box of ore and lava from Oregon, and last, most pathetic and touching, an intensely religious "Easter card" of the usual sort, with the written message on the outside of the envelope:

God will bless your footsteps wherever you go, my lightfooted angel. Yours truly, MARY MAGDALENE.

This came from Cleveland, O., and if I knew how to reach the woman who sent it, I should certainly send her some personal message; but since I do not, I hope I may reach her this way and make her understand how deeply that little message of hers and her signature touched me. The letters I get from women are worth working hard for. They repay me for all I may do, for they are chiefly from those who need help, and who feel that I hav given it to them. The letters I get from men are chiefly from scientific, thoughtful men; men who are engaged upon the problems of life in one field or another. They are, as a rule, from calm, earnest, studious men, many of them well known in their fields of thought. But the women who write are chiefly mothers who cry out with wild, passionate protest, or with tearful inquiry. I wish that I might reply to all; but if I did so, I should do nothing else—my time and strength would all be consumed. It is for this reason that I should like to say through the press that each and all of these letters and evidences of interest and confidence are not only appreciated by me, but they are helpful and stimulating as well, and I hope my seeming neglect will pain no one, and will be understood, not as an unkindness, but simply as what it is—necessity.

Helen Gardener has a future before her, we devoutly hope and believe, in which she may, with strong, fearless grasp, handle the evils that eat into the heart of a people and bring, unless checked, their glory low in the dust. Everything that she has written shows the keen perceptions of a pure woman who has the courage to do battle for what she believes to be right. She has the literary gift of so choosing her words that they strike home, and hence cannot fail of their ultimate purpose. EMILY S. BOUTON.

Is Young Kaiser William a Friend to the Devil?

From the Recorder.

The emperor of Germany's latest reform measure is a decided improvement on those which preceded it, but nevertheless it has caused much grief and indignation to the persons to whom it specially applies. He has ordered the court chaplains to cut down the length of their sermons. Hereafter, no matter what may be the occasion, no sermon by any of these learned and eloquent divines must occupy more than fifteen minutes in the delivery of it.

This is a terrible and radical reform. Questions of divinity and scholarship are continually coming to the fore in Germany and need to be discussed from the sacred desk. Strauss has still to be confuted, though the famous Tübingen professor has been in his grave for several years. Feuerbach and Bruno Baur must be met and knocked down from the pulpit, though they, too, are slumbering in the cold and silent tomb. Renan still livs and writes his heretical essays, and it is necessary for the well-being of the flock that his Atheistical rubbish shall be swept away with a high and mighty ministerial hand. Infidelity is rife all over Germany, and Dr. Büchner, who is a Materialist of the deepest dye, has hosts of followers, while such men as Helmholtz are turning the minds of men away from spiritual things to those which concern only the senses. In short, Germany is in a very bad way so far as religion is concerned. How is the evil to be met and overthrown?

The emperor says that fifteen minutes of dissertation on the part of court chaplains is a time long enough in which to meet the adversary of souls and lay him low. The court chaplains and the orthodox generally say that this is a most abominable error, for they believe, and not without reason, that the devil cannot be downed in less than an hour or two. He has the prestige of long years, during which his ability has steadily increased instead of diminishing. Age can not wither him, nor custom stale his infinit variety. He is to-day more wily and alert than he was when he attacked the human race in its earliest infancy and poisoned it through the device of the apple in Eden. He goes around like a roaring lion and gobbles up some of the very brightest of German intellects, and yet the bumptious young emperor actually has the face to tell the court chaplains that they must never go gunning for him in a chase lasting for more than a quarter of an hour!

Perhaps the emperor is right, and believes that by retiring Prince Bismarck he himself has aimed so serious a blow at the arch-fiend that the sermons of his court chaplains are works of supererogation rather than anything else. There are many people also who detest long sermons on principle, and among these the emperor is plainly to be reckoned. But still, desirable as the new reform may seem to busy men, the chaplains and their orthodox followers hav a clear right and a good reason to be highly displeased with it, and probably influences will be brought to bear upon the emperor which shall induce him to giv the pastors eighteen or twenty minutes, or even twenty-five, in which to counteract all the diabolic influences under which Germany is rapidly becoming a land of Atheists.

The Garden of Eden.

Theology teaches that God is all-wise; that he knows all things; that he foreknows all things from eternity. If this be true, then he could not hav been deceived in regard to any part of his work. He foreknew all that would result from it. He knew just how men would act; how unrighteous, cruel, and selfish they would be; how few would be honorable and just and what a vast multitude would be vicious and cruel; how few would be saved and what a countless number would be lost. He knew all the pain and anguish and death that would ensue before he created the germs of disease. He knew what poverty, misery, and crime would follow the creation of alcohol. Now, if God created all things, and if before he created anything he knew all the consequences that would result from each particular creation, he and he alone is personally responsible for all there is, be it good or bad. To say, as theologians do, that the devil originated evil, does not alter the case a particle, if it is true that God created the devil. Nor do we find any relief in the assumption that the devil was originally good, if God knew from the first that he would abandon that goodness. While to assert that God only permits the evil is a miserable subterfuge, if at the same time he has the power to prevent it. Theology teaches that the first man and woman were created perfect, whereas the Bible goes to show that they were without modesty, and knew nothing whatever of good and evil—a condition more degraded than that of the lowest savages. Theology teaches that they fell by eating forbidden fruit, but the Bible teaches that their eyes were opened to see their nakedness and know good from evil—an improvement over their original condition. I would denominate this a rise instead of a fall.

Theology teaches that their act in eating that fruit so offended God that he cursed them and all their descendants with spiritual blindness, physical weakness, and ultimate death; that he cursed the very earth for their sakes, making a brief life thereon possible only through labor and sorrow. Thus it seeks to account for all our ignorance, disease, trouble, and mortality. Laying aside the levity that such notions tend to produce, I ask in all candor, is there any rational ground for believing such a theory? Granting now that any part of the original story is true; that there ever was a creation, and that the first man and woman were created in a full-grown state, the theological idea of the fall is still an irrational one. When we consider how inexperienced they were; how ignorant they must hav been of the real nature of the penalty threatened, and the fact that they were then without any knowledge of good and evil, how can one believe that a just God would for the very first offense punish them with such cruel severity? To hav so punished the actual offenders would hav made him worse than all the Pharaohs, Moses, Herods, Constantines, Calvins, and Torquemadas that ever lived; while to hav so punished their unborn descendants was adding infinit cruelty to an already infinit crime. Could any reasonable person be expected to love and worship such a God? Even the thought of such a thing is extremely absurd.

Look at this case in a plain, common-sense way. What appreciation could Adam and Eve hav had of the moral quality of their action? They did not even know good from evil. How could they experience any fear or dread of the punishment threatened? They had never been punished for anything. They did not even hav the advantage of the old adage, "A burnt child dreads the fire." They did not know whether a punishment would be painful or pleasing. What could they hav known of death? They had never seen a dead person. They did not know whether death was a curse or a blessing—nor hav we found out yet, notwithstanding our boasted learning and progress. There is not the least intimation in the Bible that these things were ever explained to them, and if they were not where is the justice of the punishment administered? If it be assumed that they were explained to them, still the punishment was unduly severe, that being the first offense.

If, however, it could be shown that they deserved all the punishment they are supposed to hav received, I see no reason why their children should be punished also. They were then unborn, and millions of them are yet to be born. There is no justice in punishing them for acts they never committed.

Theology teaches that God is infinit in knowledge, infinit in power, and infinit in goodness. Now, if he is infinit in knowledge he must hav foreknown every circumstance of the fall. He knew that the serpent was in the garden; that he was a subtle beast; that he would tempt the woman; that she would eat of the forbidden fruit; that in turn she would tempt the man, and that he too would eat thereof. If he is infinit in power, then he could hav interposed and prevented every circumstance here mentioned. He could hav put the serpent out of the garden. He could hav put enmity between him and the woman before as easily as after the temptation. Or he could hav interfered at the outset of the interview. If he is infinit in goodness, then he could not hav done them an injustice, nor would he hav permitted another to do so. A rational view of this Eden tragedy leads me to conclude that it was all good and just, that it was according to the divine purpose and therefore just as it should hav been; or that God is wanting in some one or more of the attributes which theology ascribes to him in an infinit degree. If he did not know what was about to transpire then he is not infinit in knowledge; if he knew but could not prevent it then he is not infinit in power; and if he knew all that was pending and had power to prevent it but would not, then he is responsible for it. If the temptation was wicked and the eating of the forbidden fruit was a sin, he is not infinit in goodness. If the temptation was according to his purpose and foreknowledge, and if he could hav prevented it and would not, then he is more to blame than the serpent, unless it was right and proper that the temptation occurred, and in that case the serpent was not to blame and should not hav been punished. If the eating of the forbidden fruit was according to divine purpose and foreknowledge and if it could hav been obviated by the interposition of the infinit power, then God is more to blame for it than either Eve or Adam. If it should be argued that it was right and proper that they should hav eaten thereof, then it was wrong to punish them for so doing, and infinitly worse to punish their unborn children.

Look at it in any way we can, from any point of view that can be occupied and in any light in which it may be presented, the theological dogma of the fall of man is an intellectual absurdity and a moral monstrosity. If infinit knowledge knew what was pending and infinit power refused to interfere and infinit goodness remained indifferent, this infinit trinity perpetrated an infinit cruelty upon a finite creature.

Theology teaches that God is infinit in all his attributes; that he is omnipresent. Then where was he while the woman was being tempted? Can the omnipresent be absent from anywhere? If he was present, why did he suffer this imposition upon the ignorant credulity of an inexperienced being? A word from him would hav been sufficient. Can he be called a loving father who would stand by and see his child led to destruction when the slightest effort upon his part would prevent it? If God is omnipresent, then he witnessed every circumstance of the fall without once attempting to prevent it. His appearance in the garden after the transgression, calling unto Adam, "Where art thou?" was a farce, a cruel mockery, unworthy of an infinit being.

These words are not uttered in any captious spirit of fault-finding. They are not born of prejudice. They are words of truth and soberness. They are not intended to vex our Christian friends or ridicule what they deem true and sacred. I am seeking the truth. If theology is true, I want to know it. I hav studied it in a spirit of truth seeking. And in this matter of the fall I find it without any rational basis and inconsistent with good morality. It makes God a monster of cruelty, unworthy of our respect, much less our love. T. C. KILGORE.

Nature, Health, and Longevity.

A Freethinker should be profound not merely as to Bible absurdities, but as to all errors and their causes. We should know that we liv, move, and hav our being not in the supernatural but in the natural. The more and more we come to this, the more and more we make life worth living. As we depart from nature life becomes more worthless, and in too many cases intolerable, as is painfully evinced by the increasing numbers of suicides. Waiving for the present the investigation of the nicer discriminations of anatomy and physiology and the stricter hygienic modes of life, let it suffice to say that the animals living in a state of nature are the purest and healthiest. The monkey tribes, the more nearly allied to us, on their simple, natural food hav scarcely a single one of the numerous diseases affecting our kind. Without teas, coffees, animal food cooked to death, condiments, lard, baking powders, mince pies, preserves, pickles, tobacco, alcoholic beverages, etc., they are without drugs, doctors, prayers, or faith cures. Even from the four different conflicting drug schools we get the testimony that if a patient must hav meat, by all means let it be the wild animals, pure and natural as possible. Then why not discard our unnatural and at first distasteful habits, that we may save ourselvs from Shakspere's sea of troubles, and enjoy life? Indulge me in saying that in my former profession, eating what was set before me, asking no questions for conscience's sake, I slid into dyspepsia, and was told by a common-sense honest doctor that no drug could cure it. Pure, easily digested diet, bathing, and exercise would restore, or rather nature, if natural habits would permit her. Cease the cause and cease the effect. So it proved. Then at thirty-five—now at seventy-nine—not a drug swallowed through the intermediate period, nor an hour's sickness but by a silly departure from nature's health code. I read and write easily, without glasses, and but for an injured side and sprained wrist I could earn my living on the farm, and yet walk twenty miles per day, on Graham bread, oatmeal, and a little fruit.

If our bad habits do not cause our bad health—as all Drs. Hall and Jenning's disciples know—then we ask all old conservativs, what are the causes? Go to work and find the cause, or candidly ascribe diseases to chance—or to Providence, as Christians hav it. Even should they say the devil, then, as their God made all things, he surely had something to do in making the devil. All we ask is, what I often had to ask of my associate Bible Christians objecting to our mode of abolishing slavery: In all reason giv us your mode. The only answer culminated in rebellion, the slave-holding confederacy, and finally the lost cause. Is it not easier and quite more rational to keep well than to dose well? Were it not wiser to employ the physician at so much per annum to keep the family in health than to attempt too often in vain to get them well when sick? In some countries doctors are salaried by the year and their pay stopped every day any one member is in bed.

Again, let us consider the first importance of keeping well, as all concede the importance of keeping sober. No one can doubt the cause, and may I not add the crime, of drunkenness. Nor can any one doubt the reasonable and right way of sobering. None can be so silly, even when drunk, as to employ a doctor to dose him sober. He stops drinking—ceases the cause—and nature sobers him. Even so of all manners of diseases. My good daughter in New York made me an extra supper, invited guests, and I ate just before an ocean passage for Florida. The combination of food and vessel-rocking arrested digestion, and for three tedious days and nights not a bite of food entered my mouth. Tepid water assisted nature to vomit, and at the same time rinsed the stomach. Recovering, and eating no more such suppers, my health was better than usual. Once I sent a well-learned physician to examin a poor woman's child about to die. He returned and reported the case hopeless. I asked him if I must tell the mother that her child had to die. He said, "Nay, tell her that two-thirds at least of her child is dead, and the third left of too little vitality to enable nature to restore it." So he said disease is but so much waste—so much destruction of life. We die, not all at once, but by piecemeal. Then if our lives are of more value than all else, should not their preservation claim our first, most earnest and profound attention? To say there are no reliable laws of health, or that they are too intricate or mysterious to be learned, is surely to say that doctors are humbugs. If, indeed, the profession can not or hav not learned them, how can they bring patients to them, or restore them? If, in a word, they know not how to keep well, how can they know how to get well? The very meaning of disease expresses unhappiness. Nor is it too much to say that it leaves the life left in us hardly worth living. It is only tolerable on the hope of getting well. Perfect health—bodily and mentally—is perfect happiness, giving a peace (excusing the gospel phrase) which the world can neither giv nor take away.

Then, as life becomes more than worth living, its length is valuable. Usually the aged enjoy life less and less. Such is not my experience. As I am free of an ache or pain, as I witness the triumph of our wonderful age and its glorious progress, I am thankful to nature, to my parents, for the brains they gave me, and am happy in life as I will be in death.

"The Mother of Liberalism."

[Lucy N. Colman passed through Chicago last week en route to Dr. de Lespinasse's hospitable home in Iowa, where she expects to spend the summer, and I had the pleasure of being entertained by her a couple of evenings during her stay. The Inter-Ocean called upon her, and over a column of her reminiscences appeared the above quotation. The Herald had the following extended interview.—E. A. STEVENS.]

Was Abraham Lincoln an Abolitionist? No doubt he was in fact, but was he so from choice? The question is perplexing, and demonstrates anew the oft-repeated claim that the history of the late war yet remains to be written. And it is not from musty archives only that the historian gathers his material. Queer bits of history come to light in the humdrum of every-day life. They come from the secluded retreat of the retired statesman as well as from the midst of busy life in a metropolis, and the gathering and sifting of these bits form much of the historian's work, even if he was a contemporary of the epoch to which he devotes his labor. Thus it is that the initiatory question turned up in Chicago yesterday to be answered in the ephemeral pages of a newspaper. If the source whence the answer comes is untarnished—and there is no reason nor evidence to doubt its clearness—then the answer is that Abraham Lincoln was an Abolitionist from force of circumstances, and not from free choice. Strange, perhaps, that such a weighty historical statement should fall to the lot of a newsgatherer and not be the fruit of much scientific historical research and erudite criticism, but it is entitled to credence from the nature of the circumstances under which it was obtained.

The remarkable statement comes from a contemporary of the great president, from one who knew him well, labored for years as an apostle of abolition on the rostrum and in print, and who is now, at the venerable age of seventy-four years, still engaged in promulgating advanced ideas in humanitarian principles. It was Mrs. Lucy N. Colman who told a reporter for the Herald yesterday evening in unmistakable terms that Abraham Lincoln never would hav freed a slave if he could hav helped it, and that she had this admission from the president's own lips and in the presence of witnesses. Mrs. Colman passed through the city yesterday on her way to Orange City, Ia., where she will spend the summer. She stopped over for the day with friends at 498 West Madison street. There is where the reporter found her in the snug parlor of a cosily appointed flat. Mrs. Colman is from Syracuse, N. Y. She has abandoned the lecture platform on account of the physical exertion required by it, but her mind is undimmed by the influences of time, and she is now writing her "Reminiscences," part of which has already appeared in book form under that title.

"Daring thing for an old woman," remarked Mrs. Colman, "to say that Abraham Lincoln was no Abolitionist at heart. Yet he told me so himself. 'I would not free one slave if it were possible to save the Union without it.' That is what he said, and he meant it, too. Of that I am convinced."

Mrs. Colman was one of the early Abolitionists. Contemporaneous with Wendell Phillips, William Lloyd Garrison, and others, she was for years employed by the Massachusetts Antislavery Society to preach the gospel of the freedom of the negro from the rostrum. Naturally she met all the Abolitionists of national prominence in those days, and she also met the famous Sojourner Truth, who died at the ripe old age of one hundred and twelve years. It was during an interview with Lincoln which Mrs. Colman brought about for Mrs. Truth that the president pronounced himself a pro-slavery man at heart. But the details Mrs. Colman had better tell in her own way, which was straightforward, pointed, and had every semblance of truth.

"It was in the year before Mr. Lincoln's second nomination," related Mrs. Colman, "that Sojourner Truth came to me with the request to procure her an interview with the president. She was not ready to die, old though she was then, until her eyes had seen the first antislavery president of the United States. The good old woman had supposed that she could walk right into Mr. Lincoln's office and shake hands, but she was sorely disappointed by red tape and flunkeyism and in her perplexity she came to me with the request to take care of her. Fortunately I knew Mrs. Lincoln's dressmaker—like Sojourner Truth, a colored woman—and she prevailed upon the wife of the president to procure an appointment for us.

"We came at the set time, a Saturday morning at 8 o'clock, but we had to wait for three mortal hours before we were admitted. The president was closeted with a deputation of merchant tailors who had come to plead for one of their trade that had been dealing with the South. Mr. Lincoln was a great story-teller, and I suppose that he told stories to these tailors all the while. During our weary wait a second black woman came in, anxious to see the president. It seemed in those days that if anything had to be done for a black woman I had to do it, and so I told this second arrival to follow me right into the president's presence.

"She did. We all three went in, and I tell you frankly that Mr. Lincoln's attitude in meeting the two black women struck me very much as one that a man would assume at an unexpected visit from his washerwoman. I told Mr. Lincoln quickly that I had not come to ask anything, but was simply acting as a guide for my two colored companions, and then Sojourner Truth advanced and said that she could not die without seeing the first antislavery president.

"'Mrs. Truth,' replied the president abruptly, 'I am not an antislavery man. If I could save the Union without freeing the slaves I would not liberate a single one!'

"I am sure that these were the president's words. The circumstances as well as the work in which I was engaged fixed them indelibly upon my mind. I told the president how much I was struck with his remarks, and suggested that much was allowable in war that would not stand in peace. Mr. Lincoln told me it was his candid opinion that the two races could not liv together without detriment to both. Sojourner Truth took out a photograph of herself, which she was then peddling around the country, and asked the president to exchange it for one of his, meaning of course a greenback with his vignet picture, but Mr. Lincoln would not make the exchange.

"We were about to leave when the president called me back and showed me a letter which the other black woman had presented to him. It was from her husband, who was in a colored regiment that had been eleven months at the front, and had not received a dollar pay. The letter, of course, asked for assistance.

"'What can I do?' said Mr. Lincoln. 'I hav no more money than she has.'

"Mr. President,' I replied, 'if you will giv me that in writing as an indorsement of the letter I will take care of the poor woman.'

"Mr. Lincoln shook his head smilingly, but he finally took up the letter and before handing it to me wrote on the envelope that he considered this a worthy case, or some similar phrase.

"No!" said Mrs. Colman with considerable emphasis, "Lincoln was not an Abolitionist. On the negro question he was a Southerner at heart. It was different with President Johnson, to whom Sojourner Truth also went to see the second antislavery president. He knew just how to receive her, and he did it in the kindest manner.

"I believe I am the relict of Abolition as preached by the women of those days," said Mrs. Colman, with a smile, "and I would preach it yet if it were permissible that a lecturer could sit in a chair. As it is, I hav to confine myself to writing."

Mrs. Colman certainly makes the impression of a woman possessed of a vigorous mind. Her talk is not embellished with much of the phraseology that professional writers are apt to employ in conversation. Time has whitened her hair, which she wears in the profuse ringlets of the fashion of fifty years ago, and has graven many a deep furrow into her strongly cut features, but her eye is bright and her voice is strong—of that deep contralto tone which is almost masculin. She has pronounced ideas on social Liberalism in general and on Spiritualism in particular; yet there is nothing about her to suggest the "emancipated woman," as that term is now generally and falsely understood. The old lady reminds one of Jane Grey Swisshelm, of whom she was a life-long friend.

She does not hesitate to express her views in language that is conduciv of misunderstanding. For instance, when she speaks of her lecturing tour in Michigan, where she advanced anti-Spiritualistic doctrins, she refers to mobs that attempted to break up her meetings. "Who were the leaders of these mobs?" she asks, and then supplies the answer herself by saying: "Always ministers or leaders of the Republican party." She is equally positiv in her social views.

"Our war has all to be fought over again," she says. "We hav abolished chattel slavery, but we left workmen of all colors in a condition worse than slavery, and this must eventuate in a war more bitter than we passed through."

Spiritual Phenomena.

Mr. M. L. Salter's contribution to THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 9th is an extraordinary missil. Thos. Paine justly remarks: "When the tongue and pen are let loose in a frenzy of passion, it is the man and not the subject that becomes exhausted."

It is evident Mr. Salter is an honest man and intends to be fair, but perhaps is so disgusted and enraged at the multiplicity and boldness with which frauds beset us on every side that he is impressed to giv vent to his fury in a species of learned pedantry. It puts one in mind of a countryman's first entrance into a metropolis. He hears the big bells ring but is puzzled to find how the "clapper hangs."

The writer is certain that if Mr. Salter were acquainted with what is called "impressible psychology," more recently dubbed hypnotism, he would hav more charity for poor human nature. Being ignorant of clairvoyance and impressible psychology, in his eagerness to obtain truth he produced the very supposed fraud he was looking for. Don't be discouraged. Try again, Mr. Salter, but first take a few lessons in mesmeric impressions. MESMER.

An Infidel Under Peculiar Conditions.

A reporter for the Chicago News got hold of B. P. Hutchinson—"Old Hutch," the great grain speculator—while that individual was in Boston, and this is a portion of what the great Chicagoan was induced to say:

"Bob Ingersoll is by all odds the best preacher in the country."

"B. F. Butler is the greatest man in Massachusetts to-day, both in brains and ability. Daniel Webster was the greatest man the state ever knew. Rufus Choate as a lawyer was incomparable."

"What do you think of the business outlook under the present administration?"

"No you don't, my boy; I've not got to business yet. But speaking of business I will just remark that I consider old Cornelius Vanderbilt the brightest business man the country has ever produced."

"You say that you believe Ingersoll to be the greatest preacher. What do you consider follows death?"

"I don't believe in purgatory, heaven, nor hell; simply death, eternal sleep and happiness."

"What do you think of money?"

"The worst word in the world. It makes more people unhappy than any other word in the dictionary. By the way, just say that I think that Tecumseh Sherman and Robert E. Lee were the two greatest generals of the New World."

"Are you interested at all in politics?"

"No, not much. Why should I mix myself up with politics or religion? I don't care whether a man is a Democrat or a Republican, a Catholic or a Methodist, a Presbyterian or a Universalist. My religion is Tom Paine's: 'The world is my country, to do good my religion.'"

Mr. E. A. Stevens, in sending the interview here, adds: "The crusty old speculator is usually about as approachable as a grizzly bear, but on this occasion he doubtless had a considerable quantity of his customary lubricant on board and, when in that condition, usually blossoms out as a brave, bold Infidel. A companion of his cups tells me that he could generally estimate how much the grain-dealer had imbibed by the drift of his conversation on religion. For years Hutchinson was worth millions of dollars, but if he ever contributed $10 to Freethought, I am not aware of it. He did giv George Chainey $5 once, and that so overcame him that he hasn't got over it yet. If Paine never had a more activ admirer, nor more consistent follower, the cause of Freethought would be poorly represented."

Doctor Monroe Says Something About It.

From the Ironclad Age.

B. C. Murray, the able editor of the Denison, Tex., Sunday Gazetteer, has been "worriting" the post-office department at Washington. He wanted to find out if it was unlawful for an Infidel to call a spade a spade, and lawful for "a Christian gentleman" to call the same spade a spade. In other words, he wanted to know if obscenity, coarseness, and vulgarity, when found in the good book, were lawfully mailable, and unlawful when found in the uninspired books written by wicked men. And he found out. He went at it through the red-tape system necessary to a hearing. THE TRUTH SEEKER has also been trying to worm a decision out of the department. But THE TRUTH SEEKER went at it head-foremost and with malice prepense. And the department maintained a dignified silence. Hence Macdonald roareth and teareth his most intimate linen. Mr. Tyner is the attorney for the post-office department, and to him the matter being referred, he addresses the postmaster at Denison thus:

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.
April 24, 1891.

C. T. DOUGHERTY, Postmaster, Denison, Tex., Sir: In your letter of the 17th instant you stated that Mr. B. C. Murray "is anxious for a ruling from the department on the questions he raises" in a certain communication of his bearing date of the 18th instant, which was transmitted with your letter.

The question that Mr. Murray raised is as to the mailability of the volume entitled "Holy Bible." I find no other question involved in his communication, and I think I do not misunderstand the full scope of the question, for he says: "I hav a book which I would like to hav transmitted through the mails; but before mailing the same, I wish to be sure that, in doing so, I would not be violating the act of Congress passed March 3, 1873, and amended July 12, 1876."

If Mr. Murray should offer the Holy Bible for mailing, you can receive and deliver it at your office or transmit it in the mails; for it is not believed in this department to come within the prohibitory clauses of the act referred to. The penalty portions of said statute are enforcible by the courts, and the question of his liability thereunder is a proper one to be submitted to the United States attorney.

You may assure Mr. Murray that the mailability of the volume will not be questioned by the post-office department or by any postmaster.

The volume sent with your communication is herein returned. Very respectfully, JAMES N. TYNER,
Assistant Attorney-General.

So now if any depraved Infidel wants to mail the holy Bible to some Christian minister, with a great many passages marked, that would be indecent and obscene if found in any other book, he can do it without fear of arrest and imprisonment. Moses Harman will now cease publishing the obscene matter that has brought him to the pen and fill up his paper with choice extracts from the good book. By this method he will be able to serve the cause of Freethought and the physical emancipation of woman much more effectually, and at the same time keep himself out of the penitentiary.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. JAMIESON closed his lecture tour in Kansas at Everest, and cannot accept any more lecture calls until October 1st. Address for lectures, for dates after October 1st, at box 366, Des Moines, Ia.

ON May 22d Dr. R. K. Noyes, of Boston, will speak at the Liberal Club, answering the question, "Is Religion Useful to Humanity?" Dr. Noyes is an able speaker and writer and his address will be of value.

ON Sunday, May 24th, Miss Ada Campbell, of New York, will lecture before the Newark Liberal League, subject: "Charles Bradlaugh, His Life and Work." This will be the final lecture before the summer vacation, the League adjourning until the third Sunday in September. The lecturer furnishes her services free, and the collection will be forwarded to the Charles Bradlaugh Monument Fund.

THE hard facts of science, which are testified by the sharp experience of every day, will hav no difficulty in maintaining their ground against the windy buffets of a decrepit infallibility sent about drowsy ears once a week on a Sunday. The more obstinately an unreasoning theology is preached, the more widely will a reasoning Infidelity present itself.—Fraser's Magazine.

Homeless for a Week.

I suppose many of THE TRUTH SEEKER'S readers read the story of Henry Billings as narrated in a recent issue of the New York World. And I also suppose they will agree with me that it was very interesting.

Billings, being out of work and without money, was, naturally enough, anxious to secure employment. Jobs seem to hav been somewhat scarce, or workers plenty, where he came from—New Jersey, if I remember rightly—and so he resolved to come to New York. As he had no money, he was compelled to use that form of conveyance commonly called "shanks' mare." After walking for a week he reached New York "dead broke," as he puts it, and was compelled to beg in order to secure sufficient money to get his supper and night's lodging. After begging till long past midnight, he got sixteen cents, and, meeting a tramp named Tom, was taken by him to a lodging-house in Mulberry Bend where, for a few pennies, he was allowed to sleep in what was somewhat mistakenly called a hammock. When he was routed out in the early morning, he started in quest of a job. It hardly seems to be a crime to search for a means of livelihood, and yet if Henry Billings had been a criminal he could not hav been treated much worse. On asking for work, he was repulsed, cursed at, and, in a number of instances, actually assaulted. Eventually, he got a job in the "Swamp" handling leather for the princely wage of $8 per week, and now makes the joyful statement that he is "saved." I hav thus briefly touched upon the leading features of his experience, so that those readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER who did not read the article will hav at least an idea of the character of it. It is a touching story—a pathetic picture of the misery and degradation existing in our large cities.

Told in the World's graphic fashion, with its leading features painted in vivid colors, and illustrations of many of the most striking events added, it is a story calculated to stir the blood of even the most callous or careless.

It seems a cold, cruel thing that a young man, sober, intelligent, and honest, cannot work if he wants to. It is a cruel and heartless thing that he should hav been abused and assaulted for simply asking in a quiet, respectful manner for work. Yes, it is indeed a touching tale, this story of Henry Billings's experience. You realize the cruelty of it all, I feel sure. It almost makes you doubt, for a moment or two, if our highly-lauded Christian civilization is the grand and glorious thing it is cracked up to be, and you almost wonder if pagan barbarism was so very much worse. But let us look at this a little more closely and see if we cannot find out the cause of Henry Billings's week of misery and desperation. He was discharged, I take it, by his previous employers. I don't know just why, but I suppose they had not work enough to keep him occupied, or it may be they found some one who could keep body and soul together for less money than Henry Billings required for that important purpose. In either case you can hardly blame them. So Henry Billings, finding himself out of a job, started out for New York with only his nativ capital of good health, self-reliance, and ready adaptability to circumstances. A man whom he asked for alms told him he was a tramp and a nuisance. Was he wrong? Was he heartless? Isn't it a fact that tramps are a nuisance? When you were returning to your pleasant, comfortable home last night after passing a few social hours with some boon companions, at least one tramp asked you for pecuniary assistance, I am sure. Didn't you think he was a nuisance, if not something worse? Did you giv him the trifling sum he so anxiously solicited? And if you did—which I doubt—don't you know that by so doing you encouraged pauperism and idleness? How was the man to know that Billings was a worthy object of charity?

The fact that Billings told him so didn't make it so. If you are going to believe all the cock-and-bull stories tramps and beggars will tell you you had better lay in a fresh stock of credulity. The man told Billings to go work. Anything bad or wrong about that? I don't know what you think of it, but in my judgment it was very good advice. But you say, "Billings could not find work, and was abused and maltreated when he looked for it." That was not the man's fault, now, was it? Sit down here with me, my truth seeking friend, and we will quietly talk this matter over. Isn't it a fact that Billings broke the law when he solicited alms on the public highway? And isn't it another fact that those who gave him money aided and abetted him in the reprehensible act of breaking the law, that divine and sacred thing? There is no doubt on that point, is there? If every tramp was successful in begging the country would overflow with tramps and mendicants, who, like the priests and parsons and other professional servants of "God," would fatten on the toil of industry. If on the other hand we put our Billings's on the island and keep them there until they giv up the vicious and immoral habit of tramping and asking for bread when they are hungry we'll deal a death-blow to that form of crime, won't we, and at the same time solve that phase of the labor problem? And you would be mightily tickled to see even a partial solution of that vexatious and complex problem, wouldn't you? Why, of course you would, else why are you a reader of a "Journal of Reform?" I am talking unmitigated nonsense, you say? Well, that is not a very courteous remark, but after all it is so undeniably true I am inclined to overlook its rudeness. I know I am talking nonsense, and I not only know it, but I cheerfully admit it. But am I talking any more foolishly than society acts? If you want to know if there is a hell just put yourself in Billings's place and bunk up against society. My word for it you will say there is before you hav done bunking. Just try it and see what will be said and done to you by organized charities that hav infinitly more organization than charity. And Atkinsonian political economists, who, Gradgrind-like, are continually searching for facts and never finding them, notwithstanding the fact that they are surrounded by them. And the ministers! Oh, the dear good ministers, those gentle, sincere followers of the meek and lowly Jesus; my word for it you will hear from them! The Rev. H. C. Ferguson, of Canton, O., recently declared that what this country suffered from was the lack of having its laws enforced, and declared emphatically in favor of capital punishment. I am aware that the person whom he professes to worship, and for which profession he gets well paid, did not countenance violence. Did, indeed, tell his followers that when they were smitten on one cheek they should turn the other. There seems to be an issue here between Ferguson and Jesus, but, of course, the sage of Canton knows what he is talking about. And you know, of course, without my telling you that he is neither a hypocrit nor a fraud. Suppose while you were in Billings's place you called on Mr. Ferguson—I beg the holy gentleman's pardon—the Rev. Mr. Ferguson—and told him about your trouble. He is a gentle shepherd tending to some of the Lord's sheep (for a consideration, of course), and I doubt not he will help you. He will probably help you into the nearest jail and pose as a savior of society, but if he does you cannot reasonably complain. You voted for the politicians who made the laws under which you suffer, and Mr. Ferguson is only doing his duty as a respectable, law-abiding citizen, in seeing to it that the laws are enforced and the country "saved." But if you are a lover of quiet and peace don't take Billings's place; you will find it almost infinitly easier to float with the current than to swim against it. The simplest, easiest plan is to claim that Henry Billings is a lazy, idle wretch, who wants to be fed with a golden spoon, and to say that the world owes every man a living, and that if he fails to get it he has only himself to blame. Besides, we make our living, and why can't he and others? And look at Jay Gould! He has made a living. And if you are a Christian, —though I hope you are not—you can say that it is the will of God that hundreds of worthy men suffer. You might add that God so loves the world that he doesn't giv it enough to eat. Oh, dear! oh, dear! this world of ours is a funny world. We organize charity associations to feed the hungry and still they are not fed. We get our legislators to pass laws, and we do this, and we do that, and we also do the other, and still things don't seem to come right. Our immaculate and incorruptible politicians put up alms-houses at a cost of ten or a dozen times their value and immediately they are filled by people who are more than willing to liv in them. If we forget political economy and in a moment of misguided pity feed the poor wretches who are starving before our eyes we only succeed, ultimately, in making more poor wretches. If we let them go hungry, Henry Billings suffers. No wonder poor bewildered Stephen Blackpool said it was "aw a muddle."

Well, is there no way to straighten out this muddle, to bring order out of this chaos? Can nothing be done? Are we to sit supine and idle and not even try to improve matters? All Henry Billings asked for was an opportunity to work. That was not an unreasonable request, was it? He was able to work and anxious to work if he could but get the opportunity. But the longed-for opportunity did not present itself, and so Henry Billings had to suffer and beg and be assaulted by men who I doubt not thanked God they were not like other men, and go through hell generally. All this because in the last decade of the nineteenth century, after nearly two thousand years of the divine and perfect religion of Christ, work was not to be had by a man who wanted it. And yet it seems to me Henry Billings should hav found opportunities to work, without walking one week and suffering and starving another. An unoccupied field, a clump of woods, a vacant lot, these and hundreds of other every-day objects are opportunities to work. And as Henry Billings was looking for opportunities and was probably sufficiently intelligent to know one when he saw it, why did he not use some of them? Ah, Henry Billings could find opportunities enough but he was prevented by our cruel and absurd social system from making use of them. Now, Mr. Henry George tells us that God made the earth and the fullness thereof for the use of mankind, all mankind that is, not a few favored beings called landlords. As I don't believe in the existence of a God, I think Mr. George is mistaken in that part of his theories. And if I did tag after a god I would want him to be a god who was able to do something, not a weak, wretched creature who was continually having his benevolent plans and purposes thwarted by a few landholders.

But whoever or whatever made the earth, it seems certain that all of us hav an equal right to the use of it. And not to the use of a "share" or section, but to any, every, and all parts of it.

Well, it also seems pretty certain that Henry Billings was not secured in his right to the use of the earth. Is there no way he can hav his rights accorded to him? I think there is. We know, of course, that there are many parts of the earth where labor has better opportunities than it has in other parts. A natural opportunity in New York is of more value than one located in a wilderness away from population and markets.

It seems to me that if every man was compelled to contribute to the general treasury of the community the annual value of the natural opportunity he was using, we would hav a direct, practical, and simple way of securing Henry Billings in his right. If this was done, there would be nothing to keep Henry Billings from going to the stone quarries with which the Palisades are dotted, and putting his brawn and skill to use in breaking up the rock into building or paving stones. Or he could hav "squatted" on an acre or two of the unoccupied land lying all about him, and commenced market-gardening on his own hook. Do you suppose if he had been allowed to use a natural opportunity when he found one, he would hav exposed himself to ill-treatment and abuse, when by doing as I hav suggested he could hav spared himself all the misery and bitterness he went through? If you do believe it, you had better stop reading reform journals and go back to the nursery tales of your childhood days. When poor badgered and bedeviled Billings found he could not secure employment in the city he could hav gone to the natural opportunity closest at hand, and there with such simple means as the nature of the case required, a shovel, a hoe, a pick, or a saw, he could hav been his own employer. He would then hav been perfectly independent of bosses and foremen, and instead of working as now for the pitiful pittance of $8 a week, subject to the innumerable fluctuations of the labor market, his wages would be the amount or the value of what he could produce by the application of his skill and labor to the natural opportunity he was making use of. And so it seems to me that society should say to all those who occupy natural opportunities, "Make all the use of them you possibly can." Utilize them to the fullest extent. For so long as you occupy them, you will hav to pay into the common fund of the community, the equal owners of the earth, the value that attaches to your natural opportunities. When this simple and sensible plan of taxation is put into effect, Henry Billings will be able to use his talents and powers for his own benefit and not be driven to the verge of suicide or crime, or be dependent on the uncertain whims of an employer.

The rightful wages of the laborer is not what his employer sees fit to giv him, but the product of his labor. If through the force of circumstances, or if by reason of social conditions, he is compelled to accept less, he is robbed. And the fact that the robbery is sanctioned by law makes it no less a robbery. When society restores to the laborer the right it has robbed him of—the right of unrestricted access to natural opportunities—then, and not until then, will such experiences as Henry Billings's be impossible. This, at least, is my opinion. If any of my readers think I am too sanguin or am mistaken in my views, I will be obliged if they let me know wherein I am wrong.

Christian Plagiarisms.

Parallels between Christianity and Buddhism by Oswald in the Arena, and Hickey in the Herald as recently quoted by THE TRUTH SEEKER, however interesting to antiquarian mythologists, leave it to be much desired for humanity that the plagiarism had not been more complete.

The Christianity of our times, or any other on record, is a compound in which little more of Jesus than his name may appear, and yet, such as it is, is not responsible for all the crimes of Christendom. So Buddhism may preserve little of Buddha, and be itself but one of many factors of society in the spheres that own it. Not to lose itself in vagaries, our comparison must be nearly limited to the official records, such as are the gospels and Acts of the Apostles for Christianity. Not having at command the corresponding documents of Buddhism, we assume the correctness of Edwin Arnold's statements in his "Light of Asia," honored as it is by the approval of the king of Siam, a prominent Buddhist. In these data we find discrepancies of principles that tally with the comparativ innocence of Buddhism, and the toxic effects of Christianity, after recognizing against them both the parasitism of priestcraft.

Their practical divergencies sensibly betray that of their ideas about the future state, rewards and punishments. These considerations are so predominant with the average Christian that it is hard for him to understand the influence of a religion that discards them and whose pride consists in doing good without hope of reward. To explain this we must remount to a radical difference in the conceptions of personal identity, which for Christians is the fundamental fact of destiny, but for Buddhists a transient phenomenon of the Collectiv Life. The consequences of our actions, they reason, may persist in good or evil for mankind during centuries; but reward or punishment can reach us only in the vague sense that we are integrant of collectiv mankind or animality as leaves are of the tree whose wood they hav elaborated in their functional activity, enabling it in successiv seasons to refoliate itself.

The Christian sees individual souls in transient contact with their actual earth sphere and animal only by bodies which they leave in the grave. The Buddhist sees one life natural and spiritual or one collectiv animal graduated in its facultativ attributes, of which the varied species are integrant and their individuals transient phenomena fulfilling functional uses. To such, awards of merit or demerit are intelligible only as affecting the general prosperity.

As to the individual consciousness of this, we find it varying with our health and our age within a single term of life, so widely that identity is an ill-defined word. The Buddhist nirvana or absorption of the individual phenomena into the collectiv substance may be regarded only as a change in the modes and limitations of consciousness—not as annihilation.

Mr. Hickey phrases the Buddhist idea in his argument that: "As the absolute existence only, the all one, the unchangeable can be eternal, because without form or shape. . . . Each appearance can be only relativ and changeable. Thus in attaining to perfection we must be delivered from all worlds of form." Having no distinct recollection of my residence in worlds without form, which is probably due to my imperfection, I lack terms of comparison for the intelligence of this argument. The question is not of its rationality or of the inconsistency of the Christian doctrin, for in religious faiths rational and possible are secondary considerations. Mr. Hickey's Buddhist idiom of thought may pass current only with some transcendental Unitarians.

Seated on a tombstone in the orthodox churchyard, I can see the glare of hell fires reflected in heretic bonfires, as in order to arrest a conflagration we blow up some buildings in advance of the flames. Peter must sheathe his impatient sword, yet una fides, una domus, might faithfully burn heretics.

Per contra, on the Buddhist side I can tolerate heresies in view of their depuration during the successiv experiences of many temporal existences, mutatis mutandis of circumstance and influence. It is not in question here whether metempsychosis is or is not a fact, but only of the influence of faith in it, which is quite appreciated by the monkeys, who, as problematic grandfathers, may unmolested help themselvs to the fruit of their pious posterity in a charity coextensiv with animalty; whereas that of Christians scantily reaches all the members of one little sectarian church.

Modern Buddhism probably may cut its poor relations, whereby hangs a tail; but its reincarnation is officially proclaimed by the Grand Lamas of Thibet in succession.

Theological detectivs find Buddha one of the messiahs. He might save from the terrors of imaginary hells; but rather from vices, by self-control. Such salvation is hardly comparable with vicarious atonement by bloody sacrifices to an angered God. Different are the saving principles, justice and kindness, from that of faith in the merits or favor of another being.

The Christian idea of messiahship needs for its explanation the fact that at the epoch of Jesus, his nation was expecting a political leader, whose genius would restore them to a prosperous independence. Jesus impresses on this popular idea, as upon the traditional character of Jahvah, a spiritual modification and assimilates both.

Buddha's position was that of an independent prince; there was no question among his people of a political messiahship, and the theological idea of propagating gods by sacrifice was one of the Hindoo superstitions against which Buddha protested. Acceptance of his views would save from the worship of cruel gods by cruel practices, fantastic self-tortures and pious immolations. Though not epicureans, neither Buddha nor Jesus were professed ascetics.

Mr. Oswald reproaches Buddhism as well as Christianity with the monastic and eremite asceticism. Arnold shows Buddha as opposing the stylitism of Hindostan. If Buddhists relapsed into it, it was then from an endemic miasm which had escaped Buddha's purifying influence. Abnegation of power and wealth may hav other motivs than the ascetic craze. Intellectual pursuits and philanthropy wean from the dominion of sensuous desires, but do not despise them. It was reserved for a Christianity foreign alike to Jesus and to Buddha, to combine Brahminic asceticism and ultra-mortem torments, with the combativ spirit of Islam and Yahvistic despotism Such a monstrosity is modern Christian puritanism, of which Jesus, though opposing it in certain particulars, such as compulsory Sabbath observance, stoning of adulteress, etc., is not theoretically innocent; since he indorsed the Mosaic code and invoked the will of his father; i.e., the arbitrary authority of Jahvah as the fountain-head of ethics.

How does he know what is right? By being one with his father. So presently, the pope and priest, by successiv oneness with divine authority through him, will lead ethics a dance through papal indulgences, or the self-indulgence of the litanist who wipes his conscience with a hypocritical confession of sin, and then goes on sinning, to giv wholesome exercise for God's mercy and Christ's mediation. Doubtless the prayer-wheel of Thibet has much the same virtues as Christian confession; but for the true disciple of Buddha, ethics, based on the solidarity of life, is a science of observation and experience; it is that of social harmony; he may make mistakes, but will not be likely to err so fantastically as one who believes in the panacea of grace. Jesus, in his parable of the lord of the vineyard, couples arbitrary ethics with arbitrary economics. The Lord's favor superseding merit of works, carries tacit approbation of land monopoly and the wage system.

Buddha's ethics are natural, those of Jesus theological. The wills of a quasi-personal Being need special revelations, the moral property of priestcraft. The cult of principles, as opposed to the worship of beings, allies personal judgment, instead of reverence, with conscience; hence Buddhism is rather republican than despotic in its ethical tendencies.

M. E. LAZARUS.

The Bible.

A religious paper says there are over eighty thousand clergymen in the United States, all teaching that men were inspired to write the Bible by a being supreme in wisdom, justice, love, and mercy, when almost every chapter of the Bible proves it to be the work of man without inspiration from any higher power. Divine wisdom would never inspire a man to write a work about a way so plain that a wayfaring man need not err therein, in so blind a manner as to require eighty thousand priests to explain it in a country like this.

Inspiration would be so plain and simple that all would understand it. Look at the two stories of the creation. The first story says, "God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God blessed them, and said, Behold, I hav given you every herb-bearing seed which is upon the face of all the earth and every tree in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed, and it shall be to you for meat." Not one word about forbidden fruit that was to sentence all Eve's posterity to eternal hell, nor about the numerous poisonous plants. Would any earthly parent turn children out in that way with liberty to eat all kinds of herbs without telling them which were poisonous? Beautiful inspiration on which to hang immortal souls! In the same chapter we hav another and very different story of creation. It says the Lord God framed man out of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Then the Lord God, after making man, went to work and planted a garden, and out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and placed the man there, forbidding him to eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge, saying that on the day he did eat of it he should surely die. Then the Lord discovered that he had made a mistake in making man alone, for he needed some one for a helpmeet; so he took a rib from Adam's side (before a surgical implement or so much as a butcher-knife had been invented (a very improbable story), and of that little dry bone made a full-sized woman. Were it not for pity for the poor dupes of priestcraft, such inspiration would be fit only to be laughed at. No clergyman in this nation can tell whether there were two couples created, or whether these two stories were told about the same couple. Then, again, this book of beautiful inspiration says that God brought all the animals he had made to Adam to be named. A more ridiculous story I never heard. Old Sam Hyde in all his glory as prince of liars never told a bigger lie. Reader, think! think! think! Thought is the key to knowledge. Take your Bible, read candidly, and think! There were Adam and Eve, only two days old, with no learning, as far as language was concerned, could only grunt like a couple of young pigs, and the Lord God almighty driving up a herd of all kinds of animals, birds, and insects for them to name. Why, if God or man had spoken the names of every living thing in plain English, Adam and Eve would not hav known what he was talking about!

Six weeks ago I commenced reading the Bible. In five weeks I had read the head-lines of every chapter in the Old Testament, and nearly three hundred whole chapters, and laid the book aside, in the firm belief that it is the work of ignorant men instead of a God. If I liv to the 16th of May I shall be ninety years of age, and must soon pass away; but instead of fearing punishment for anything I hav said or written about the Bible or the churches in the last seventy years, I feel that if there is a being anywhere worthy to be called God, he approves of my feeble efforts in this world to defend his character against the prejudice, partiality, anger, wrath, vengeance, and other abominations of this abominable book.

Take your Bibles, read, think, examin, and know that I am right. J. HACKER.

Vineland, N. J.

Here's a Pretty State of Things.

From Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Nearly a year ago the post-office department announced its ruling that Tolstoi's "Kreutzer Sonata" was unmailable; the opinion being rendered by Assistant Attorney-General Tyner, and in the annual report of the post-office department that followed that decision, and the many adverse criticisms upon it, Mr. Wanamaker made the simple explanation that when anyone submitted a book to the post-office department on the question of its mailable quality under the Comstock law, it was passed upon with impartial judgment as to the contents of the book and the probable meaning of the law which refuses mail privileges to literature of "an indecent character." So far as the general post-office department is concerned Mr. Tyner is referee and his taste is law. So Mr. Macdonald of THE TRUTH SEEKER has been for perhaps three months trying to get from the referee a decision upon the Bible, but in this he was less successful than a Texan postmaster to whom Mr. Tyner lately rendered his verdict in these words: "It is not believed in this department to come within the prohibitory clauses of the act referred to. The penalty portions of said statute are enforcible by the courts, and the question of liability thereunder is a proper one to be submitted to the United States attorney. You may assure Mr. Murray that the mailability of the volume will not be questioned by the post-office department or by any postmaster." Evidently Mr. Tyner's good opinion of the Bible and the clean bill of health he gives it would not protect anyone who mailed that book from prosecution if he happened to liv in a United States district where a judge and jury would look upon it with less reverential regard, and who might be inclined to weigh it in the same sort of scales that Mr. Tyner used to test the Tolstoi book. Mr. Tyner intimates that his judgment is no protection to the mailer of the book if a United States court decides to prosecute. On the other hand it is notorious that no United States court has proceeded against the "Kreutzer Sonata," and that in spite of the ruling excluding it from Uncle Sam's holy sacks it is daily deposited in and transmitted by the mails. So the official post-office department estimate apparently is of no effect either for or against a book, and the United States courts and the sense (or folly) of local juries anywhere in this broad country are what the citizen has to consider. A publisher in Maine may run no risk in mailing a book that a jury in California would find within the meaning of the law. So the status of the book business is about as varied and uncertain, according to location and public enlightenment, as is the marriage relation under the mixed and differing conditions of marriage and divorce laws in the several states of the Union. As a man may in some states marry again, though in his own home to do so would be bigamy, so a bookseller, or anyone else that has occasion to mail a book, may do it very innocently in some places, while in others he would be taking the risk of a criminal action in a United States court, with possible fine and imprisonment. The situation is a curious one. We hav a lawful censor in the person of Mr. Tyner, and many self-constituted censors in the persons of the agents of the various vice societies. Mr. Tyner might decide that the post-office department would not refuse the mails to a certain book, and yet in Boston Mr. Chase, in New York Mr. Comstock, or in Chicago Mr. McAfee might find it offensiv to their moral (?) nostrils, and set the United States courts in motion against the publisher.

But of this manifestly unfair and precarious dilemma there appear to be but two modes of escape. Either the United States Congress should establish a court of censorship whose decision should be law everywhere, and be "on call" to the inquiry of every citizen concerning any book, or there should be no laws regulating the mailability of literature on its moral quality; and the latter we believe to be the only plan consistent with our Constitution and the precedents and purposes of our general government,

Crawford for their responses last week to our appeal for new subscribers. There are, we believe, thousands of Freethinkers throughout the country who will subscribe for the paper if it is called to their attention, and we ask our friends who meet them to do this for the paper and its work. It is not a great deal for each one to do, but in the aggregate it would be of immense service to the cause of freedom of thought; for the stronger the paper is, the more good it can do. We hope next week the list will be longer, and to those now on the list who are in arrears, we once more say, Please remit, for we need the money.

OUR readers will every one be glad to know that work upon the book of the Bible Pictures which hav been published in THE TRUTH SEEKER will be pursued activly this summer and the volume brought out early in the fall.

If Mr. John Peck's health will permit—and it probably will—he will assist in preparing a good portion of the reading to accompany each picture. The volume will contain between two and three hundred pictures, and will be sold for one dollar. It will be the greatest book of Bible stories ever printed. Orders will be thankfully taken at any time and filled at the earliest moment the book leaves the press.

It Is Unique Indeed.

From the Mount Desert Herald, Bar Harbor, Me.

One of the most unique publications of recent times is the "Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book," from the press of the Truth Seeker Company, 28 Lafayette place, New York. The book contains one hundred and eighty-five full-page illustrations by Mr. Watson Heston, the well-known TRUTH SEEKER artist. It is calculated to make a sensation wherever seen, and the editor has so reinforced the artist's pictorial arguments and satires by liberal citations of fact, history, statistics, and the opinions of scholars, as to make very interesting reading. Liberal thinkers, of all grades of liberality, will find much to amuse and instruct in the contents of this volume. The price, $2 in boards, $2.50 in cloth, is remarkably low for so large a volume.

An Open Letter to the Attorney-General.

To WILLIAM H. H. MILLER, Attorney-General of the United States:

Dear Sir: I desire an opinion on a matter connected with the administration of justice, as represented by your department of our government, and therefore ask you to kindly enlighten me. The case is this:

A friend of mine, Mr. B. C. Murray, of Denison, Tex., asked his postmaster as to the mailability of a volume called the "Holy Bible." Mr. Murray asked the question because Mr. Wanamaker, Postmaster-General, in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, in explanation of his act in excluding from the mails a questionable book, says, "It was soon found that it was not enough merely to provide for the exclusion of 'obscene, lewd, and lascivious' publications, but that publications that were simply 'indecent, had also better be excluded,' which led to the passage of the amendment above quoted. 'The statute was thus broadened,' the postmaster-general continues, 'by prohibiting the transmission of any matter offensiv to modesty, or tending to subvert respect for decency or morality.' He says, furthermore, it does not matter whether or not a given publication presented for mailing appears, by complaint or otherwise, to a postmaster to be obscene, lewd, or lascivious, if it does appear to be indecent. He is obliged, in order not to become a lawbreaker, to refer the questionable print to the proper official. And again, "It does not matter, when the referee considers the question, whether the publication is merely 'obscene, lewd, or lascivious.' If it is simply indecent, he must exclude it or break the law."

The statute which the postmaster-general conceives givs him the right to say these things is as follows:

"Any person who shall knowingly mail or cause to be mailed . . . articles before declared to be unmailable should be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or to imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year nor more than ten years." The law as amended in 1876 reads as follows: "Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, is hereby declared to be unmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier."

It was a knowledge of this statute which made my friend Mr. Murray fearful of mailing the volume called the "Holy Bible," because the volume contains passages which he thought might be construed to be "indecent," and "offensiv to modesty, having a tendency to subvert respect for decency and morality," which, according to Mr. Wanamaker's report (p. 17, next to last paragraph), renders a book obnoxious to the law as amended July 12, 1876 (19 Stat., p. 90). The passages to which I refer, and to which your attention is respectfully called in the volume herewith inclosed, are as follows: Chapters iv, xvi, xvii, xviii, xix, xx, xxi, xxix, xxxiv, xxxviii, xxxix, and others of the book called Genesis; chapters iv, xiii, xxii, xxxiii, xxxiv, and others of the book called Exodus; chapters xv, xviii, xx, xxi, and others of the book called Leviticus; chapters v, xxxi, and others of the book called Numbers; chapters xxi, xxii, xxiii, and others of the book called Deuteronomy; chapters ii, vi, and others of the book called Joshua; chapters xvi, xix, xx, xxi, of the book called Judges; chapter iii and others of the book called Ruth; chapters i, ii, xix, and others of the book called 1 Samuel; chapters iii, vi, xvi, and others of the book called 2 Samuel; chapters i, xi, xvi, and others of the book called 1 Kings; chapters ix and xviii of the book called 2 Kings; chapters xxxi, xl, and others of the book called Job; chapters v, xxiii, and others of the collection called Proverbs; chapters i, ii, v, vii, viii, and others of the book called Solomon's Song; chapters xxxvi, lvii, and others of the book called Isaiah; chapters i, ii, iii, xlix, and others of the book called Jeremiah; chapters iv, xvi, xxiii, and others of the book called Ezekiel; chapters i, ii, iii, iv, and others of the book called Hosea; chapter i of the book called Micah; chapter i of the book called St. Matthew; chapter vii of the book called St. Mark; chapters i and ii of the book called St. Luke; chapter viii of the book called St. John; chapters i and iv of the book called an epistle to the Romans; chapters v, vi, vii, and others of the book called an epistle to the Corinthians; chapter xvii of the book called Revelation, and such others as you may find upon examination.

In his reply to the postmaster of Denison, Texas, through whom Mr. Murray forwarded his inquiry, the Hon. James N. Tyner, Assistant Attorney-general for the Post-office Department, says: "If Mr. Murray should offer the Holy Bible for mailing, you can receive and deliver it at your office, or transmit it in the mails; for it is not believed in this department to come within the prohibitory clauses of the act referred to. The penalty portions of said statute are enforcible by the courts, and the question of his liability thereunder is a proper one to be submitted to the United States attorney."

My application to you is made in accordance with Mr. Tyner's suggestion. My reason for interfering in this matter is that more than three months ago I made application to the Post-office Department to hav this question decided, but without success. I take it, however, that the Post-office Department will adhere to this decision; therefore the Company of which I am a member can mail the volume called the Holy Bible without fear of that part of the machinery of government. And I submit to you whether, should anyone outside the department cause the arrest of any member of the Company for mailing the volume, you would consider it a case for prosecution by the United States District Attorney and for the enforcement of the penalty portions of said statute. Very respectfully,

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Mr. Wanamaker—Mr. St. John.

If all the Liberals of the country make up their minds to pursue the course determined on by our friend St. John, as outlined in the subjoined letter, Holy John will hav a racy, not to say vulgar, quarter of an hour.

Mr. St. John some time ago became interested in the application made to Holy John for a decision on the mailability of the volume called the Holy Bible, and he naturally also wanted to know how a decision on the book as a whole would affect a volume in his possession called the "Holy Bible Abridged." In communicating with this office in regard to the latter work he informed us of the favorable result of his application to the department, upon which we at once asked for a copy of the decision. The following is his reply to that letter:

"CEDAR FALLS, IA., May 4, 1891.

"MR. EDITOR: Yours of April 27th at hand, and in reply I would say that I did not write to Wanamaker myself, but left a copy of the 'Holy Bible Abridged' with the postmaster of Cedar Falls, to see what he thought about its being mailable, and he could not decide, so I asked him to send it to the postmaster-general and get his decision. And he did so (or said he did), and said that the decision was that the book was mailable on account of its containing nothing but extracts from the Bible. I asked him for the report that he got, and he said that belonged to the post-office, but perhaps he would let me hav a copy of it.

"Since the decision I wrote 2 Kings, xviii, 27, on a postal-card, and sent it to John Wanamaker, and intend that more shall follow. The churches are forcing the Bible into our common schools, and want us to swear by it in court, and are determined to engraft it into our national Constitution. And now I am determined to feed them on their own filth until they get enough of it, and hope all other Liberals will do the same. In this they can be greatly assisted by ordering a copy of the 'Holy Bible Abridged.'

"Yours fraternally, M. W. ST. JOHN."

We hav since received a copy of the letter to which Mr. St. John refers, which reads as follows. It will not escape notice that Mr. Tyner is getting a little belligerent and inclined to talk back sharper than official duty strictly demands:

"OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL,
"WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10, 1891.

"S. B. HUMBERT, Postmaster, Cedar Falls, Ia.

"Sir: With your letter of the 7th instant, addressed to the postmaster-general (which has been sent to me for reply), you submit a volume entitled 'The Holy Bible' (abridged), and inquire if your opinion that it is unmailable under the provisions of section 380 Postal Laws and Regulations, would be concurred in by this department. I answer in the negativ. The volume is made up exclusivly of reproductions of chapters and verses from the Bible, and we hav not progressed here to the extent of regarding that sacred book as obscene or indecent.

"If the volume referred to is offered to you for mailing, you should take it without question. Very respectfully,

"JAMES N. TYNER, Assistant Attorney-General.

"The volume is herewith returned."

Mr. St. John, however, has no doubts at all of the linguistic quality of the Holy Bible. He calls it, plainly, filth. And upon looking up the verse he has sent to Holy John, we will hav to confess that Mr. St. John is not far from right. But that only shows how men differ. Mr. Tyner, Assistant Attorney-General for the Post Office Department, holds that the volume does not come under the prohibitory clauses of the law against "indecent" literature, and therefore will not question its mailability. Yet if Mr. St. John were in Mr. Tyner's place the Holy Bible would be at once excluded as filth. Which shows that human beings are fallible; that it makes all the difference in the world whose ox is gored; and that Mr. Tyner is not in sympathy with the Holy John's definition of excludible books, or that he has not read the Bible. And yet he threw out the "Kreutzer Sonata."

In this difference of opinion between two supposably fallible people our sympathy is entirely with Mr. St. John.

True Christian Endeavor.

Mr. J. O. Brown, of Pittsburgh, Pa., chief of the "Department of Public Safety," whatever that may be, has made the jackass of himself usual with such interfering officials. He received a letter from David Henderson, manager of the Duquesne Theater in Chicago, asking whether it would be in accordance with the law of Pittsburgh to hav Colonel Ingersoll deliver one of his lectures on Sunday night at the theater. Mr. Brown replied as follows:

"In answer to yours of the 8th inst. I would reply that it would be directly contrary to law for Mr. Ingersoll to lecture upon the Sabbath day or evening where an admission is charged. I hope you will not attempt to hav such a lecture delivered, for it will be my imperativ duty to prevent the same. This letter is written after consultation with the attorney of this department with reference to the law."

In conversation with a reporter Mr. Brown said further:

"I am unalterably opposed to opening the doors any wider on the Sunday question. We hav freedom enough, and lectures of this kind are only gotten up for money, and I think we might as well open the theaters for theatrical performances as a lecture of the kind Mr. Ingersoll would naturally giv."

"We hav freedom enough!" Which means that in Mr. Brown's opinion we hav too much, and he proposes to curtail it as much as possible. Mr. Brown is evidently a Christian, a churchman, and a despot. It is high time the people of Pittsburgh resolved to make that city something besides a Puritan hamlet. The laws of a hundred years ago are hardly the rules for a self-respecting city to-day.

A Suggestion that Lincoln Did Not Suggest.

J. E. Remsburg has just succeeded in running down another Christian lie regarding Lincoln. In the Western Christian Advocate, the leading Christian journal of the West, originally appeared the following pious story:

"On the day of the receipt of the capitulation of Lee, as we learn from a friend intimate with the late President Lincoln, the cabinet meeting was held an hour earlier than usual. Neither the president nor any member was able, for a time, to giv utterance to his feelings. At the suggestion of Mr. Lincoln all dropped on their knees and offered, in silence and in tears, their humble and heartfelt acknowledgment to the almighty for the triumph he had granted to the national cause."

Probably none of the many stories concerning Lincoln's alleged piety has been given such wide publicity as the above. Again and again it went the rounds of the religious press. It is to be found doing duty in religious tracts and Sunday-school books. It is preserved in Raymond's "Life of Lincoln," and in Carpenter's "Six Months at the White House." It had become, in fact, a part of American history, a companion-piece to Washington's praying at Valley Forge. Mr. Remsburg knew that, like the Valley Forge story, it was false, and he resolved to attempt a demonstration of its falsity while it was possible to do so. There is but one member of President Lincoln's cabinet living, Hon. Hugh McCulloch, secretary of the treasury, now residing in Washington, D. C. Through the assistance of Mr. N. P. Stockbridge, an old and respected citizen of Fort Wayne, Ind., and a life-long friend of Mr. McCulloch's, he succeeded in bringing the matter before the only surviving witness and obtained above his signature the following emphatic denial of the story's truthfulness:

"The description of what occurred at the executiv mansion, when the intelligence was received of the surrender of the Confederate forces, which you quote from the Western Christian Advocate, is not only absolutely groundless, but absurd. After I became secretary of the treasury I was present at every cabinet meeting, and I never saw Mr. Lincoln, nor any of his ministers, upon his knees or in tears."

An Anarchist Daily Journal.

Of the act of the mob which shot to death the Italians acquitted of the Hennessey murder by a New Orleans jury, the Herald of this city says:

"They were approved by the community, and what the community approves cannot be criminal. . . . The end justifies the means."

That is queer logic! "The majority can do no wrong" is really what it means. But if what two men do as against a third is not wrong, how is it when one of the two goes over to the third and reverses the action? In a community of ten thousand one hundred can conspire and do criminal acts, but if five thousand and one unite to do the same thing the conspiracy is not conspiracy and the crime is not criminal! When the community of Morristown punished C. B. Reynolds for blasphemy no wrong was done to the liberty of the press, but if one more than half of the community had disagreed with the prosecution, then liberty of the press would hav been invaded! Could anything more stupid than the Herald's reasoning be invented?

Our great cosmopolitan journal is in this an Anarchist sheet in the popular but not in the philosophical sense. It should reform, or the Illinois authorities may hang its editor when he visits the World's Fair.

Christ's Sinlessness.

A subscriber to the Christian Advocate asks the editor if Christ could hav sinned, if so disposed, and Dr. Buckley replies thus piously:

"If so disposed, he would hav already sinned. We suppose that you mean, had Christ power to sin in the same sense in which a man has power? Into the metaphysics of such a question the scriptures do not go, nor can we. That he was a free agent is assumed, that free agents hav a physical power to sin is also assumed, but the mystery of the union of the divinity and the humanity in Christ defies comprehension, and it is enough for us to know that he was 'without sin,' and also to know that there was no conceivable hazard in sending him into the world."

That is, if a man is tempted to do something wrong, but does not do it, he has done wrong. What nonsense! Such pronouncement is like a statute against something not in itself at all harmful. Theological sin and real sin are two different things.

Secondly, there is no such thing as free agency in the conduct of human beings. They are influenced by heredity and environments, and man does as he must. He cannot elect to think one thing, nor can he do otherwise than as circumstances compel him.

We admit that the "union of the divinity and the humanity in Christ defies comprehension," because, knowing nothing of the "divine," we cannot say how it would unite with anything. If Christ ever lived he was purely human, a religious crank like Mohammed, or an impostor like all "saviors." Buddha is probably the foundation upon which the stories of Christ's life rest, and Buddhistic theology is as impossible as Christian theology.

But Christ was not without sin, if stealing is sin; and we believe all churches preach against stealing, however much their members practice it individually and the churches as corporations, by robbing the state of its dues. Christ led his disciples through a cornfield, plucking and eating as they went; and we never hav read anywhere that Jesus paid for it. Certainly, when remonstrated with for breaking the Sabbath he justified the act of his disciples. And when he desired to go into Jerusalem he sent two of his disciples to get an ass and her colt, not offering to buy them, or pay the livery bill, but to just say to any vigilance committees who objected "that the Lord hath need of them." And Jesus rode into Jerusalem on property stolen by his orders. If such a man as that is "without sin," what is the use of hanging horsethieves?

As to the last statement by Dr. Buckley, that there was no conceivable hazard in sending Jesus into the world, we should say these two instances disprove it very emphatically. According to Christian theology, an ordinary man would hazard the loss of his soul by doing as Christ did—unless he paid something to the church and repented. Then, of course, he could go to heaven.

The Great Leading Case.

In a recent issue of the Woman's Journal, Anthony Comstock says:

"The trial, the decision, the appeal, and the affirmance of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, in the case of the conviction of D. M. Bennett, is the great leading case in the United States, where the questions of 'the intent,' the 'tests of obscenity,' the 'rules to be applied,' and the 'principles governing this class of cases,' are all fully set out, so that he was fully informed of the law, and of the highest decisions of the English and American courts bearing upon the question involved."

That being so, there is but one decent thing for our Congressmen to do, and that is, to repeal the law under which such an outrage upon justice can be committed. As construed by Benedict in Mr. Bennett's trials, there are few reforms in sociology or medicin printed and mailed advocacy of which would not land the reformers in prison. The entire matter depends upon the prejudices and opinions of those having the prosecuting power. The law takes in everything. An Infidel prosecutor and jury would send the whole Bible Society and Frances Willard's White Cross Society to jail. Orthodox and conservativ medical juries would lock up all the doctors who tell people how to keep well. It is a sweeping and unwholesome law, and the people least capable of judging when it should be enforced are the members of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, led by that dangerous person, Anthony Comstock.

Any law capable of such ferocious construction as that made by Benedict in Mr. Bennett's case should be repealed. It cannot be made safe by modification.

Editorial Notes.

THOSE who like to make annotations and little commentaries of their own in books of a statistical, historical, or polemical character, will do well when ordering the "Freethinkers' Pictorial Text-Book" to ask for copies with blank leaves, inserted for just that purpose. The leaves are in the two-dollar edition, and there is no extra charge.

IN a column devoted to a report of the reception of Colonel Ingersoll at the Auditorium, the Chicago Tribune, the day after the lecture, among other flattering words, said: "Colonel Ingersoll's rosy face is always welcome in this town, and when he tosses his hollyhocks of eloquence from a public stage, they are eagerly grasped and carried home in the bosoms of a good many thousands of persons. But the crowd that heard his lecture on Shakspere last night was by far the biggest that he ever spoke before in a public hall. . . . His reception last night was enthusiastic. The audience was enthralled from the beginning, and when he left the stage he was followed by a roar of applause, and a cannonade of cheers that was maintained for five minutes after the close of the lecture."

AT last the Voice has proclaimed its hypocrisy. To catch gulls it has maintained that its party does not propose to interfere with personal rights, but proceeds against liquor-selling as a public nuisance. "Prohibition," it proclaims, "says nothing about the right to purchase, but it denies the right to sell liquor, since experience invariably shows that sale is a serious public nuisance, and entails vice, crime, and pauperism." Also in previous issues it is said, comparing liquor to dangerous substances, that "the personal right of a man to drink milk swarming with baccilli if he wants to, and the legal right of barter and sale in it, are two different questions." And one of the editors of the Voice said within our hearing that the Prohibitionists did not want to stop liquor-drinking, but only liquor-selling. It was upon this statement that we called him down, and now convict him out of his own mouth. In the Voice of May 7th he relates that two Vermont men were recently haled before a magistrate, one for selling liquor, the other for drinking it to drunken excessivness. The first was punished, the second allowed to go because the liquor upon which he became intoxicated was his own cider, mixed with alcohol. And in comment the editor of the Voice looks across the street in this direction, saying: "Which is a forcible illustration of a truth we hav labored for six years to get into the heads of some people, the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, for instance, namely, that prohibitory law does not say to a man what he shall eat, drink, or wear, but what he shall traffic in. Nevertheless there is in Vermont a law against drunkenness, and it ought to be enforced." If punishing a man for getting drunk is not interfering with personal rights we ask the loud Voice on the next corner to set us right. But: "Bestow thy money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen or for sheep or for wine or for strong drink, or whatsoever thy soul desireth" is still scripture, and as before remarked, the Prohibitionists are very pious.

THE Dubuque, Iowa, Trades and Labor Congress met recently and adopted a petition, with only two or three dissenting votes, that the World's Fair be opened on Sundays. This action led to a fierce controversy on the question of Sunday, church and state, and for several days the papers were filled with articles for and against church and state union. The vote of the congress put the Sabbatarians in wild commotion, as it was unexpected, and one minister took it upon himself to upbraid from the pulpit the leader in the congress who introduced the petition. The concluding paragraphs of one of the articles in reply to this preacher state the principles involved so clearly that we quote them: "In conclusion, let me ask what right, inasmuch as this is not a Christian government constitutionally, we hav to tax the Catholic, the Jew, or the Infidel to support military schools and then compel their boys to come under the influence of a Christian Protestant chaplain who not only reads the Bible to him but prays before him and for him in public and private to make Christian men of them from a Protestant standpoint? What right, too, hav we to tax them to support the chaplain of a legislature who every morning gives them the Christian Protestant prayers? What right hav we to open presidential conventions with prayer, issue thanksgiving and fast day proclamations, and stamp upon the dollar which the Infidel is forced to handle the words 'In God We Trust?' By Sunday laws we impose the burden upon the Jew and Seventh Day Adventists who observe Saturday of keeping two days a week for rest, and so heavy is this burden that some of the Jews are now agitating for the adoption of the Christian Sabbath. If the conscience of any citizen will not allow him to attend the Fair on Sunday he can absent himself, as there is no law compelling him to attend, and he should therefore not play the role of the 'dog in the manger.' As we cannot be too jealous of our liberties, or too anxious to avoid living over again our bloody Puritan past, we must heartily agree in one desire—that religious liberty and the right to freedom of thought should be upheld, and to this end we should insist upon a total separation of church and state."

Letters from Friends.

VISCHER'S FERRY, May 10, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5 for THE TRUTH SEEKER up to May 7, 1893, and also fifty cents for Miss Gardener's new novel. I want the Bible Pictures. And if ever you get them in book form send me the first copy and I will remit.

Yours very truly, A. BEST.

RENO, NEV., May 3, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I take great interest in reading "Letters from Friends," and in the paper in general, and send in two new names and my own and $7. We vote for the pictures all the time. We would like to see the Chicago Fair open on Sundays; and hope to hear some able discourses, and above all to see and hear Col. R. G. Ingersoll in 1893 at Chicago. W. N. SCOTT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 3, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to make a suggestion in regard to the Freethinkers' badge. I would suggest a four-leafed clover; representing "truth, love, hope, and reason," "father, mother, sister, and brother," "music, poetry, sculpture, and painting," "north, south, east, and west," its stem "the fountain of liberty." This represents the world, the human family and its duties. A. AAMOLD.

ROGERS, ARK., May 4, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Jamieson was here Easter Sunday, and gave two lectures the week before Easter and one on Monday evening. He came right in the midst of a railroad excitement. We were working hard to get two more roads into Rogers, and then on Sunday and Monday night the churches were in full blast, so the lectures were not well attended, and very little money was collected, so the burden fell heavily on a few of us. I had calculated to try to get some subscribers during the lectures. H. M. MCGAUGHEY.

DILLON, MONT., May 5, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Sample copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER received. I herewith inclose $3 for a year's subscription. I hav not seen a copy of 1891, so I would ask as a special favor to commence my subscription with January, 1891, if possible, and send me the back numbers, as I want the pictures as well as the reading matter, and nothing within its pages gets old anyway. I ordered one of your "Pictorial Text-Books" last October and hav had plenty of amusement showfng it to religious cranks. JAMES W. UNDERWOOD.

RIDGVILLE, IA., May 8, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I am only a subscriber of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the last twelve months, but I cannot be without it any more. Your paper is my welcome visitor every week. I always had a great desire to read Freethought matter for the last fifteen years, but I had no knowledge of any until about two years ago, and I now fully realize the loss I sustained by wandering in the darkness of Catholic orthodoxy, instead of being in the light of Freethought truth.

I hav received the Truth Seeker Tracts; they giv entire satisfaction, and I think they are good little missionaries to send among the Christian heathens. I remain, Forever a seeker after truth, HENRY BISSON.

SIDNEY, O., May 6, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Your statistics of the religious beliefs of penitentiary convicts in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 10th and May 2d are quite interesting. About three years ago I suggested to Secretary Stevens of the American Secular Union that it would be a good work for the Union to hav the government make an inquiry into this matter in the then forthcoming census. Mr. Stevens thought well enough of the idea to mention it in an article in THE TRUTH SEEKER (I believe without credit), but no effort was made to put the idea in effect I believe. I feel certain such statistics would be a great boon to Freethinkers, but Christians would oppose the taking of such. Why would they?

How many Infidels and preachers would you estimate in the United States, and what per cent of each are in penitentiaries? I think there are ten preachers to one Infidel in prison, and ten Infidels to one preacher out. Am I far wrong? If such could bs shown, would any argument be so effectiv? Truly thine, EMORY P. ROBINSON.

WEST MINSTER, CAL., May 3, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me a small space in your valuable paper to announce the death of an old friend of mine, and a friend of humanity, and an old reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER?

Luke William Gallup was born in the town of New London, state of Connecticut, Feb. 22, 1822, and died near West Minster, Orange county, Cal., April 10th, at his home, at 4 P.M. He died without a struggle, as though he was going to sleep. He died as he had lived, like a god. Language fails me to picture his life and death. Suffice it to say they both were sublime. I was at his bedside when he breathed his last, surrounded by his family, which consists of his wife and three children—a boy of ten years, two girls, one of twelve and one of eight years, who are all imbued with the nature of their father, which is, truth, liberty, and progress. His last request while he lived was to hav no priest or minister at his funeral. He had selected some pieces from the "Secular Hand-Book" written by A. R. Ayres to be read at his funeral. He also wished that a complete biographical sketch should be given of his religious life and views, which was all done as best we could do.

The funeral attracted a large number of people, principally from curiosity. The people here are all Christians. The remark was often made that the service would hav been good if it had been solemnized by a minister. And so ended the life of this good man.

I hav known Mr. Gallup for about five years, and the more I knew of him the better I loved him, because his whole make-up or his whole soul was a mass of goodness and virtue. It was his teaching that made me free, that liberated me from the grasp of the church, and oh, I am so thankful! It seems to me so strange that my reason was so benumbed or so confined by the Bible and its creeds for the better part of my life. But now I feel like rejoicing. I feel like a bird uncaged, turned loose, given its freedom. What pleasure, what sights I see! What depths I feel! What love my soul breathes from nature! O Nature, what a god! Language fails me to picture Nature. I hav been but a short time a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER and kindred literature, but I hav received much knowledge from them. Please number me as one wishing progress, and a friend to truth. R. A. MARTIN.

KANSAS CITY, MO., May 8, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find a clipping from the North, Minneapolis, Minn. It is translated from a paper that is the most reliable, and in many people's opinion the best, Swedish one in the United States, the Swedish-American, Chicago, Ill. This paper five years ago refused to advertise a Unitarian student's lecture in a hall in Chicago under pretense that the young man was not a graduate from Sweden, but in fact, as admitted to Mr. O. Odelius, 208 E. Van Buren street, same city, by a member of the editorial staff of said Swedish American, because it would hurt the feelings of the Swedish-American Lutheran Augustana clergy. The Swedish-American has a circulation of two thousand copies every week. Please note the difference of opinion in only five years.

The greatest divine gift of man is his reason. It is by means of this gift that man rises above the brute, and it is through his reason that civilized man has advanced so far in the fields of art and science. Take away reason from man, and suddenly he sinks down to the level of the brute. And still we hear preachers condemn reason! It is the object of these preachers to see man sink down until he becomes equal to the beasts.

Yours fraternally, JOHN LARSON.

CONCORD, N. C., May 11, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Let us reason together. Right is right and wrong is wrong. The late war has stripped many families of their means of support, and caused many to seek an asylum in the poorhouse.

Mr. Joshua Harris died in 1859, leaving a reasonable competency for his children. One of his daughters, Miss Harris, came to want, and went to the poorhouse—county home, as it is now known. Miss Harris was a consistent member of a religious church, and sustained a good character—not even a whisper of a stain against her character. After twelve years of life in the county home she died. Rather than see her buried in Potter's field I had her remains brought here and buried. I gave and sent word to six families, who were her companions in youth, and school-mates. Four ladies, including my wife and two daughters, were all the ladies of seven churches to see her put beneath the clods of the valley. Only a pauper. Had Miss Harris died possessed of five or ten thousand dollars how different would hav been the scene. To the honor of her pastor I must say, he showed respect to the deceased. For so doing I respect him. J. W. MAHAFFY.

MR. EDITOR: I contribute this extract:

While in New York, I had the curiosity to call on the celebrated author of the "Rights of Man." He livs in Greenwick a short way from the city. In the only decent apartment of a small, indifferent-looking frame house, I found this extraordinary man, sitting wrapt in a night-gown, the table before him covered with newspapers, with pen and ink beside him. Paine's face would hav excellently suited the character of Bardolph; but the penetration and intelligence of his eyes bespeak the man of genius and of the world. He complained to me of his inability to walk, an exercise he was formerly fond of; he examined my book, leaf by leaf, with great attention—desired me to put down his name as a subscriber; and after inquiring particularly for Mr. P. and Mr. B., wished to be remembered to both.

I thought anything relating to Paine would be of interest to the world. I copied this from Alexander Wilson the naturalist. Paine subscribed for Wilson's book, which cost over $100; this did not look like the miserable creature the pious people try to make him out. I am very much pleased with your paper, but I do not suppose I will hav to enjoy it much longer, for I am eighty years of age. My profession is natural history. I find all ministers very ignorant on this subject, and also the very pious.

Yours fraternally damned, ANDREW DOWNS.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over the list of "Humboldt Library" I noticed that style A are sold separately or in sets. I inclose a post-office order for which please forward the last bound (xi) volume. The remainder is toward keeping my berth on board of your craft, in search of further knowledge. Your craft has the glare of the electric light to steer it through the fogs of superstition, while far behind is left the ship of Zion with the smoky torch of our cave-dwelling ancestors.

A modern Craddock can hold a fort or battle-field with pen and pansy, while it took sword and shield for Cradoc (called by the Romans Caracticus), of old Siluria (a province of South Wales), who for years successfully resisted the Roman legions from crossing the Severn to invade his territory.

Ever since our Bruno, Voltaire, Hobbes, and other pioneers of Freethought who two or three centuries ago were shipped from Plymouth Rock to enlighten those benighted European countries (where they could only produce Cotton Mathers and the goody-good), we hav been in the van; why then should we follow any of those countries now?

I hav drank dandelion coffee,
And also dandelion tea,
So that a dandelion emblem
Will suit well enough for me.

OBITUARY.

PORTAGE, WIS., May 3, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: You will observe by the inclosed that your old subscriber, Samuel Day Merrill, is no more. He died strong in his belief, and having taken your paper from its first issue, he always called it his old friend.

ANGIE E. MOAK.

As the sun arose and brightened the earth with its welcome rays, gladdening all nature this morning, there was one home in Portage where its brightness seemed but mockery, as the curtain of gloom had fallen heavily over that household. At 2:20 this morning the life forsook the body of Samuel D. Merrill, a resident of East Cook street, and only a tenement of clay and a memory of his life acts remain to pacify those to whom he was endeared. Mr. Merrill had been ill but about a week, first being afflicted with the grippe, which soon developed into pneumonia, and medical skill failed to check its fatal grasp.

Samuel D. Merrill was born in Maidstone, Vt., April 27, 1810, and therefore only lacked nine days of being eighty-one years old. His first wife died in 1854, and in 1860 he married Eliza Moak, who now survives him. By his first marriage there were five children. Melvin, his eldest son, was killed in the war; Mrs. John Cochrane, of Waupun, also deceased; Mrs. George B. Burch, of Dubuque, Ia.; A. E. Merrill, of Minneapolis, now in California, and Albert Merrill, of Cedar Falls, Ia. Mrs. Burch and Albert are now at the home of deceased. Mr. Merrill came to Wisconsin about 1856, and settled in the town of Fort Winnebago, on the farm now owned by Louis Kiefer. He resided there until about ten years ago, when he came to Portage and has resided here since.

Mr. Merrill was a man of strict honesty, industrious and saving, and had accumulated a large property in his business ventures, estimated by curious individuals all the way from $100,000 to $500,000, but Mr. Merrill was a person who did not publish either his mental or financial worth to the world. He, like other men, had his friends and his enemies, and the writer was glad to be numbered among the former. His likes were strong and his dislikes equally firm, and those who knew him best will long cherish his memory and worth. The funeral will be held Monday at 2 P.M. from the house, and the remains will be interred in his lot in Silver Lake cemetery already prepared with a monument erected by his own hands. The Episcopal burial service will be read.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 5, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Harrison, Wanamaker & Co., arrived in our city Saturday, April 25th, and remained here until one minute past 12 Sunday night, May 3d, when the troupe left for Oregon. I inclose you a copy of a letter I wrote Mr. Wanamaker on the day of his arrival in the city. With this letter, and inclosed in the same envelope, I sent both the picture on the front page and the editorial pertaining to same of the issue of April 11th of THE TRUTH SEEKER. To be sure that the Hon. Holy John would receive the letter I put a special delivery stamp on the envelope. The next day, Sunday, April 26th, Mr. Wanamaker was advertised to speak to the Young Men's Christian Association, and as tickets were required to gain admittance, I procured one for both Mr. Putnam and myself, thinking that if Mr. Wanamaker should in any way reply to the letter and cartoon, some of the Infidels ought to hear what was said. Mr. Putnam being too busy that afternoon preparing for his lecturing trip, on which he started the next day, and as George was out of town, I sacrificed my time to the cause by going it alone. A I expected, the postmaster-general was notably silent in regard to the matter, and though he has spoken four times during the two Sundays he remained in the city, the following, which I hav clipped from the evening Bulletin of yesterday, is as near as he has come to answering THE TRUTH SEEKER or my letter: "In my last words I desire to commend to you a love for this old Bible, for the Sabbath day, for the church of God, and for the high and holy things that tend to increase the welfare of the community."

You will notice the letter is a decoy, the name is fictitious, and there is no such number on Post street this city. Mr. Wanamaker will find as hot a bed of Infidelity in Oregon and Washington as he did in San Francisco; and I hope that some of the Freethinkers in one of those states will succeed in drawing out an answer to THE TRUTH SEEKER'S letter of February 11th from this holy hypocrit, JohnWanamaker, the people's servant, and imagination's slave. Hoping the Freethinkers throughout the country will do their utmost to prevent Mr. Johnny from evading this matter, I remain, Yours without Christ, FRED. S. LUCE.

[CORRECT COPY.]

SAN FRANCISCO, April 25, 1891.

HON. JOHN WANAMAKER, Palace Hotel: My attention has been called to the inclosed newspaper clippings by a member of my family, and because I am a member of the Salvation Army and my persecutor a Unitarian, I am greatly embarrassed at what is here published as your policy, which I don't believe you ever caused to be published as your decision. Will you please answer if the charge is true, or I would much rather you would refute the accusation publicly tomorrow at the Young Men's Christian Association meeting, where you are to speak, so that my Infidel relativ may be silenced. I am, Yours in Christ, T. W. STROWTHER.

EAST OTTO, N. Y., March 7, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: For the benefit of those who are thirsting for truth, allow me to giv an opinion concerning our daily life.

Could we understand how wonderfully we are made, how finely we are organized, we would, I think, reach out into broader fields of thought and learn to manage ourselvs better. However, there is much that one can do every day to bring more happiness to one's self and others by earnestly studying human life.

Freethinkers, so called, do not believe in a personal God or a personal devil; in a place called heaven or a burning hell; in a personal savior or eternal damnation; yet do we all recognize the real meaning beneath the false. God or good is all-powerful. Christ or truth is the only saving power in the universe.

Truth alone can save us from evil, devil. Evil and ignorance go hand in hand. Truth alone can save us from the burning hell of transgression of eternal law and place us in a condition of harmony or heaven.

Let God, good, dwell ever in the mind of man, let only good thoughts and good feelings abide within, and happiness will be universal. The great truth which, if understood, will enable a man to do this, is summed up in three words—"Thoughts are things."

We are continually sending out these minute particles of thought-substance which carry with them our mental states or feelings wherever we send them. And in so doing we are inviting or calling to ourselvs thoughts of a like character. If we continually think only kind thoughts, sending even to our bitterest enemy a feeling of good will, we will receive kind thoughts in return. No vulgar or low thoughts can dwell long in one's mind if he be persistent in driving them out by thinking pure and noble thoughts. Fretful, hopeless, disappointed, and discouraged thoughts bring back their companions to weaken our minds, lower our vitality, and render us miserable in mind and body. Hating thoughts, thoughts of revenge, and destructiv thoughts, while opening the way for similar thoughts to injure us, burn out our brains, consume our vital power, and rob our bodies of their rightful nutriment. On the contrary, calm, serene, hopeful, trustful, and patient thoughts build up and strengthen mind and body. Loving thoughts, thoughts of returning good for evil, constructiv thoughts, all attract the same thought elements, which quicken our minds, build up our bodies, and fill our hearts with new courage and joy. Such make us healthful, happy, and of great value to the world. You who are discouraged and think yourselvs of little use on earth, begin to-day to think hopeful, thankful, and joyous thoughts; build yourself anew by their power. And soon you will see that you are needed in this busy world, and that your usefulness will increase with your strength of mind. Yours truly, E. B. D.

SAN ANTONIO, May 9, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: As I believe in "carrying the war into Africa," I hav sent the following letter to Rev. W. W. Pinson, pastor of the Travis Park Methodist Episcopal church (South) of this city, which explains itself. A. CHAPMAN.

REV. W. W. PINSON, City, Dear Sir: Some person has been kind enough to leave a copy of the Christian Observer at Liberal Hall, and I, as representativ of the Association, hereby tender thanks for the same. I only regret that the one sending it did not hav the moral courage to bring it in instead of throwing it into the stairway after dark.

Having carefully read your sermon therein, there is one clause to which I must take exception, providing it is aimed at Freethinkers, and I suppose it is. The sentence referred to is this: "What is the meaning of an oath to one who believes there is no divine justice in the affairs of men?" If by the words "divine justice" you assume that Freethinkers do not believe in retribution for violation of moral and physical law, you are very much in the dark in regard to our tenets. We hold that morality is just as good out of the church as in it, and that for every infraction penalty is sure to follow. We hav no right to say that the punishment will be in a future life, for the person does not liv who knows any more about a future existence than a babe. We can hope that evolution continues and carries us forward to new existences, but we cannot know it.

The book on which so many predicate their hopes and fears was mostly written when intellectuality was in its infancy, and has been revised time after time, to make it, in a measure, meet the progressiv tendency incident to modern thought. But it sadly needs much more revision and elimination before it can be properly called a guide to moral life. Freethinkers do not believe that any book filled with murders, debaucheries, and obscenity is what is needed to encourage purity and morality, and it is certainly amazing that so many still cling to and believe in such a volume.

As your thoughts hav been placed before me unsought, but nevertheless carefully read, I trust I may be excused for advancing one of the ideas peculiar to our belief. Assuming that your God is what you claim him to be, a God of infinit power, infinit justice, and infinit love, can you, while keeping these attributes in mind, conceive that he will for an eternity punish his children for living according to the natures with which he endowed them? Freethinkers hav a better conception of their god, the god of nature, and while they believe that each and every infraction of moral, mental, or physical law will be duly punished, they cannot believe that an eternity is necessary for the full completion of that punishment. Such a view as that transforms your God from a loving father to a fiend incarnate, unworthy the love or even respect of any sensible person.

If you hav the slightest idea that Freethought means free license or any species of immorality, it is hoped that you and those of your belief will take an early opportunity to disabuse your minds of such errors.

Respectfully yours, A. CHAPMAN,
Secretary San Antonio Liberal Association.

BUTTE CITY, MONT., March 18, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Mankind hav ever manifested an inordinate desire for a more thorough knowledge of the recondite, and, with unabated energy, continue the search for a broken segment in the boundless circle of time, which it is believed would mark the period of its beginning and termination. This theory was advanced by early tradition and supported by divine revelation, and is concurred in by some of the most learned of modern scientists. There being conclusiv proof, however, of chronological error in the scripture narrativ of creation, besides being almost totally irreconcilable from a scientific standpoint, this once popular idea of creation is now being quite generally discredited. A method for constructing new worlds, strictly on scientific principles, and much more in accord with human reason, is found in the "nebular theory," but most unfortunately the plan designed to giv them population will remain unperfected until the discovery of "the missing link." This apparent dilemma can only be escaped in one of two directions. Either the planets hav always existed, together with their multitudinous forms of animal life, otherwise the presence of the species is due to the generativ powers and latent energies which nature holds in reserve, and which under new conditions would be utilized to restore perfect man. Circumstances necessitating such intervention are strongly indicated by probable changes in the earth's polarity. Such an event would force the water of the ocean from its bed, and desolation would mark its impetuous and irresistible course. Now, if the position of the earth's axis were so changed as to be perpendicular to the plane of its orbit, there would then be no changes in the climate of any locality. New possibilities might then arise out of new conditions favorable to perfect organization, and perhaps the human race would again appear with largely increased mental and physical capacity. With different results—as to mortality—the few survivors would re-enact the scenes whereby history again repeats itself.

The physical effect on the earth's surface of a change of polarity would be much the same as is now observed in the stratified rocks, each successiv stratum marking an era of many million years. The failure, however, to discover traces of mankind in the limited area which it is possible to investigate, is only prima facie evidence of his being absent where sought for. But if it be sustained that these records are infallible proof of man's non existence at that period, the evidence then is equally conclusiv that all the planets hav reached their enormous proportions by accumulations extending through an indefinit period of time, and that life is indeed the offspring of Mother Earth. It is observed, however, that the theory of nursing baby worlds from infancy to mature age is much more easily illustrated than any method by which to assign them burial. The reciprocating influence, common to the solar system, is but imperfectly understood; but when we meditate upon the rapid flight of these massiv bodies around the sun in perfect order of time, and in strict harmony with universal law, the destruction of any one of this group of worlds, one broken wheel in this swiftly revolving machinery, would seem to involve the whole planetary system in a general catastrophe.

The extent of "matter" is of so great a magnitude as to baffle human conception, hence the declaration that "matter is eternal" seems to be founded on a basis as broad and deep as the universe. Millions of miles appear to us within the limited range of the telescope, extending in every direction from the earth, and this vast area is insignificant compared to the wide expanse which opens beyond. This crude analysis of abstruse questions relating to the sciences, is not designed to be either authentic or instructiv, but to represent the general tendency of "Freethought" and individual conceptions of alleged facts, founded on theory, philosophy, and the teachings of divine revelation. The facts relating to primary conditions, or whether man is the result of an intelligent design, are questions which are not regarded as being material to our interests, but are valuable only to those who may successfully practice upon the credulity of others. We cannot transcend the bounds of mentality in the search for a "first great cause," nor can we discover an immortal part in the mind, it having lost its identity when separated from matter, precisely as light imparted by the brilliant orb of day.

It is not a question, which is the greater, the father or son? but as to the relations existing between "the goose and the golden egg." Whatever our convictions may be in this regard which circumstances may hav forced upon us, they equally involve a calm resignation to the inevitable.

Man came into the world in response to the amorous calls of prolific nature, without having been proffered any choice as to conditions. He pursues his destiny in conformity to universal law, his independent action extending only so far as he may recklessly antagonize the harmony of conditions. The significance, however, of human action, so far as it may tend to affect new conditions, is no more apparent to us than the possible result of the earth's rapid flight round the sun. The ills of life are not specifically the result of an intelligent design, but are due to ignorance and imperfect adaptation to primary conditions.

The mission of life is to attain the highest possible standard of human happiness. If we are designed to promote some important end beyond the plane of our orbit, we hav no power to defeat the purpose, as nature has supplied us with instinctiv tendencies which contribute to that result. Reasoning from these premises, we can commit no offense against deity, this possibility being restricted to voluntary or involuntary transgression of natural law. The interests of all are equally involved in the truth or falsity of the claims of "inspired writers;" but the world is indeed slow to learn that "the ways of the almighty are mysterious and past finding out." Hence all assumed knowledge of deity is fraudulent and the missionary work of evangelists betrays mercenary and selfish motivs; there being no human emotions directed to spiritual philanthropy. Theological science teaches that through the medium of faith, Christians are enabled to both love and fear an invisible master, who has no known existence, independent of what is conceived in the imagination. This is not only complex reasoning and a misnomer, but it is in direct violation of the teachings of metaphysical and phrenological science. The mysteries of the sacred writings are not thus briefly enumerated; but they extend with characteristic inconsistency throughout the complicated network of revelations, creeds, doctrins, and dogmas.

Religious fanaticism has caused this question to assume a most irrational, wild, and fantastic form, but if Christian soldiers will submit to pay the expenses of an extended campaign, salaried generals will joyfully continue "the irrepressible conflict." SILAS A. HANE.

EUGENE, ORE., May 3, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Hope of getting a new subscriber has caused this undue, yes, criminal delay in my renewal. The money was at hand every day. Your pardon. But I need not further recite the old unwelcome story. I send $6—$1 for Liberal fund, $2 for Heston's "Pictorial Text-Book," etc. I like THE TRUTH SEEKER all over, except recent quarreling. It finds and ably deals with the great wealth of normal truth. Even the letter department is of great interest to our Freethought family. I join in the cheer of Heston. After a long tide of laughter at the last picture I got able to say, "Bully for Lige, go for it." Am still laughing. Maybe sanctified Comstock would think that, for the breezy incident, the shirt-tail of this hydraulic sun-god should hav grown a little longer. But he will think a moment about none of the Bible Gods ever having been seen, excepting the "back parts."

We are all proud of our many writers and speakers of such commanding talent and zeal. One of the pleasing marvels of the age is that so many bright and brave women, young and old, are now in the front ranks of progress and rational philosophy.

Woman, nature's most hallowed shrine of worth and beauty—woman, ever belied, desecrated, and enslaved by bogus Bibles and priests, shall yet ascend to the higher plain of thought, and there find the true felicity of her attainments and destiny. To this self-redeeming goal of ambition, I warmly hail thee onward and upward.

Well, did you see with what grace and ability a January issue of the Oregonian silenced Rev. Mr. Gorden in his false claim that George Washington was a Christian? I lately read that Dr. Wilson has resigned his pulpit of the first Methodist church of Spokane. He states that he must hav more consistency, freedom, and progress of thought than can be found in the pulpit. He now perceives that the church continually hampers, tortures, and enervates the human mind as the Chinese do the feet. I gladly welcome all into the radiant light and joy of Freethought. But here one givs up the bliss of ignorance and blind faith. And this pays. For the change is like stepping from the gloom of night into the bright morning. I know all there is of religions and Bibles, Gods, saviors, etc.

I hav traced the evolution of all these from pagan relics, and the modern disguise and whitewash is about all rubbed off. These old mythic figure-heads of the Bible stage and menagerie hav lost all their interest with the intelligent. They will soon be dumped away with the other rubbish of antiquity.

All the Bibles pertain largely to astrologic worship. They are all written in the disguise of astronomic allegory. Hence the gross absurdity and falsehood which the clergy impose upon the ignorant masses by a literal interpretation of this religious fable. To-day the historic students everywhere know that the Jewish scriptures are compiled from the Egyptian and Hindoo mythology.

The inspired thieves openly boast of their grand larceny of these literary jewels. Of course they stole all the other cheap John trinkets that were in their reach, and plied all the black arts for God's sake! In this champion joke the Jews do not plainly brag of carrying off all the lice of Egypt with the other divine agencies of spoil, but I suppose they took at least a large colony and counted them into their prolific report of population. Seriously, however, I would hint to the student that this story, like all the other mysteries, miracles, and prodigies, has an allegoric or celestial phase. I mean that, as all the Bible firms had the constellations laid off after the model of the earth in character and name, this exaggerated episode of the Jews pertains to their celestial Egypt in the constellation of the Dragon. Here was the mount where the sun-god, Christ, was tempted with the offer of all the world. In this star-desert he fasted through the forty days of winter. In the solar apotheosis of Joseph, he became governor of Egypt under Pharaoh-Draco-Pontius Pilot-Whale, the celestial sea-pilot. Then, when the Jews followed in the same old Noachian Ship of Zion, their legend reports a voyage of forty years in this star-desert (of Arabia). According to Revelation, Nazareth was at the solstitial head or cross of this Satanic constellation—or Egypt, "where our savior was born." It was here that all of the ten thousand sun-gods of mythology had to go into the winter tomb for a period of three days. Here was the annual battle-field of the Gods and the devils with their vast and loyal armies. And the latter were always the victors, though the vanquished secured the glorious compromise of having the new sun-god resurrected and crowned so that the solar ship could be moved from the solstitial air-rate between winter and spring, and repeat his annual career of life, miracle, and universal glory to the northern hemisphere. Well, was not perpetual religious war and appropriation the only way to prevent the devil from keeping the sun tied up to Ararat? I guess so!

From the age of nine years to 1878 I was flattered as "a pillar of the church," and for a long time this was more charming than the music of a jewsharp. I had just the right combination of ignorance and zeal for a good Christian—fool. Then, even after a thorough investigation, I began to write a commentary that should harmonize science, history, and theology! But, oh, my, what a silly failure! It was nearly as bad as Dr. Nelson on Infidelity. It was too verdant to burn well, yet the best I ever read. As soon as I got clear of religious insanity I wrote a work which givs a full solution of all Bible mysteries from an astrologic phase of interpretation. So, to me, that stupendous fabric of fable and fraud has neither mystery nor fact. Long life for Heston and THE TRUTH SEEKER. J. C. SNODGRASS.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Birds and Flowers Are Here.

Old Winter with his chilly breath,
His cold white robes of snow,
Has passed away, and in his place
The grass and flowers grow.
Though once the earth was clad in white,
'Tis now in green arrayed;
Its lovely dress by the deft hands
Of Mother Nature made.

The cowslip and the daisy
Are peeping from the ground,
The violets are blooming
In beauty all around.
The vines are climbing upward
Toward the smiling sun,
All nature is rejoicing
That winter's race is run.

The birds are merrily twittering
In orchard, field, and grove.
The bluebird and the robin,
The linnet and the dove,
The meadowlark and brown thrush,
The sparrow and the wren,
All the glad messengers of spring,
We welcome them again.

Katie Got the Book.

Katie was going to bed after a day of toil minding her sick and maimed dolls—chronic invalids all of them—and her b-e-a-u-tiful duck, the one old quacker that traveled with the hens because he had no better company. The robin that had been watching her out of the corners of his bright eyes, as he ran over the lawn and listened to her prattle, was asleep already with his head under his wing, and Katie's hung heavily on mother's shoulder as she was undressing her. "Now I lay me" had been said, with many yawns in between, and mamma's pet had been tucked in snugly; but just as the sleepy eyes were closing she sat suddenly bolt upright.

"Mamma," she said, "I want Johnnie's picture-book—that with the lambs."

"Hush, Katie!" said her mother, the least bit wearily, for the little feet and the little tongue had never ceased going one moment all day. "Now we will go to sleep."

"But, mamma," and the big eyes pleaded earnestly, "can't I hav Johnnie's picture-book this onst?"

"Not to-night, deary; it is too late."

"Mamma," said Katie, sitting up very straight and looking very solemn indeed, "I heard a story of a little girl—she was a good little girl—that asked her mamma onst when she was put to bed for the picture-book with the lambs, and the mamma told her she couldn't hav it, and—and"—the baby voice fell to an awed whisper and the eyes grew very big—"in just—about—two—minutes—she was dead!"

"My, Katie! And what killed her so quick?"

"Because," said Katie with conviction, "because she didn't get the book."

She got it, and in five minutes was asleep with it in her arms.—Harper's Young People.

Too Much Knowledge.

The foreman of a room in one of the largest manufacturing establishments in the country told a friend recently the circumstances of his first going to work there, and the brief story contains a moral which it would be well for many a lad starting out in life to lay to heart. He was sent to the foreman of the factory by a friend who was anxious to get him into the employ of the company, and the following conversation took place:

"Well," the foreman said, "I understand you want to come here to work. What do you know about machines?"

"Nothing," the other answered.

"Nothing!" echoed the foreman, in surprise. "You do not mean to say that you never saw a machine, I suppose?"

"I literally never saw a machine work in my life," was the reply, "except a locomotiv."

"Where do you come from?"

"Cape Cod."

"Hum!" the foreman remarked, studying the face before him. "I came from the Cape myself. Do you suppose that there is anything in our business that you will not know all about in six months, if you come here to work?"

The Cape Cod man was puzzled how to answer, and contented himself with saying that he was sure he could not tell.

"The truth is," the foreman explained, "we can get plenty of men, but by the time they hav been here six months or a year they know so much that we hav to send them away. They know a vast deal more than we men who hav been here twenty years, and they are mostly willing to tell us all they know, too.

"Now if you think there are things that you cannot learn in a week or two, we should like to hire you; but if you are one of the abominably wise kind you had better move along and giv us a chance to find somebody who doesn't know quite so much."—Youth's Companion.

Chats with Correspondents.

TO THE SEVERAL INQUIRIES IN REGARD TO MR. WETTSTEIN'S BADGE-PIN.—Write to him at Rochelle, Ill., and he will giv you all particulars. He has the same design of the pin in illuminated colors on visiting and business cards, which he sells at a low figure for so lovely an engraving. This would also be very attractiv for envelopes and letter paper.

JENNIE D., Davenport, Ia.—The pamphlet you wish to see is entitled "Popular Religions and What Shall Be Instead." It is one of Parker Pillsbury's unique discourses, and can be obtained of him at Concord, N. H., for the low price of ten cents single copy.

JAMES W. B.—Learn to take care of yourself, James. It is better to be useful than fashionable. "He laughs best who laughs last." If you are compelled to wear old clothes now, you will by and by wear new ones. Store your mind with knowledge that can be made available in this life, and the "next one" will take care of itself. Your concern is with this world for the present.

SARAH A.—You ask if a Freethinker ought ever to be ashamed of his principles. A Freethinker never is ashamed of his principles, my dear. He is true to his honest convictions, and, although not proclaiming them on every occasion, he is always free to state them, and reason therefor, whenever called upon. The term Freethinker is one of the proudest titles in the universe, and is worn by honest men and honest women who are not ashamed of their colors.

Correspondence.

LINCOLN, TENN., April 30, 1891.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: My aunties take THE TRUTH SEEKER. I read the Children's Corner, and like it very much. I am twelve years old. My studies are reading, spelling, geography, grammar, arithmetic, and writing. I hope to see this in print. I am a Freethinker. Yours truly,

MATTIE P. LOVE.

LIMESTONE, ILL., March 15, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Will you let me into your Corner? I'm the "baby," even if I am a big one; they get good training here, and that is what I need.

I inclose a poem suggested by something I saw a few days ago.

Oh, children, be kind and loving; you can never repay your parents for their care and kindness to you when a child. And be careful of cruel, cutting words. Think! how would you feel if sister, brother, friend, or playmate should die, and your last words to either of them had been harsh and unkind?

If you hav done something wrong, go and ask forgivness; don't wait till to-morrow; it may never come.

You will be respected for being honorable about it, and besides will hav the sweet peace that results from doing right.

Your Liberal friend, ANNA M. MOHN.

TOURTELOTTE, COL., April 24, E.M. 291.

DEAR AUNT SUSAN: I now take the opportunity to write you a letter, hoping to find you and the Cornerites well, as this letter leaves me the same. I was so sorry to read the great loss of late of the great leaders of progress in the ranks of Freethought throughout the world. Arbor day has again passed, and we could not plant trees up here because of the frost and depth of snow, but am glad to say that the snow is going fast. In place of Arbor day we are to hav an entertainment for the school-children. We hav no church up here, and preaching does not pay and there is no volunteer. I am going to ask a historical question and I want it answered in full, giving the history and page and chapter quoted from. What did the people of Strasburg put out the eyes of Vanwik the clockmaker of Strasburg for? Was it religion that caused him to hav his eyes put out? I take the Comfort, but it is very pious. If we could only hav a young people's paper like that I think it would help the cause of Freethought. Again, if we could get the names of Freethinkers in science, medicin, and all the branches of arts, and what they hav done for their advancement and progress, I think we could refute the Christians' question, What hav Freethinkers done for the world?

Was it Copernicus that had his eyes burnt out for looking at the stars?

We hav a large school here of forty scholars and a good teacher. His name is Mr. A. E. Phillips. We hav a good lyceum here—every Wednesday night debating and mock trials and speaking and singing. So I will close for this time. With my best love to you and cousins of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, I remain, Yours truly, RHODA MASON.

P.S.—I had an Uncle John Mason who lived in Fall River, and, with moving, he has lost our address. Would like to hear from him if this meets his eye. R. M.

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., April 28, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav read with much pleasure the account which George Remsburg gave of his collection. I, too, had the "collecting mania" for a long time.

I am most particularly interested in Indian curios, ancient and modern, and in flowers.

I hav a good collection of minerals—some very fine ones—especially in gold and in quartz.

I hav also some fine stone hatchets and hammers, some charms of jasper and malachite, and a collection of fine arrow-heads and knives of obsidian, jasper, flint, etc., from the ancient ruins of Arizona. According to the investigations made by the Smithsonian Institute these ruins are supposed to be about ten thousand years old.

I hav many fragments of pottery vessels, a few of which show the "Greek key" pattern traced in black on a white ground.

Marine curios are not so fully represented in my collection, but I hav some shells from South America, China, Africa, Scinde, Mexico, Trinidad, Cuba, and from New England; shells and pebbles from Plymouth beach, and very curious starfish from the Gulf of California.

I value most highly some arrow-heads from the fort built by Miles Standish at Plymouth, and a bit of wood from one of the elm-trees under which the Pilgrims lived immediately after the landing. Arizona has a garnet field which yields stones far surpassing in color and brilliancy the Cape garnets of the Kimberly mines. I hav some fine specimens of these garnets. I hav also some fine large garnets, of little value except as curios, which are found in Alaska. The fashionable moonstone is well represented in my collection and gold nuggets and dust are not lacking.

Petrifactions and fossils are included, and onyx from the Big Bug mine of Arizona. I hav some very fine pottery from Mexico, some curious Indian dolls, and a bow and arrows made by the Tonte Apaches.

I am attempting to get a wild flower from each state in the Union; about sixteen are now represented.

Besides these I hav flowers from the Wayside Inn, Sudbury, Mass.; from the bronze Minute Man, the Old Manse, grave of British soldiers, Soldiers' Monument, Old North Bridge, and field of the Concord fight, all near Concord, Mass. Also flowers from the graves of Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau, and Miss L. M. Alcott; a rose from Emerson's garden, clover from the Alcotts' yard, evergreen from the Wayside, and strawberry leaf from Thoreau's hut at Lake Walden.

This includes but a part of my growing collections, but it will serve to show that friend George is not the only curio-hunter among the younger Freethinkers. Can any one send me a flower or leaf from the grave or the home of D. M. Bennett or Horace Seaver?

I should like flowers from the graves and homes of any of our presidents, noted authors, of persons of any general interest, and from any places of note.

I will send you some Arizona curios in return.

Yours truly, SHARLOT M. HALL.

P.S.—Thank you, Miss Wixon, for your vote against the pansy. Though a very beautiful flower, it is too very, very common in cheap, as well as fine, jewelry for a Freethought badge, besides being so widely known as the badge and nom de plume of a noted author of Sunday-school literature.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

TRY-SQUARE:

OR,

The Church of Practical Religion.

BY REPORTER.

This is the history of an attempt to found a church without superstition, and its success. Uncle Job Sawyer, the pastor, having established his pulpit, uses it to discuss all the vital questions of human concern, religious, political, and otherwise. The book is written in well-chosen language, and easily understood. There is just sufficient narrativ about it to interest the reader and hold his attention while the truth is being brought to his mind.

The New Thought (Chicago) says: "It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw. . . . To state the whole thing in the language of another, the first book shows what a heaven is coming on this earth after it shall have passed through the necessary discipline, and the other books show what a hell of a time we have to get there."

The Chesaning Argus (Chesaning, Mich.) says: "It is one grand sublime poem . . . a perfect history in blank verse of the social and religious struggles of our earth, and would be good reading for those who have been interested in 'Looking Backward.'" Describing Book 6, it says: "This chapter will be found especially interesting to ladies."

The Phrenological Journal (New York) regards it as equal to the great epics of a hundred years ago or more.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," says: "I have read it with much interest. I am in entire sympathy with its spirit of boundless faith in human development."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says it is one of the significant indications of the signs of the times.

The Nationalist, of Boston, considers its style as equal to Milton's, and says it "engages the reader's attention with the first line and keeps it engrossed until the final word."

Brick Pomeroy's Advance Thought (N. Y.) says: "It contains much to benefit humanity."

News of the Week.

THE bishop of Lincoln, Eng., has issued a form of prayer against the grip.

IT is said that Blaine, though ill at present, will accept a presidential nomination.

IN England last year 22 young men died of injuries received at football and 78 were crippled.

THE torpedo is coming to the front as a leading element in naval warfare, and it is thought that it will amply defend our ports.

SENATOR EDMUNDS desires at the capital a great government university to teach nonsectarian Protestantism and counteract Catholicism.

IN New York there is being formed a society called the Bureau of Justice, to attend police courts and rectify errors of the wretched Tammany judges.

THE czarowi'ch, who is visiting Japan, was struck on the head with a saber by a fanatic for entering a Buddhist temple with boots on. A thick sun helmet saved his life.

A GREEK CATHOLIC Good Friday procession at Zante, Ionian Isle, when it reached the Jew quarter attacked the residents. Soldiers who had been placed there in expectation of the outrage shot and killed several processionists.

CHARLES DUNN, professedly from Pueblo, Col., has been arrested at New York for threatening Jay Gould's life unless he gave $20,000,000 to what Dunn describes as an Order of Christ's Followers, of which he is vice-president.

AT the prospect of Russian invasion of India, Catholics tremble for their missions there, and less frequently express the wish that Britain should lose that province, which desire their Irish sympathies formerly inspired.

AN eminent Catholic authority at Rome communicates to an American journal his counsel on schooling, which is that parochial schools must be erected except where means are insufficient to secure instruction of as high grade as that of the public school; and in such places religious training in the state school is to be secured by persuading the local board to adopt the Poughkeepsie or a like plan.

ON Ascension day an attempt was made to introduce a surpliced choir at the Church of the Ascension, Hamilton, Ont. Anti-ritualists put out the lights and created a tumult with shouts, whistles, and cat-calls. The clergy and choir brought candles and lamps from houses, but after unsuccessful endeavor to make themselves heard against uproarious singing of "Old Black Joe" and the like, were forced to retire.

FIRE-ARMS bought by the Chilian rebels from Hartley & Graham. Ilion, N. Y., were embarked from San Francisco on the schooner Robert and Minnie and transferred to the Chilian rebel steamship Itata. United States authorities hav arrested the commander of the Robert and Minnie, and ordered the Charleston, Omaha, Baltimore, Pensacola, and San Francisco to arrest the Itata. The latter, it is supposed, will meet the convoy Esmeralda, a powerful vessel that may giv hard fighting to the Charleston, which seems the only vessel likely to overtake her.

THE third party convention about assembling at Cincinnati is in answer to a call addressed by the Farmers' Alliance to all who hav stood up for independent political action on the questions of finance, transportation, labor, and land. The call asked delegates from the Independent party, the People's party, the late Federal and Confederate soldiers, the Farmers' Alliance North and South, the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, the Citizens' Alliance, the Knights of Labor, the Colored Farmers' Alliance, the American Federation of Labor, trades unions and trades assemblies, the Federation of Railway Employees, the Nationalists, and all other industrial organizations that support the principles of the St. Louis agreement of December, 1889.

THE Italian press is indignant at the New Orleans grand jury. The Popolo Romano says it will be impossible hereafter for any civilized country to make a treaty with the United States based upon reciprocal protection of the lives of citizens of either country. The Italie says: "The Italian government is about to address a circular to the European powers submitting the conduct of the United States government in the New Orleans affair to their judgment. Italy will thus be the initiator of an international agreement to compel the United States to find means to guarantee the protection of foreign subjects." Rudini states that Fava was recalled because the United States disclaimed responsibility, but that Consul Corte at New Orleans was recalled a few days ago merely because he, Rudini, wishes information and also fears Corte has disclosed information inopportunely. Corte says that after the lynching he restrained his countrymen from killing the mayor and many persons concerned only by threatening disclosure. New Orleans longshoremen are trying to drive Italians from sharing their work.

ABRAHAM OUTDONE IN THE OFFERING BUSINESS.

Then he took his eldest son, that should hav reigned in his stead, and offered him as a burnt offering against the wall. And there was great indignation against Israel: And they departed from him, and returned to their own land.—2 Kings iii, 27.

Gems of Thought.

NATURE is seen to do all things spontaneously of herself, without the intermeddling of the gods.—Lucretius.

Do not inquire if a man be a heretic, if he be a Quaker, a Jew, or a heathen; but if he be a virtuous man, if he love liberty and truth, if he wish the happiness and peace of the human kind. If a man be ever so much a believer, and love not these things, he is a heartless hypocrit, a rascal, and a knave.—Shelley.

THOSE abuses of the freedom of speech are the exercises of liberty. They ought to be repressed; but to whom dare we commit the care of doing it? An evil magistrate, intrusted with power to punish for words, would be armed with a weapon the most destructiv and terrible. Under pretense of pruning off the exuberant branches, he would be apt to destroy the tree.—Benjamin Franklin.

SUCH is the train of atrocities which Elisha's message entailed on both the Hebrew kingdoms. A third time was the royal house of Israel extirpated, and now likewise that of Judah. That the Jewish writers can gloat over such funereal events, so deadly to their own people, is sufficiently wonderful. That men called Christians can read them with calm approbation is still more melancholy, for this is the training of mind which steeled all Europe to cruelty under the name of religion. This has lit up hell fires in Christendom; this has perpetuated treacherous massacres unknown to paganism.—F. W. Newman.

FOR my part, I long ago espoused the cause of religious liberty, not because that cause was popular, but because it was just; and I am not disposed to abandon the principles to which I hav been true through my whole life in deference to a passing clamor. The day may come, and may come soon, when those who are now loudest in raising that clamor may again be, as they hav formerly been, suppliants for justice. When that day arrives I will try to prevent others from oppressing them, as I now try to prevent them from oppressing others. In the mean time I shall contend against their intolerance with the same spirit with which I may hereafter hav to contend for their rights.—Macaulay.

THE preponderant rôle of the religions in past times is explained by the fact that then they were almost the only means by which men could set their intellectual and moral activity to work. They were the unique opening for all the higher aspirations of our being. At that epoch, with the exception of religion, there was no mental occupation other than coarse and material; nothing between the visionary and the most common reality. In the present day the necessary and natural middle course is found. Science and art hav spread before our eyes their domains with never-ending perspectivs, where everyone can expend his surplus activity without wasting it needlessly. Science permits of disinterested research, without tolerating the wanderings of the imagination. It givs enthusiasm without delirium. It has a beauty of its own, consisting of truth.—Guyau.

IF "God made man," he must hav made him for his amusement; and surely much amusement he must hav got out of the featherless biped. No six-year-old child sailing his boat—a cocoanut shell with a paper sail—can derive therefrom more real fun than Jehovah must surely derive from the antics of the little two-pronged nothings he has placed in this region of the universe. To man alone deity has given unlimited potentialities in the way of being absurd and an intense capacity for being unhappy. . . . This sort of thing is a very curious farce, and I often fancy the Father, Son, and Ghost open their three mouths which are one, and hold their six sides which are two, and laugh at the earth till all heaven rings. If God had made man sane, he would not hav got half the fun out of him he has got. True, the fun which deity must hav had over man's mad crusading and inquisiting and covenanting and flagellating, and so forth, has been no joke to man himself; but that is, of course, a small matter so that God be glorified.—Saladin.

THE assertion of the motion of the earth was a defiance, not only of philosophy and the church, but, at the same time, of that common ignorance which passes by the name of common sense; and Physical Science threw down her glove by the hand of Galileo. It is not pleasant to think of the immediate result of the combat—to see the champion of science, old, worn, and on his knees before the cardinal inquisitor, signing his name to what he knew to be a lie. And, no doubt, the cardinals rubbed their hands as they thought how well they had silenced and discredited their adversary. But two hundred years hav passed, and, however feeble or faulty her soldiers, Physical Science sits crowned and enthroned as one of the legitimate rulers of the world of thought. Charity children would now be ashamed not to know that the earth moves, while the schoolmen are forgotten; and the cardinals—well, the cardinals are, at the ecumenical council (1870), still at their old business of trying to stop the movement of the world.—Professor Huxley.

THE PREACHERS' DEFENDERS.

Notes and Clippings.

More preachers are being investigated these days than politicians. It is a good sign. They need it worse, bad as the politicians are.

Women are beginning to figure in the profession of civil engineering. Women are filling high places in the office of the surveyor-general at Denver.

According to an authority, "People who never worry do a great deal of missionary work that they don't get credit for." If this is correct will some one explain the use of sending missionaries to benighted Hottentots?

"It is hard to believe in the religion of a man who always looks as if he had been throwing bootjacks at a cat." And the man who looks as if he never threw anything at a cat is a hypocrit nine times out of ten. This is one of the things that makes little boys ask foolish questions.

A post-office inspector visited El Paso, Tex., and, after a few days' work of general inspection, went before a United States commissioner, and, upon declaring that he believed certain letters in the post-office to contain lottery advertisments, was given a warrant to take thirty-five sealed letters from the office and break the seals.

The immigration from Europe to the ports of Boston and Philadelphia, as well as to the port of New York, has been unusually heavy thus far this year; and at these ports as at this port a large proportion of the immigrants are Italians, Slavs, and Russian Hebrews. There is news, also, of the arrival of many immigrants at several cities of the Southern seaboard.

Henry George's Standard, a paper most folks hav forgotten exists, depicting the leading spirits in the Cincinnati convention of the People's party, puts, "first and foremost, the cranks—the joiners who join every new thing that they hear of; who go in for a reform with a big R, without regard to the supposed abuse that is to be reformed, and who account motion as progress without inquiring as to its direction." Mr. George ought to go easy on cranks.

The Congregationalist says: "The Baptist Teacher, in its treatment of the first Sunday-school lesson on Jonah, says: 'If it had pleased God so to order, it would hav been entirely possible even for an oyster to swallow Jonah—quite as easy as for Jonah to hav swallowed an oyster.' If it had pleased God so to order, it would hav been entirely possible for him to hav made an oyster a Sunday-school teacher; and it would hardly hav been more remarkable than that one who could write such nonsense as the comment quoted should be chosen for that position. But the oyster, if allowed to follow his natural instincts, would hav kept his mouth closed." Thus do religious amenities make joy for the world.

A short time ago an anthropologist of New York city got a group of men of many races in his house for a purpose. In the group there were a North American Indian, a Chinaman, a negro, a Hawaiian, a Hebrew, an Arab, an East Indian, and Europeans of the Gothic, Celtic, Slavic, and Latin races. All of them were found in the city of New York, and all were able to use the English language well or otherwise. The anthropologist who brought them together desired to get their notions upon certain questions of race, linguistics, and religion, but he had great difficulty in getting them. He proposes to hold other conferences of the same kind, and to prosecute his investigations until his object has been attained.

A Texas man, who keeps Saturday as the Sabbath, reports that he has been served with the appended warning: "We, the undersigned, citizens of this community, inform you that if you do keep Saturday for the Sabbath, you must keep Sunday also, thus conforming to the customs and habits of the people. If you refuse, we will whip you within an inch of your life for the first offense; and on the second we will hang you until you are dead, dead, dead." These Lone Star Christians, says Freethought, hav not read their Bibles aright. The divine command is, we believe, that the breaker of the popular Sabbath be taken to the suburbs and stoned with stones that he die, without waiting for a repetition of the offense.

Art and religious circles of London are engaged in an excited debate over Calderon's Academy picture, "St. Elizabeth of Hungary." The lady is depicted taking the vows renouncing the world, while kneeling nude at the altar. The press comments aroused a protest from Catholic priests declaring the painting historically untrue. Calderon replied by quoting a Latin record in which the saint is described at the altar, Exuit et nudavit. Catholic authorities responded that the words were used figurativly. Professor Huxley intervened in support of Calderon and quoted a record proving that the same saintly queen, with her maids, as a penance was stripped to the shift and well whipped. Crowds flock to see the painting, which the authorities of the academy hav bought for £1,200.

It is a significant sign of these degenerate times that the Rev. Dr. Bridgman should reject the orthodox view of hell. That he should for this reason resign his charge of one of the most important Baptist churches in this city is his simple duty. The fact of his congregation sharing his views is no atonement for the offense. He is a wicked clergyman and should be made to suffer. Thoughtful men in other professions are expected to develop, and, if necessary, modify their original opinions, but in ecclesiastical matters any tendency in that direction should be promptly suppressed. Moreover, if all faith in a material hell is to be abandoned half the fun in life goes with it. No one thinks that he himself is ever going there. It is merely a resort he is keeping warm for those who differ with him. What possible advantage, for instance, is there in being a Catholic if Protestants are also going to heaven? We must hav a special hereafter for all sects other than our own. To many weak and tender-hearted people it seems unfair that the millions of heathen who never heard of Christianity should simmer in eternal agony, but if we are in possession of a thoroughly organized material hell in activ operation it must hav constant fuel and plenty of it. Protestants and Catholics will be sure to turn upon each other when it comes to actual occupation of the ovens, whereas the heathen seem to be a natural fue purposely provided by a benevolent providence.—Life.

Sunday Laws and Sabbath Observance.

FACTS BIBLICAL, HISTORICAL, AND LEGAL.

"Truth has no respect for prejudice, prejudice has no respect for truth."

The object of all investigation should be the attainment of truth.

It is wondrous, as pitiful, that so many persons accept as sacred truth theories when they hav never studied them, or spent one hour in examination of the Bible to learn if they are really in harmony with its teachings or not.

We should insist on knowing why, before we consent to any rite or observance. This demanding Why? is the key to the temple of knowledge, the open sesame to every hidden truth of science, every political and social problem.

Are you in favor of laws to enforce Sunday observance?

You answer, Yes, because it is taught in the Bible, commanded of God in the Decalog, taught by Christ in the Sermon on the Mount, was sacredly kept by the apostles, and is the Christian Sabbath.

Let us ascertain if these assertions are founded on fact.

ORIGIN OF THE SABBATH.

We learn from the Bible that in the beginning God created the heaven and the earth in six days, and rested on the seventh day. "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made" (Gen. ii, 3).

Three assertions are here positivly made. First, that God rested on the seventh day. Second, that God blessed the seventh day. Third, that God sanctified (that is, made holy or sacred) the seventh day, set it apart for all future time as the day of rest and religious worship.

There can be no higher or better authority for any Christian duty or observance than the Bible, it being regarded by all Protestants as "their sole rule of faith and practice."

If the Bible teaches Sunday-keeping, then it is an ordinance of God; and all who revere his word are bound to obey.

What is the declaration of the Decalog? Exodus xx commences thus: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy; six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it, thou shalt not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it" (Ex. xx, 8–11).

The Bible testifies that God solemnly swore that this law, requiring the observance of the seventh day, should never be altered. Read Psalms lxxxix (always read the preceding and following verses of all scripture offered as proof-texts). After making promises in regard to those who keep his law, the Ten Commandments, God declares, "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that has gone out of my lips" (Ps. lxxxix, 34).

"And God spake all these words, The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God" (Ex. xx, 1, 10).

If God has removed his rest day, taken his blessing and sanctification from the seventh day, and transferred it to Sunday, the first day of the week, then he has altered "the thing that has gone out of his lips." But to admit that God has done this is to dethrone God, to make the God of truth false to his word, for he has declared the observance of his rest-day, the keeping of the seventh day, the day on which he rested, which he blessed and then sanctified, shall for all time be the sign between him and his children.

"Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations for a perpetual covenant" (Ex. xxxi, 16).

"Throughout their generations." So long as there shall be a child of Israel on the earth God declares that Israelites must observe the seventh day Sabbath. It is a perpetual covenant. But the next verse is of even greater import.

"It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed" (Ex. xxxi, 17).

Christian reader! are you of the Israel of God? Hav you the sign?

Keeping the seventh day is the sign, not for one dispensation, but forever.

Oh! but you are a Sabbath-keeper; you keep the Christian Sabbath, Sunday.

When did God rest on Sunday?

When did God bless Sunday as his rest-day?

When did God sanctify Sunday (set it apart for holy use)?

When you say you keep the "Christian Sabbath" you use a term not found in the Bible; never once used by Christ or by any one of his apostles or disciples.*

THE DAYS OF THE WEEK.

We receive our names of the days of the week from the pagans.

First day (dedicated to the sun) was called sun's day, hence our Sunday.

Second day (dedicated to the moon) was called moon's day, hence our Monday.

Third day (dedicated to Tuisco, the great German hero) was called Tuisco-day, hence our Tuesday.

Fourth day (dedicated to Woden, the God of battles) was called Woden's-day, hence our Wednesday.

Fifth day (dedicated to Thor, the god of wind and weather) was called Thor's-day, hence our Thursday.

Sixth day (dedicated to Friga, the goddess of peace and plenty) was called Friga-day, hence our Friday.

Seventh day (dedicated to Seator, the god of Freedom) was called Seator-day, hence our Saturday.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.—DID CHRIST CHANGE THE DAY?

So far from Christ teaching or in any way sanctioning the change of the Sabbath, he most positivly declared that it never should be changed.

So far from teaching to ignore observance of the rest-day of the creator that his followers might glorify the son by observing a day to commemorate the resurrection and ignore the day God solemnly declared should be observed as the sign between him and his Israel forever, Christ taught: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your father which is in heaven" (Matt. v, 16).

Sabbath-keeping would be good work, since it would glorify the father, recognizing him as the creator.

Sunday-keeping could in no sense be good work, since it ignores God; despises his solemn word that he would not alter the thing that has gone out of his lips; ignores the work of creation, and tramples under foot the unmistakable testimony of Christ.

BUT DID NOT CHRIST CHANGE THE SABBATH?

He most emphatically declares that not one of the Ten Commandments should ever in the smallest particular be changed or abrogated. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill" (Matt. v, 17). Fulfill, Greek, pleroo, to teach, to preach; to inculcate fully.

And this he proceeds to do, for the very next verse reads: "For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

Not an iota—Greek miakeraia, the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t—shall pass from the law till all be fulfilled—eos an panta genetia, the consummation of all things.

Oh! says one, If we only keep one day in seven, if we do not keep just the exact day, God will not regard a little thing like that so long as we keep all the other commandments. But what says Christ? "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. v, 19).

We may call this a great and that a little commandment, but Christ declares that to break the least one forfeits heaven. And the Holy Ghost through the apostle James, in exact harmony with the words of Christ, declares, "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (Jas. ii, 10).

Keep the whole law—what law? The law of Ten Commandments. This is proved by the next verse, "For he that said, do not commit adultery, said also, do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law."

There is no account in the New Testament of any apostle or disciple of Christ ever keeping Sunday as the Sabbath.

Matthew, not claimed by any church historian to hav been written earlier than between 50 and 60 A D, declares, "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week" (Matt. xxviii, 1).

Matthew, written long years after Christ—Dr. Samuel Davidson, one of the most highly accredited and pious of modern church historians, affirms that Matthew was not written till between 118 and 119 A D.—records the fact, that the Sabbath of God, of Christ, of the apostles, and the early Christians, ended before Sunday, the first day of the week, began to dawn.

Mark, by some claimed to hav been written between 60 and 70 A D., but by the best authorities admitted not to hav been written till 120 A D: "And when the Sabbath was passed Mary Magdalene, and Mary, the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulcher at the rising of the sun" (Mark xvi, 1, 2).

Matthew declares that the Sabbath had ended, Mark that the Sabbath was past, before the rising of the sun on Sunday, the first day of the week.

Luke declares that the women who loved Christ and desired to embalm his body, had such reverence for his teaching that they paused in their work of love in performing the last sad rites for their dead Lord. "They returned and prepared spices and ointments and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment" (Luke xxiii, 56).

Which day? which commandment? The day preceding Sunday. They obeyed the Fourth Commandment, which declares, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." "Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulcher, bringing the spices which they had prepared" (Luke xxiv, 1).

Reader, what think you of these facts?

DID THE APOSTLE PAUL TEACH SUNDAY-KEEPING?

"He taught by precept and example the observance of Sunday or the first day of the week, for he celebrated the Lord's supper on Sundays, the day of Christian worship."

Let us hav the facts. The meeting at Troas, recorded in Acts xx, is the one only instance of any meeting for religious purposes on Sunday or the first day of the week. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow: and continued his speech until midnight. And there were many lights in the upper chamber where they were gathered together. And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead. And Paul went down and fell on him, and embracing him, said: Trouble not yourselvs, for his life is in him. When he therefore was come up again and had broke bread and eaten and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed. And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted. And we went before to ship and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot" (Acts xx, 7 13).

The claim is that on this occasion the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered by Paul on Sunday. If it really did so state—which it certainly does not—it would be no authority for believing that God had "altered the thing that had gone out of his lips," or that Christ's declaration that "till heaven and earth passed, not the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t should pass from the law," was untrue.

When was this meeting at Troas? In the evening, for there were lights in the upper chamber. Upon what day? It says the first day of the week. Then it was a meeting on Sunday night. Paul was long preaching, and soon after midnight the young man fell out of the window. Paul went down, revived the young man, came up again, and quite some time after midnight, brake bread. So if this breaking bread was the Lord's supper, it did not take place till after midnight.

Sunday ends at midnight; so it must hav been on Monday morning that Paul brake bread with the disciples. This is undeniable; so then it is Monday we should keep as the Sabbath and not Sunday, if this scripture is to be regarded as authority for change of the Sabbath.

But the Jews did not count time as the Romans did, as we do now; from "even to even" constituted a day. "The evening and the morning were the first day." It will hardly be disputed that the Jews counted days from sundown to sundown.

Well, then, this meeting at Troas was at the beginning of the first day (Sunday)—that is, what we call Saturday evening.

But there are a few difficulties yet to be overcome ere this can help Sunday-keepers; for we learn "Paul talked a long while, even till break of day—so he departed." Till daybreak Sunday morning, and then he starts off on a long journey, going across country afoot, but sending the disciples round by sailboat to Assos, when he got aboard and sailed with them to Mitylene.

So according to Paul, the proper way to keep Sunday is to go walking, sailboat riding, to start off on long journeys.

Why, then, desire a law to tie up all the steamboats, railroads, and street-cars, and forbid even a buggy ride on Sunday?

But even if this meeting at Troas could be twisted into evidence that Paul and the disciples did break bread and worship all day long on this particular first day, would the simple fact of devoting one day to worship change the unchangeable law of God?

* The board of directors of the Washington Secular Union (all responsible gentlemen) will pay the sum of $20 in gold for even a piece of a text in the Old or New Testament that commands, teaches, or instructs us to keep Sunday as the Sabbath of the Lord. Apply to Mrs. Mary E. Boman, Boman avenue, Fremont, King county, Wash., treasurer Washington Secular Union.

If one meeting for religious purposes on any day made that day a Sabbath, then the day on which Paul and the disciples met most often for religious purposes must be the most holy day, and the Sabbath all Christians should keep.

We hav the positiv declaration that it was Paul's (Greek, eiothos) custom, usual practice, to attend worship at the Jewish synagog and preach on the Sabbath day. "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures" (Acts xvii, 2).

It was not customary for Paul to meet for religious services on the first day of the week. The meeting at Troas was an exceptional occasion, and Sunday-keepers are indeed hard driven for support of the pope's Sunday, when they offer the meeting at Troas as evidence.

Here is one of many texts proving that Paul faithfully observed the seventh day, the then only Sabbath: "After these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth; and found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla (because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome), and came unto them. And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them and wrought (for by their occupation they were tent-makers). And he reasoned in the synagog every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks" (Acts xviii, 1–3).

Here is a year and six months, seventy-eight observances of the Sabbath, against one religious meeting on Sunday.

Will Sunday-keepers dare pretend that Paul kept two days? If Sunday had become the Sabbath, and from the time of Christ's resurrection had been so observed by the Christians, how comes it that Paul knew nothing about it? The sojourn of Paul at Corinth is, in our reference Bibles, located in the year 54 A D, twenty years after Christ, yet it was Paul's custom to work all the week and preach every Sabbath, alike to Jews and Greeks.

LAY BY, IN STORE.

It is claimed that the church at Corinth always met on Sundays, and that Paul commanded them, and the church at Galatia, to take up collections for the poor saints at Jerusalem on the first day. And that no such instructions could hav been given unless Sunday was the day of worship.

Just such unquestioned declarations hav led us into error in the past; let us now insist on facts.

"Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I hav given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye! Upon the first day of the week let everyone of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Cor. xvi, 1, 2).

Could any person be said to "lay by him in store," if he dropped his contribution into the deacon's plate?

But the text itself contains requirements impossible for a person to comply with at a public place of worship.

The amount each shall "lay by him in store" is to be carefully calculated, it is to be in proportion as God hath prospered him; to ascertain which, it would be necessary to examin books and accounts, ascertain the amount of stock on hand, and present prices. Women would hav to count the eggs, count the young chickens and turkeys, weigh the butter, etc.

Each one would hav to look up newspapers and find quotations of prices, cipher out profit and loss; how else could they tell just "how God had prospered them?"

Would such work be fitting occupation for the Sabbath? Every Christian would answer, No; but after the worship of God, on his own appointed rest-day, before resuming worldly avocations, while the heart was attuned to praise and gratitude to God, the apostle desires they should on the going down of the sun commence the new week by laying by in store as God hath prospered them, to advance the cause of Christ.

So far from teaching that the first day had become, or ever was to be, observed as the Sabbath, this text givs absolute proof to the contrary, for the apostle givs orders to the churches to perform work that would be a gross violation of the Sabbath.

THE LORD'S DAY.

Sunday-keeping ministers positivly declare:

That, we cannot tell which is the seventh day because time has been lost.

That, to do any work between the hours of 12 o'clock, Saturday night, and 12 o'clock Sunday night, is a grievous sin against God.

That we cannot possibly keep the exact seventh day, because the world is round.

That, Sunday has taken the place of the old Jewish Sabbath (Saturday), which was to be observed to commemorate the creation; we are now under the new and better dispensation, and are required to keep Sunday, the first day, to commemorate the far greater work of the resurrection. And there ought to be a law compelling all persons to keep Sunday sacredly.

That, it does not matter what day we keep so long as we keep one seventh part of the time, for the New Testament says, "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike, let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day to the Lord he doth not regard it" (Rom. xiv, 5, 6).

That, to do any worldly work or business on Sunday is a violation of God's holy law, calling for his terrible vengeance.

That, to violate the Fourth Commandment, is a grievous sin, the entry-way to every vice and crime.

And finally, as a clinching argument, they declare, "We are bound to keep Sunday now, instead of the old Jewish Sabbath of the Fourth Commandment, because the Lord in the New Testament givs us a definit and positiv dây to keep, namely 'the Lord's day,' the day which the beloved disciple John observed while on the isle of Patmos;" and they quote Rev. i, 10: "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day." (Read the whole text and the context.) Now, honest! is there a shadow of reason given in that text or that chapter for changing the Sabbath to Sunday?

Yet we are willing to rest the whole question on this one text, and take the Sunday-keepers' own interpretation of it.

They claim that there is one day of the week that all Bible-believers must keep as the Sabbath.

That the "Lord's day" is the only Sabbath we are under obligation to keep.

That there is one day, termed by the beloved apostle John "the Lord's day," on which all Bible-believers must absolutely abstain from all worldly work and avocations, and regard as holy and sacred to the Lord.

The one question then is: What day is the Lord's day? In so important a question we will accept no "say-so" of prophet, priest, or king. The words of God, and the words of Christ alone, shall decide.

What day is the Lord's day?

Let the Bible God answer from amidst the thunder of Mount Sinai, "God spake all these words. The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God" (Ex. xx).

"Oh! but that was under the old law; we are no longer under the old law of the father, but under the new and better law of the son, our Lord Jesus Christ. It is his day we must keep."

What day is the Lord's day?

Let Christ himself make answer, "Therefore the son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath" (Mark ii, 28)

Jesus emphatically declares that the day he is the Lord of is the Sabbath day. Hear ye him!

But what day is the Sabbath day according to Mark? "And when the Sabbath was passed, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning, the first day in the week, they came unto the sepulcher at the rising of the sun" (Mark xvi, 1, 2).

Jesus declares the day preceding the first day of the week is the Lord's day.

Do you realize, dear reader, the—perhaps unintentional—yet gross wrong you hav sanctioned by seeking to enforce on others the religious observance of a day that is not alone not commanded by the Bible, by God, by Christ, or by the apostles, but is contrary to their express and most positiv commands?

Suppose Mohammedans were in power and compelled you to observe Friday, would you not regard it as a gross violation of your religious liberty?

Sunday-keeper, if the Seventh Day Adventists, the Seventh Day Baptists, and the Jews (who all observe the Sabbath that God and Christ alike commanded to be kept), should attain the majority and enforce observance of the Sabbath day (Saturday), do you not realize what a gross injustice it would be to all Catholics? They honestly believe that their church had the power and authority to change the day. What a violation of their religious belief, and of your pet tradition and prejudice, it would be to compel all to keep the Bible Sabbath.

Would it be any worse, nay, as bad, as to compel them to keep Sunday?

Christian reader, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets" (Matt. vii, 12).

Why not practice as well as preach the Golden Rule?

Ask your minister for the "thus saith the Lord" for Sunday-keeping; take no evasion; insist on the plain text, tell him just one will be all-sufficient. But if he cannot produce even one text that commands it, how dare he teach it? Read to him Matt. v, 19

HISTORICAL EVIDENCE—HOW SABBATH WAS CHANGED TO SUNDAY.

Startling admissions from Sunday observers.

"Admissions in favor of truth from the ranks of its enemies constitute the highest kind of evidence" (Pres. Asa Mahan).

We hav given proof that there is no authority in the Bible for the change from the seventh day, which the Bible declares is the Sabbath of God, of Christ, of the disciples, of the early Christians, to Sunday, or the first day of the week.

But how about the historical evidence?

We will quote a few only of the many admissions made by the most highly esteemed Sunday-keeping church historians and authorities.

All admit that for nigh three hundred years after Christ the seventh day, Saturday, was sacredly observed by all Christians as the Sabbath.

Morer, one of the most distinguished historians of the Church of England, declares: "It is not to be denied but we borrow the name of this day [Sunday] from the ancient Greeks and Romans, and we allow that the old Egyptians worshiped the sun, and as a standing memorial of their veneration dedicated this day to him" (Morer's Dialogs on the Lord's Day, p. 22).

"The primitiv Christians had a great veneration for the Sabbath and spent the day in devotions and sermons, and it is not to be doubted but they derived this practice from the apostles themselvs" (Ibid., p. 189).

"The Lord's day [Sunday] had no command that it should be sanctified, but it was left to God's people to pitch on this or that day for the public worship, and being taken up and made a day of meeting for religious exercises, yet for three hundred years there was no law to bind them to it" (Ibid., p. 233).

Lyman Coleman says: "The last day of the week was strictly kept in connection with that of the first day for a long time after the overthrow of the temple and its worship. Down even to the fifth century the observance of the Jewish Sabbath was continued in the Christian church, but with a vigor and solemnity gradually diminishing until it was wholly discontinued" (Ancient Christianity Exemplified, chap. xxvi, sec. 2).

Bishop Jeremy Taylor, a decided opponent of the seventh-day Sabbath, admits: "The Lord's day did not succeed in the place of the Sabbath, but the Sabbath was wholly abrogated and the Lord's day was merely an ecclesiastical institution. It was not introduced by virtue of the Fourth commandment, because they for almost three hundred years together kept that day which was in that commandment" (Doct. Dubitantium, part I, book 2, chap. ii, sec. 51).

"The primitiv Christians did all manner of works upon the Lord's day, even in the time of persecution, when they were strictest observers of all divine commands, but in this they knew there was none, and therefore when Constantine, the emperor, had made an edict against working upon the Lord's day, yet he excepts and still permitted all agriculture or labors of the husbandman whatsoever" (Ibid., sec. 59).

Edward Brerewood, professor of Gresham College, London, England: "The name of the Sabbath remained appropriated to the old Sabbath, and was never attributed to the Lord's day, not for many hundred years after our savior's time" (Treatis of the Sabbath, p. 77, edition 1631). C. B. REYNOLDS.

FROM all you hav written, O Lord, there is not much to be learned in regard to you. When I complain to the devout that I know little or nothing about you, they assure me that you are not to be found by study; that they know you "within" them. From this I learn that God is not an affair of the brain, but an affair of the intestins. I might possibly hav you "within" me by groveling away and praying till I became imbecil; but I hav watched the saints who aver that they hav you "within" them, and I feel constrained to say that I do not admire them. I hav found that a saint is, as a rule, a swindler. Piety and pilfering go well together, and the praying sneaks of your pulpits and pews are the very last persons that an honest man should leave with his wife or daughter or purse. Therefore, O Lord, I do not want to hav you "within" me "bearing witness," as your saints sanctimoniously snivel it.—Saladin.

Letters to Workingmen.

I hav dwelt somewhat upon liberty as a principle. I am well aware of the difficulty of grasping the idea. What tends the most to obscure it is the seeming simplicity with which it is regarded. Everybody desires it, loves it, glorifies it. Like a commodity, it is sought for and fought for, but the idea is only to obtain it, never to grant it. Reformers who hav inscribed it upon their banners and told its praises in song and story dare not trust it as a general principle. It is only their liberty that is so precious. It is their rights to new ways of thought and fields of action they are demanding. Hence all reforms are merely steps toward liberty. From asserting the right ourselvs we shall be led in time, I trust, to grant it to others. Experience is slowly teaching us that the good enjoyed is enhanced by sharing it with others.

> For others' follies teach us not,
> Nor much their wisdom teaches;
> The most of sterling worth is what
> Our own experience preaches.

And this is the text of the sermon, "The happiness of one demands the happiness of all." But, reared as we are under institutions of restriction and inheriting the belief of our fathers that the nature of man is prone to evil, we hesitate to trust that principle in others which we believe is essential to our own happiness. Whose experience does not prove that right action is more easy and certain under liberty than under restriction? Indeed, is it not possible that we may affirm that right action alone springs from liberty, even as wrong action springs from restriction? But was not perfect liberty the condition of our savage ancestry, from which we hav slowly emerged? Yes, but liberty in absolute ignorance is a very different thing from liberty under intelligence. We began in liberty; dawning intelligence took it away, a more perfect intelligence will restore it. But is not a restrictiv institution necessary with the vast amount of ignorance in the world? I most decidedly answer, No! And, what is more, I believe that every intelligent man who will admit that government is a necessary evil will be convinced if he studies the question in unbiased fairness that the time has arrived—if it was ever absent—that all restrictiv government and written laws might be done away with and the world be a better place to liv in. Intelligence has always ruled the world and always will, but intelligence is progressiv and its methods are changing. As arbitration may do away with wars, coöperation may dispense with government. Government is a necessity simply because intelligence has not substituted a better plan. That it is a necessity of itself I deny. Coöperativ association on a voluntary basis for protection and defense may be necessary, but this would in no wise militate against the principle of liberty, but would, on the contrary, enable us to giv it a fair trial. The "necessary evil" of government is the invasion of the citizen, which would be entirely absent in the voluntary protectiv association. But to abolish government and the laws, would it not make confusion worse confounded? Undoubtedly any sudden change would be disastrous, for the reason that it could not be brought about except by the employment of force, which would destroy the condition of liberty and would at best result only in that anarchy which must be succeeded by a new set of masters.

Liberty cannot be established by force of arms. The force of intellect is all that liberty admits of, and this will be followed by no reaction. Institutions should never be abolished, but allowed to die for want of support.

Nobody wants to be governed; it is always for the other fellow that governments are instituted. I believe many institutions are unnecessary and altogether harmful in their effect. Yet I would abolish none of them. Their existence implies that many people want them, and as I want no man to deprive me of what I believe necessary to my happiness I would not (supposing I had the power) deprive them. And yet, believing that nobody wants government for themselvs, and that human happiness depends upon the principle of liberty, I shall endeavor—in my weak way—to impress its truth upon my fellow-beings.

It is a thankless task, I know, to work for others' happiness, but this I never do. It is my own happiness I am after every time. I dare say that some who read these letters (and it pleases me to think they are read) lay aside the paper thinking the subject not worth the ink wasted in its production; while others may insist that such articles are evil in their tendency, and criticise the Editor for giving them room. To such I would say, the Editor is in no wise responsible for the theories I advocate, and if he givs me space it is because he would generously place before his readers the various views of his various correspondents. For myself I thank him, and to those who would exclude my theory I would say as Isabella said to Angelo:

> Go to your bosom,
> Knock there, and ask your heart what it doth know
> That's like my brother's fault.

Why do you oppose ecclesiasticism? Is it not because of the institution and the power it derives from its own organization or from secular government, which power you regard as an evil? Why should we quarrel? Whatever evil you may predict from my theory, was predicted from your theory. If you think the tendency of my thoughts dangerous, your thoughts hav been equally held so. I tell you, friend Liberals, we are in the same boat, or rather in the same water. We are bound for the same harbor, human happiness. We are fighting the same foe, superstition. You see it in the church; I see it in the state also. I believe the idea of government is a superstition. These men we annually elect to fill offices will tell you that they are not government, they are merely agents—or, if it be just before election, servants; that you, as a "sovereign elector," more nearly represent government. This may inflate your vanity, but it hardly settles the question. If mistakes are made the "agents" are blamed. If evil is wrought we denounce the politician. Nobody thinks of denouncing government. Turn to theology. It was Eve that "brought death into the world and all our woe." "The earth was cursed for man's sake." "In Adam's fall, we sinned all." "But God is good, great is Ali." "Canst thou by searching find out God?" Just about as easily as you can find out government. You may run across priests and politicians, Bibles and lawbooks, but government and God are alike invisible. I tell you, friends, the sovereignty of the state is nothing but a rehabilitation of the God idea, and many of us Liberals hav transferred our fealty from the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to the God of Tom, Dick, and Harry of politics. As the priest personifies God, the politician personifies the state. If we reject the authority of God, by what logic must we bow to the dictates of government? It is urged that government is for man's good here and now, but the same is contended of God and religion. Friends, I deny the claims of both. I claim that both were organized and still remain in the interests of a class, to obtain, protect, and perpetuate their wealth and power, and all the "good to man" derived by "us the people" is the glory of servitude. We may carry the flags and torches, do the marching and the cheering, the voting and the hooting, we may break each other's heads in party interest, and then go home and foot the bills.

Of course it makes no difference which party is elected, the country is always saved. Lawyers are on all tickets. They make the laws; they administer the justice, and hav arranged the thing most admirably for their clients, the wealthy class. By their cunning system of taxation, they shift the burden of government on the shoulders of the poor. By their system of usury the wealth of their clients increases like the widow's cruse of oil, while that which creates all wealth, labor, is robbed of the fruits of its toil. I tell you, friends, those fallible men we elect to office, those politicians we are constantly calling bad names, are what constitutes government. The "state" is simply a superstition. The church gave birth to the state and the child inherits and seeks to perpetuate the qualities of its sire. But Ignorance sired the church, and while nature is reproducing the taint of blood and deformity of mind another child has sprung from the forehead of the god, and as Prometheus stole fire from heaven to serve mankind Intelligence shall wring from nature truth and giv to man the benefit of its utility.

Health.

The Westminster Confession of Faith declares that "the chief end of man is to glorify God and enjoy him forever." Common sense declares that it is to get out of this life all the pure enjoyments to be found in it. To accomplish this common sense and Freethought are indispensable. The means are essential to the end. Let us call to our aid the sound maxim that "he who begins aright is half done." However scarce common sense and sound honesty may be growing in our fast age, is there not sufficient left to recognize health as the foundation of all enjoyment? This fact is too self-evident to be ignored.

Here, then, is the right beginning of all human weal. Superstition may conjure pains into blessings, and Jesuitism whitewash falsehoods, but never can free, honest thought thus degrade. Sound civilians will ever declare "Let justice be done though the sky fall," and so will Freethinking scientists say of truth. Bad health demoralizes mind and body.

The higher plane of science and progress to which Freethinkers aspire, the enjoyments of life which they hav in view, demand their first attention to health. So to liv as to shatter the body, and with it the mind, is certainly to liv to no good purpose, to really make life not worth living, justifying suicide. On the contrary, to secure and perpetuate health is to make it more than worth living. Hence the science of health is, above all others, of the most importance.

But some may ask, Is there indeed such a science? Christians' credulity may question it, since they hav their Christ going about miraculously healing all manner of diseases. As miracle had to heal them, the inference was plain that it had to originate them. Prayer over the sick sanctions the same dogma, repudiating science. All this being kept out or expelled from the brains of Freethinkers, hygiene is recognized as a science no less than cause and effect. To look straight at facts, any and every one of the countless diseases among us is caused, the same as inebriety. Neither class comes by chance or miracle, nor can they thus be cured. The steadfast laws of nature must be violated to originate them and strictly followed to heal them. To remove the cause is to remove the effect.

All progressiv thinkers disregard fossilized conservatism. And yet, as habit is second nature counterfeited, too many may refuse to change their unhealthy modes of life. The idea is prevalent that to lay aside an unhygienic habit is at best an uncomfortable self-denial, like the Catholic penance. Under a superficial view this in a measure may be true. The tobacco and alcohol user will feel uneasy for a time on suddenly giving them up. In nature there are no instantaneous miracles. She never turns water into wine by a word or in a moment. But giv her time and the reasonable conditions and the happy issue is sure. So soon as a bad habit is discarded and a good one substituted the process of ceasing real troubles and gaining pure, lasting enjoyments begins, and like capital at compound interest its gain accelerates daily. Keeping this in mind, sustained by long experience, I hope that at least a few readers will be benefited by the following suggestions:

Pure air and water are indispensable to pure health. Any substances floating in either deteriorate the element. If minute particles cannot be wholly excluded, hav them as nearly so as possible in all we breathe and drink. Pure filtered cistern water and well-ventilated rooms night and day may be had.

2. The skin should be cleaned and the pores kept open no less than once in every twenty-four hours. No better time than on leaving the bed each morning.

3. Take all the exercise in out-door air which circumstances allow.

4. Food, whether fruit, vegetable, or flesh, must be pure to increase pure health. The stomach, being the workshop of the whole system, must hav good material to manufacture good nutriment. Bad material, or quantities too large or too small, are the chief sources of ill health. Fairly treat the stomach and it will fairly do its duty. Impose upon it and its condition diseases the whole system. The clean tongue and the sweet breath indicate the pure life, while the the contrary betray the foul and call at once for reformation. Imperfect as has been my life, its hopeful conformity to these and other reasonable rules has brought me to my seventy-ninth year, enabling me to say truly that life is more than worth living. Earning R. T. Trall's diploma, I hav relieved many sufferers, and still may more if applied to.

Impressible Psychology.

"Mind is matter or nothing," remarked D. M. Bennett, an advanced thinker and a Spiritualist; but then it must be considered in a state of sublimation and attenuation almost inconceivable.

Our Dr. Franklin could not comprehend this science or he would not hav pronounced Mesmer a shameless fraud while giving his exhibitions in Paris (vide Franklin's life and letters published in Philadelphia). But we can afford to excuse the doctor now. It is doubtful if even Mesmer more than faintly understood this all-pervading occultism. But mesmerism is now the basis of all science in both hemispheres; apparently to make its study more inviting, the savans of Paris hav given it the name of "hypnotism."

For many years dating from 1849 "impressible psychology" received great attention throughout the Union through the lectures of Dr. Bovee Dodd. He hired a hall in the city of Washington and trusted to obtain sensitivs, or subjects for illustration, from among his audience. It so happened that the doctor obtained one in the redoubtable Sam Houston of Texas fame. This hero he so influenced or fascinated by fixing his gaze on his elevated finger and eye that Sam followed him out of the hall and around it—many of the audience following—and into the hall again, where he was safely released by the doctor. As Houston remembered nothing of what passed through himself, he felt fully repaid in laughing at the absurd doings of others.

Dr. Dodd found little difficulty after this remarkable event in Washington, in procuring an audience in any considerable inland city throughout the Union.

About this time a Dr. Benton gave us in Brooklyn a course of lectures on "Impressible Psychology," its queerness and curativ properties. He also selected subjects from the audience, ladies and gentlemen, who when under control were induced to say and do many absurd things, such as fishing with a broom-handle, boat-rowing, singing, exchanging wardrobes (the ladies wearing men's hats and men wearing ladies' fancy bonnets). Many invalids were brought upon the stage to be cured, and were cured by a few passes of the doctor's hands, and these before the eyes of the audience. The doctor only requested the patient to state to the audience the nature of his complaint. One man (a ship carpenter) said he had had the lockjaw for the last three days, during which time he had been unable to talk or take solid food.

In truth, the year 1850 was made memorable by Benton's lectures in Brooklyn on "Impressible Psychology." Being intimate with the lecturer, the writer studied closely his modus operandi in obtaining control of his subjects. On trial he was surprised to find himself also a successful operator; and hence became highly interested in this wonderful occultism. I ought briefly here to remark that he considers the knowledge of impressible psychology in the hands of men or women of unscrupulous principles exceedingly dangerous. MESMER.

The Communion Cup.

The inquiry of F. G. McCauley and an answer thereto by William Hart, regarding the wine cup used at communion services, and which were recently published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I read with interest. The same set me to investigating, and in my tour for knowledge I ran across the Monthly Sanitary Record, a small journal officially issued by the Ohio state board of health. Within its contents I found a striking and forcible allusion to the communion cup, which, in addition to what McCauley and Hart hav written, proves it a "root of evil" indeed. What this board has said regarding it has been said skilfully and well; in a way, in fact, which nicely and neatly slaps the church, her popes, her bishops, her preachers, and her priests. Their words verbatim are these:

We would, with due reverence for a most sacred custom, call attention to a possible source of danger connected with the communion services of Christian churches.

The cup which is passed without cleaning from lip to lip may easily be the means of conveying the germs of a contagious disease. It is a fact well known to physicians that adults may suffer with diptheria unknown to themselvs, the symptoms being only such as appear in an ordinary sore throat; and this is recognized as a not infrequent cause of the disease being communicated to unsuspecting persons, especially to children by kissing them. During the prevalence of diptheria in a large community—and our large cities are seldom, if ever, free from it—we cannot be too careful in guarding all avenues of contagion; and passing the cup among three or four hundred people at such a time is undoubtedly attended with danger. A slight abrasion or fissure of the mucous membrane of the lips offers a favorable site for the inoculation of any poison left clinging to the cup, and other diseases than diptheria might possibly be conveyed in this manner. The danger of contagion in connection with the communion service would appear to be greater than the well-recognized danger connected with all public drinking cups; for in the latter case the cup is well rinsed before being used by the second person, and the water drunk has not been in contact with the mouth of another, as in the case with the wine in the communion cup. Furthermore, all thinking persons are extremely cautious about using a public cup, from an esthetic point of view, if from no other.

How can we avoid this danger, not an imaginary one, which is unavoidably associated with the communion service, as now administered? It will doubtless be no easy matter to change in any particular a custom which has so long prevailed, and to which so many sacred memories are attached. Several plans suggest themselvs, but we prefer to leave this to the pastors and members of the churches. We cannot believe that there would be any irreverence in modifying a custom which might possibly endanger the life or health of one of God's creatures.

Thus Ohio's health board has spoken. Perhaps their language is not as broad as I or others would hav used, yet it is broad enough to sound the keynote of reform. Let every health board in every state so speak, and contagion of disease and taste for liquor will cease to be encouraged and revived before the altar's railing. WILL S. ANDRES.

Recent Gems From the Religious Press.

The Illustrated Catholic American, in speaking of the social question in France and a pamphlet of the count de Mun, says:

The count points out that the church alone can solve the social question and the issues between capital and labor.

Of course the church can solve the question. It has solved it. It advises the men to take what capital will giv them and, after setting apart a goodly proportion for the church, why, thank God for the balance and be good citizens. Wonderful church! Excellent men!

The Central West (Presbyterian) says:

A childish and absurd custom is thus struck at by a secular paper: "Senator Allison was right in keeping his seat when the pastor of his church requested all who were in favor of closing the World's Fair on Sunday to rise. There is no reason why full-grown people should pay heed to idiotic appeals from the pulpit which are on a par with Sam Jones's famous call, 'Will all who want to go to hell please stand up.'"

Whether Senator Allison desired to rebuke this "clap-trap" custom of blatant evangelists and weak-brained pastors, or merely to indicate his preference for constitutional liberty, we cannot undertake to say, but we can affirm that in either case or both together the senator voiced in his non-action the view of all sensible, honest, liberty-loving people.

Sam Jones forgets that religion has already landed humanity in hell, and that there is absolutely no "going" about it. Foisting upon the ignorant and credulous in ages back a mythical non-existent master called a God, and under pretense of orders from him forging a chain which has bound mankind both mentally and physically for hundreds of years, which has scouted the voice of nature, which has maligned and blasphemed this life and this earth, which has inaugurated fraud and hypocrisy, injustice and all uncharitableness, thereby making of life a battle for bread, the brutishness of which the swine would blush to own, we do not see why we should wish to "go" to any better equipped hell than the one we see around us.

There is absolutely no shadow of natural justice in Christianity. It is founded upon "the secret counsel and good pleasure of God's will, who before the foundation of the world predestined some to heaven and some to hell." We merely mention this to show what a kind-hearted God almighty the present ruling modernized pagan God is.

The Evangelist says:

Before acting let the assembly take a long look ahead—the tide is just now setting very strongly against Professor Briggs. But soon it may turn.

Ah, there is the rub. If it should turn, then what? Why, the church would lose in members, influence, and power. This is Tammany politics, truth is not to be considered, principle is out of the question, expediency is the paltering word used by a church which claims for its author the same power which it alleges hurls the merciless cyclone and tumultuous seas whither it will. Do the cyclone and the raging sea smack anything of expediency? All within their destructiv wake go down to death.

Would not the church resemble its alleged originator more if it stood solidly on what it preaches as truth, let the consequences be what they may? "Take a hundred dollars and go West," Horace Greeley is reported to hav advised an impecunious young man. "But," replied the young man, "I havn't got the hundred dollars."

This is exactly the position of the church. Take the truth and stand by it, says an adviser. But, replies the revision trimmer, we havn't got the truth. We thought we had it once, but some one asked a question and it wriggled through our fingers and ran and hid its head.

All the same we shall work on the old lines and get along without it as we hav done in the past, as no doubt it wasn't the genuin article anyway. "To this complexion hav we come at last."

The Christian Union says:

There is much in the Episcopal church which commends it to public esteem. Its rich spiritual liturgy, the antique flavor of which no modern inventor is able to imitate, its appeal to the esthetic nature, etc.

Reverence for antiquity and antique flavors is a "fad" at whose behest reason has left her throne, progress has been impeded, error has been implanted, development has been arrested, advancing thought stifled at its birth, and the inertia of mind which follows the acceptance of completeness, thoroughly established. It is rank heresy to the present, and a vicious exemplar for the future. Let the dead past bury its dead issues, let its follies, its errors, and its superstitions die contemporaneously with their authors. We hav to do with the present, ours the task to interpret nature and bring forth from her storehouse the wherewithal to bless man and make him happy. Not from the weird, uncanny echoes of a Biblic past, but from the ever-living now, shall we obtain that priceless jewel, natural justice, which though trampled and torn beneath our feet can yet be rehabilitated and become the harbinger of human deliverance from the dominion of that bestial selfishness which has ever been our vice and curse.

The Examiner sounds a bugle blast of warning thus: "The trumpet already givs an uncertain sound in some parts of the Baptist hosts. Our strength in the past has been loyalty to the scriptures; our weakness in the future threatens to be denial of the authority of the scriptures."

What! Baptists too? Well, this is forging ahead with a vengeance, and in this same article the editor asks this astonishing question: "Shall we remain loyal to the word of God, or shall we pronounce it to be the word of man and unworthy of our allegiance?"

Saints and ministers of grace defend us! This from a Baptist paper and addressed to Baptist readers!

It is well for this editor that old Aunt Huldah Crane and Deacon Whiffles hav gone to "thar reward," or he would see the liveliest committee of two waltz into his sanctum, each bearing an orthodox club, that he ever saw this side of kingdom come. He can breathe free—he is safe. He is thoroughly orthodox, we know; let him ask some more questions on the same line; they may be the means of his thinking a thought or two for himself, and in that case something may drop.

There is nothing like being inquisitiv even if a man has been corked up in an orthodox bottle of Baptist water for years. In fact, if he once starts out making queries he is very liable to stumble up against the truth before he gets through, in which case the church would lose a member and the world gain an honest man.

Items of Foreign Freethought News.

The French Freethought Federation is now composed of one hundred and forty-five auxiliary societies, besides individual members.

Fernando Lozano, who is a regular contributor to our Spanish contemporary Las Dominicales, and writes under the name of Damofilo, has been elected member of the Spanish Cortes, or congress.

Mr. Erth, Schneeburg, Saxony, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment because he stated in a lecture that the miraculous conception and birth of Christ was an invention of the Christian church.

The German Freethought congress for this year is to be held May 30th, 31st, and June 1st in Mannheim. Professor Büchner, Dr. Specht, and Dr. Voelkel if he has not by that time begun serving his sentence, will deliver addresses.

Swedish bigots, fearing the ever-increasing influence of Freethought in Sweden, are trying to get the king to make the exceptions to the law regarding freedom of social and public gatherings apply to the Freethought associations.

Mrs. Heinrich-Wilhelmi, the German-American Freethought lecturer, has been sentenced by the city court of Halle to two months' imprisonment for blasphemy against God, the Christian church, the Jewish religion, the sacraments, and the clerical profession. Mrs. Wilhelmi must be a very wicked woman indeed to commit so many sins.

F. V. Thomson, of Malmö, a Freethinker and Socialist, has been indicted for blasphemy. Mr. Thomson while taking part in a local theatrical performance made fun of religious services and sacraments, by imitating the performances that a Lutheran minister goes through while preparing and giving Christ's body and blood as a lunch to the faithful.

The last bulletin of the Comité d'Etudes Morales contains a very good paper by Marie Deraimes, vice-president of the society, and president of the Parisian branch of the Society for Securing Woman's Rights. Among the new American members are Mr. Salter, president of the Society for Ethical Culture in Chicago; Paul Carus, Ph.D., editor of the Open Court and the Monist, and George Wilson, president of the Lafayette county bank, Lexington.

In Denmark persecutions of heretics hav begun anew. The editor of the Danish daily Köjbenhavn has been sentenced to two months' imprisonment for "blasphemy against God the father," and on the 28th of last month Mr. E. Brandes, editor of Börstidende, received the same sentence because he published in his paper an article by H. Pontoppidan which, according to the most Christian opinion of the minister of church and education, also contained blasphemy.

That our readers may know what they and their Christian friends and relativs will do when they get to heaven, we giv the following taken from the Swedish religious paper Stridsropet: "The Christians who do not work for God here on earth shall belong to the foot-soldiers in heaven. Those who work industriously will become horsemen and ride on white steeds. The rest [the wicked, we suppose] will hav to take care of the horses, and black the boots belonging to the horsemen."

April 28th Henry V. Berghell was liberated from his cell in Malmö jail, where he had been confined for three months, and ordered to leave the country. One account is that he went to Copenhagen. Another is that he went to Finland. But it does not matter what route he took, for he is probably now surrendered to the Russian police, who for three years hav longed to see him. He was obliged to leave Finland, as suspicion of his being a Nihilist had infected the imperial police. He will no doubt be sent to Siberia by "administrativ process"—that is, without trial. Mr. Berghell has our entire sympathy in his new affliction; we had hoped to see him here, as a late letter stated that he intended to emigrate to America.

Our London Letter.

The bishops of the Church of England are, as a rule, such very poor sticks that they would be utterly lost sight of and forgotten if it were not that, now and again, one of them, with a hankering after notoriety, and a desire to remind the public that there are such individuals existing, makes some outrageous statement which is likely to cause some discussion or notice in the papers. The late archbishop of York immortalized himself by stating that the "Sermon on the Mount" contained doctrins that could not possibly be put into general use, a truism no doubt, but scarcely orthodox. The bishop of Chester, while advocating publicly the use of the rod for children, had the audacity to say that brutality to children was a characteristic of Secularists, a most infamous and untrue statement. If professing Christians studied the care of the little ones half as much as Secularists do, we should hear much less of such shocking cruelty than we now do. I never remember reading a case of an Atheist being charged with the offense, but it is very common for believers to be. In fact, it is well known, and very distasteful to the Christian community, that there is much less crime of any description amongst unbelievers, and it would be well if their example were more generally followed; there would be a great reduction in taxation, soldiers, policemen, and magistrates would not be needed, and the loss of their several occupations would be so much gain to the state. Although Secularists are by no means perfect, yet I firmly believe they are better citizens than any other class of the community. Divesting one's self of the God idea naturally tends to make men more considerate to one another, and even if this is done for mere selfish ends, still the result is more satisfactory to all concerned.

The May meetings are now in full swing, and the usual touching appeals are being made to the soft-headed plutocrats who are willing to giv large donations for the purpose of allaying imaginary distress in distant countries, though they would not do anything in the way of mitigating the distress at their own doors. There is, I understand, much rejoicing at the falling off in funds, the ingenious Booth having pretty well bled the people with more money than sense, and still crying for more. He certainly is the most persistent and successful beggar of his time, and is the object of much envy on the part of others who are in the same line of business, but who cannot do so large and profitable a business.

The National Secular Society will hold its annual conference on Whit Sunday at Birmingham, and judging by the agents, there will be a good deal of business to be done. I see there is a notice of motions "that some steps should be taken with a view to accomplishing a closer intimacy between the National Secular Society and the Freethought organizations of the English colonies and the United States of America," which, if carried, should tend to a closer bond of union between Freethinkers all over the world. Under the supervision of the president the National Secular Society is likely to become a larger and more effectiv organization than it has ever been, as Mr. Foote goes thoroughly into the cause of Freethought, and evidently intends to leave no stone unturned to make it a far greater power than he found it. For the sake of the cause he so ably champions, it is to be hoped he will not take up with politics more than he does at present, as his time must soon be so fully occupied with his work that he will hav to take some of that to devote to political work, with the result that the National Secular Society will most probably hav to suffer. The Last Day of the People's Party Convention at Cincinnati.

From the Sun.

It was after 10 o'clock when the temporary chairman whacked his desk in the main hall with his iron hammer. The religious character of the gathering was made manifest by the frequent "amens" from the floor during the delivery of a long prayer by a Nebraska clergyman and the chorus of responses at the close. The Kansas Glee Club sang some more tunes set to Moody and Sankey music, and then the convention girded itself for the hot fight which everybody felt was upon them. They were feeling so good-natured that they went down into their pockets to make up a fund for Capt. C. O. Power, the man who called the convention and by his individual work got most of the delegates here.

Then the committee on credentials reported there were 1,418 accredited delegates present from 32 states. The apportionment of the delegates among the states exposes at a glance the unrepresentativ character of the whole convention. Here is the list by states:

Alabama, 2; California, 2; Connecticut, 1; Illinois, 88; Kentucky, 59; Louisiana, 2; Michigan, 11; Maine, 2; North Carolina, 1; Rhode Island, 1; West Virginia, 13; Pennsylvania, 8; Wisconsin, 21; Nebraska, 94; Washington, 4; District of Columbia, 6; Ohio, 317; Arkansas, 6; Florida, 2; Indiana, 154; Iowa, 32; Kansas, 411; Missouri, 73; Massachusetts, 8; New York, 8; North Dakota, 1; Texas, 26; South Carolina, 1; Tennessee, 6; Minnesota, 30; Oklahoma, 3; Wyoming, 4; Colorado, 3. Total delegates, 1,418.

There was a hot row following the announcement by the local chairman of the reception committee that a reception would be given at the Bellevue House this evening, and that the delegates were also invited to visit several factories where, among other things, they would be filled up.

A delegate named Groom, of Wisconsin, assumed, as did many others, that this meant an invitation to a brewery, which is in the line of business of the chairman of the entertainment committee, Mr. Burkhauser.

There was a tremendous hubbub for a few minutes, and it looked as though there would be violence between some of the struggling delegates. Finally a Kansas delegate explained that an invitation to a broom factory was meant, and he added: "If you want to get drunk on brooms you can go there."

The committee on permanent organization reported Senator Peffer, of Kansas, for president and W. S. Morgan, of Missouri, for secretary.

There was a long list of vice-presidents, etc. No sooner had the report been read than there was more trouble. Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, of Indiana, protested against the use of her name as a vice-president.

She said: "I am a sober Prohibitionist and a member of the national committee of the party. Until you repudiate liquor in every form I won't allow the use of my name."

Senator Peffer took the chair with a very short speech. "This gathering," he said, "is of more importance to the people of this country and to the entire world than any which has convened in this century. We are here to undermine and dispose of a power that is crushing the necks of the people of America and of the world."

A colored delegate from North Carolina was presented as the only negro delegate who had come with credentials and he had exhausted his resources to get there. An appeal was made to the house to raise enough money to send him home.

There was a lively scene in front of the platform for a few minutes while a perfect shower of coin poured in. The delighted darkey got money enough to send him to Europe if he wants to go.

The committee on rules made a report with a joker at the end of it, which the convention did not see at first. There was the usual provision for the taking of votes, etc., and then a rule provided for the choice of a national campaign committee, which, of course, carried with it a commitment to the new party idea. E. Gerry Brown, of Massachusetts, a member of the committee, finally explained that while the committee on resolutions had been struggling in vain all night with the new party problem the committee on rules had quietly brought the issue to the convention by recommending a national campaign committee. "Men know what that means," he declared, amid a great burst of enthusiasm. "If you don't want a new party you hav no use for a national committee." The question was put, and it was carried with a tremendous shout. The convention went wild. Men and women alike shouted till they could shout no longer, and thus, just as the noon bells rang, and almost unanimously, the convention declared in favor of abandoning the old parties and starting out under a new political banner. The convention took a recess to await the action of the platform committee.

After dinner Chairman Ignatius Donnelly made the report for the committee. He prefaced it by saying:

"The committee has concluded its labors with practical unanimity. On the question of organizing a new and distinct party in the United States this committee is a unit. [Great cheering.] The only difference of opinion has been over unimportant matters. The committee has performed a great work. Two alternativs were presented to it—one to proceed without regard to any previous movements in the same direction; the other was that we should not divide the friends of reform, that we should place this gathering in harmony with this vast movement of the people which is to find expression in February, 1892; that we should say to those who hav called that convention that we are heartily with them; that if there is any failure of that convention to place a national ticket in the field, the national committee of this convention should take steps toward that result. We apologize because we hav not been able to cover all the interests in the minds of men here to-day. I believe that a few planks in one invulnerable platform will avail more than to try to include many issues, some of them doubtful. The shorter our platform the longer will be our muster roll. When we hav taken possession of both houses of Congress and of the White House, as we shall do, then it will be time enough to decide on the details of legislation. [Great applause.] We are here not so much to proclaim a creed as to erect a banner under which the marching hosts of reform can rally. Therefore we proceeded to include the St. Louis platform of 1889 [cheers and the rebel yell], the Ocala platform of 1890, and the Omaha platform of the Northwestern Alliance of 1891." The platform was then read as follows:

Your committee on resolutions begs leave to submit the following:

1. That in view of the great social, industrial, and economical revolution now dawning upon the civilized world, and the new and living issues confronting the American people, we believe that the time has arrived for a crystallization of the political reform forces of our country and the formation of what should be known as the People's party of the United States of America.

2. That we most heartily indorse the demands of the platforms as adopted at St. Louis, Mo., in 1889; Ocala, Fla., in 1890, and Omaha, Neb., in 1891, by industrial organizations there represented, summarized as follows:

a—The right to make and issue money is a sovereign power to be maintained by the people for the common benefit; hence we demand the abolition of national banks as banks of issue, and as a substitute for national bank notes we demand that legal tender treasury notes be issued in sufficient volume to transact the business of the country on a cash basis, without damage or especial advantage to any class or calling, such notes to be legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and such notes, when demanded by the people, shall be loaned to them at not more than two per cent per annum upon non-perishable products, as indicated in the sub-treasury plan, and also upon real estate, with proper limitation upon the quantity of land and amount of money.

b—We demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

c—We demand the passage of laws prohibiting alien ownership of land, and that Congress take prompt action to devise some plan to obtain all lands now owned by alien and foreign syndicates, and that all land held by railroads and other corporations in excess of such as is actually used and needed by them be reclaimed by the government and held for actual settlers only.

d—Believing the doctrin of equal rights to all and special privilege to none, we demand that taxation, national, state, or municipal, shall not be used to build up one interest or class at the expense of another.

e—We demand that all revenues, national, state, or county, shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government, economically and honestly administered.

f—We demand a just and equitable system of graduated tax on income.

g—We demand the most rigid, honest, and just national control and supervision of the means of public communication and transportation, and if this control and supervision does not remove the abuses now existing, we demand the government ownership of such means of communication and transportation.

h—We demand the election of president, vice-president, and United States senators by a direct vote of the people.

3. That we urge united action of all progressiv organizations in attending the conference called for Feb. 22, 1892, by six of the leading reform organizations.

4. That a national central committee be appointed by this conference, to be composed of a chairman, to be elected by this body, and of three members from each state represented, to be named by each state delegation.

5. That this central committee shall represent this body, attend the national conference on Feb. 22, 1892, and, if possible, unite with that and all other reform organizations there assembled. If no satisfactory arrangement can be effected this committee shall call a national convention not later than June 1, 1892, for the purpose of nominating candidates for president and vice-president.

6. That the members of the central committee for each state where there is no independent political organization conduct an activ system of political agitation in their respectiv states.

The committee also reported distinct from the platform these resolutions:

Resolved, That the question of universal suffrage be recommended to the favorable consideration of the various states and territories.

Resolved, That while the party in power in 1869 pledged the faith of the nation to pay a debt in coin that had been contracted on a depreciated currency basis and payable in currency, thus adding nearly $1,000,000,000 to the burdens of the people, which meant gold for the bondholders and depreciated currency for the soldier; and holding that the men who imperiled their lives to save the life of a nation should hav been paid in money as good as that paid to the bondholder, we demand the issue of legal tender treasury notes in sufficient amount to make the pay of the soldiers equal to par with coin, or such other legislation as shall do equal and exact justice to the Union soldiers of this country.

Resolved, That as eight hours constitute a legal day's work for government employees in mechanical departments, we believe this principle should be further extended so as to apply to all corporations employing labor in the different states of the Union.

Resolved, That this conference condemns in unmeasured terms the action of the directors of the World's Columbian Exposition on May 19th in refusing the minimum of wages asked for by the labor organizations of Chicago.

Resolved, That the attorney-general of the United States should make immediate provision to submit the act of March 2, 1889, providing for the opening of Oklahoma to homestead settlement, to the United States Supreme Court, so that the expensiv and dilatory litigation now pending there be ended.

The meeting called for General Weaver, of Iowa, who made a significant speech. He said: "We hav reached a period for action. I thank God that after fifteen years of talk the time has come for us to make the fur fly from one end of the land to the other. I want to say that the battle for free institutions and the liberties of this people will be waged in 1892 between the candidates whom you name and those whom the cohorts of Wall street nominate. Now, the Republican party is practically out of the fight in 1892. They were left in a forlorn condition last November. The only part they can play next year is to act as the miners and sappers of the other party.

"Mind, now, what I say, Mr. Cleveland, when he wrote his anti-silver letter, did it deliberately, as I happen to know. He did it against the protests of many of his friends. It had this effect, to consolidate the money power in his support. The plutocracy in 1892–4 will make the battle under his leadership. They are playing a shrewd game. The great work to be done is that of organization and preparation."

Before taking a vote there was another great fuss over Prohibition. A California delegate moved to put in a plank condemning the liquor traffic.

The report of the committee on resolutions was then divided. The platform proper was adopted unanimously with a lot more enthusiasm, and the resolutions also submitted went through with practical unanimity.

Senator Peffer then yielded the chair to General Weaver, and the last hour was spent in making up the national campaign committee. Taubenek, of Illinois, one of the "big three," who stood out so long in the senatorial contest in the Illinois legislature, was made chairman of the national committee.

Another big mass meeting was held to-night at Music Hall, at which Ignatius Donnelly was the principal speaker. Some of the delegates went over to Covington to see the Alliance state convention run against Brown for governor.

The enthusiastic people who went crazy for two hours this afternoon are already talking about their candidate for president, and there is really quite a jealous feeling between the friends of Ignatius Donnelly and General Weaver, who want to see their leaders go to the White House in 1893.

The Episcopal Clerical Labor Market.

From the Recorder.

It has been said that when a new town is started in the Far West, when the prairie has been staked for miles into avenues, boulevards, and streets that are to be, the location of the city hall and the stately public buildings that are also to be hav been decided upon, and the whole duly transferred to paper for the benefit of the Eastern investor, the next concern of the enterprising citizens of the to-be city is to secure the establishment on a firm basis of a saloon, a faro-bank, and a church. These are, of course, necessary institutions, and are designed to attract all sorts and conditions of men to the embryo metropolis to boom it into prosperity. Probably Eastern people think this is a joke at the expense of the enterprising West, although few would doubt the faro-bank and saloon part of the story. But here is an advertisment, couched in the glowing, exuberant diction of the Western town-lot boomer, which recently appeared in the Churchman, the leading Episcopal newspaper in the United States, and the organ of the church in this city:

RECTOR WANTED for a Mission recently established at Oak Cliff, which is a beautiful suburb of Dallas, Tex., and contains now a population of 6,000, living in elegant residences. A reliable subscription list of $900 has just been made, to which some $200 or more is likely to be added at once. The Sunday-school is flourishing, and has already developed a large class for confirmation. An activ clergyman could soon raise the mission into a parish, as the population is likely to be doubled within a year or so, and by a similar class of residents. The people there and at Dallas are cosmopolitan, many being from the North and West. Address, etc.

This paper publishes every week a column of advertisments of clerical situations wanted and vacant, of rectors and curates wanted, and clergymen of different degrees wanting employment. The advertisments often afford very interesting reading in themselvs, while their existence in such numbers is a fact full of suggestion. It is not generally supposed that clergymen are subject to the same conditions in the struggle to obtain the means of subsistence that ordinary workers in other walks of life are; that there is a clerical labor market, and that the employment of ministers of the gospel is subject to fluctuations of supply and demand as is that of the ordinary artisan or professional man. There is something peculiar about the calling of a clergyman —supposed to be essentially a "calling"—and the idea seems incongruous. Yet such is the case with respect to some denominations, and particularly the Episcopalian. It is unfortunately a fact, too, that the supply is usually very much in excess of the demand. Here are some advertisments from the Churchman:

A CLERGYMAN IN DEACON'S ORDERS desires work in city or country; sound churchman, unmarried, young, good worker, musical.

ASSISTANT PRIEST, unmarried, in city parish; salary, $800 per annum; applicant must be competent to superintend large Sunday-school, and to undertake arduous work.

A YOUNG PRIEST desires a parish; churchman, medium; salary good. Address "B."

WANTED—A rector for a parish in New York state, diocese of Albany; guaranteed income, $800 per annum.

THE RECTOR of a flourishing parish in a Western diocese desires a parish in the East, one on the Atlantic coast preferred; good reader and preacher, and ready extemporaneous speaker; the very best of references: sound prayerbook churchman.

Some interesting contrasts are often afforded. A clergyman is wanted "to take charge of a mission in the tenement region. Must possess the power of continuous hard work. Salary, if married, $1,800." The advertisment immediately following says there is "Wanted, a rector, in May next, for a parish on the hills in Western New England. Situation high, summers cool. Work light—one service Sunday. Resident lay reader. Rectory, with stable and good garden." Here is food for reflection. Contrast the position of the clergyman at "continuous hard work" in the wretched, dirty, health-destroying tenement region during the sweltering days of summer with that of his brother laborer in the Master's vineyard up among the New England hills where the summers are cool, with but one service on Sunday and the delights suggested by "a stable and good garden." The balancing compensation in making choice between the two must be in the sweet satisfaction of duty well done, and more so in the self-sacrificing love of humanity that makes a privilege of toil and a paradise of a region worse than the desert.

The qualifications possessed or desired are fully stated in the advertisments. One advertiser says he is a "sound prayer-book churchman," another is a "medium churchman," while another holds "moderate views." For a parish in a poor city district a clergyman of "moderate views and a popular speaker" is wanted. The salaries offered range from $800 to $1,800 a year.

The Methodist church provides pastorates or other clerical situations for all the clergymen in its fold, and the churches are compelled to take whatever minister the bishops appoint. In the Episcopal church the student learns the business and must then take his chance of obtaining a job. When a vacancy occurs in a parish the bishop of the diocese is usually asked to supply a minister, but the church is not bound to accept whatever is offered. The vestry makes the selection and very often advertises its wants, carefully examining references and applicants until it secures the right man. There are two degrees of clergymen—deacons and priests. The former are only qualified to hold certain positions in the ministry, so that all positions advertised are not open to all clergymen.

The condition of the Episcopal clerical labor market is at present far from bright and is generally unsatisfactory. The market is sadly overcrowded. A short time ago the Churchman said editorially that "the extraordinary number of 662 out of 4,163, or something over 15 per cent of the whole number of the clergy, do not appear to be engaged in any sort of regular clerical work." It further stated that "in the three months ending Dec. 1, 1890, 401 clergymen of the church of the United States, or very nearly 10 per cent of the whole number, changed their post-office address. This means more than the existence of an unemployed clergy; it means the existence of a migratory clergy—a clergy migratory, not of purpose, like the Methodist itinerancy, for the church professes to believe in settled ministries; nor migratory from choice, as many a heartbreak goes to prove, but migratory because nothing but continual migration at the rate of 20 per cent is possible." Only recently, too, the archbishop of New York wrote publicly in the Churchman warning the unemployed clergy that he could find places for none of them here. He said he was impelled to this by sorrowful considerations of the false hopes he was continually compelled to disappoint.

A great number of regularly ordained clergymen find employment as private tutors, as teachers in private schools, and in a variety of callings in some way akin to their own. All the leading book publishers in this city hav the names of fifteen or twenty or more clergymen on their list of canvassers, and these men find occasional employment in pushing the sales of religious and educational books. There is no guarantee of permanency of employment to the clergymen, and it frequently happens that when a man has grown old and worn in the service of the church he finds himself without a situation and without resources. There is a fund for aged and indigent ministers, but it is not a pleasant prop to lean on. There is a saying among the clergy that "the dead line is passed at fifty years of age," a recognition of the fact that very often a clergyman must look to other chances for support than the work he has spent his life in. The Churchman has even suggested that it would be a good idea for clergymen to learn some other profession. It rather ambiguously adds, "or some honest handicraft," which leaves room for several inferences as to its meaning.

Not only is the supply of nativ talent far in excess of the demand, but the clergy hav also to compete with cheap foreign labor imported into the country. This is a novel side of the immigration question. The clergymen complain, and do it in print, that Bishop Talbot, when he wants to find missionaries for his jurisdictions of Idaho and Wyoming, does not seek them among the clergy of the American church, but imports scripture readers from Ireland. They want to know what it means.

One thing the entire showing proves. It is that the field of ministerial effort is crowded. It throws a strange light on the "calling" of a minister, and would seem to mean that what many clergymen took for a "call" was really some other noise. It would also seem to point to the advisability of an earnest young man's curbing his impatience to enter the church until he hears an unmistakable call to undertake the work.

The Noble Red Man in Mendocino County, Cal.

George Macdonald in Freethought.

To return to Ukiah, the features most likely to attract the attention of the stranger are those of the Indians and squaws who loaf about the corners of the streets. The Indian is a delinquent subscriber to the civilization of the present day. Poco tiempo, which means time enough, or by and by, or some other day, is a good enough motto for him. He don't enjoy work; he is tired before he begins, and the great powers of endurance which historians ascribe to him are shown most in his ability to do nothing for a long time without getting enough of it. A few days of labor makes life a burden to him, and he demands and takes a "big rest." The Indian has no trouble with the trades unions. The state tramp law specially exempts him from its operation. One Chinaman in fair health will outwork a large tribe of these aborigines, and for that reason the red man cherishes a deep animosity toward the "no good Indian," as he calls his Asiatic brother. The Indian takes readily to whisky, gambling, and the Roman Catholic religion. He is somewhat vain, and when he gets a little money he spends the heft of it for personal adornment. His next investment is firewater. Then he falls to gambling and plays until he has lost the last article of wearing apparel he can use for an ante and has nothing left but his jag. The women, or mahalas, are competent beggars, and may be seen in the early morning hours beating about town for a breakfast. Their reputation for unchastity is good. They do some washing for white people, though I understand they hav not much use for it themselvs. About the rancheries the men and women lie upon their faces in the sun or play a rubber—perhaps an Indian rubber—at cards with the ground for a table. The Catholic church has caught on to the poor red man, and a white cross surmounts one of the wickyups at the little rancherie in Ukiah. A sister from the local convent conducts a kind of parochial school here, drawing pay therefor from the general government. The medicin man of the tribe is Squealing Charlie, who makes money enough at his voodoo practice to keep himself at a comfortable stage of intoxication a large part of the time. Occasionally some rebellious subject chops him into a state of insensibility with a hatchet, and he has to be carried to the white man's hospital for treatment. Not long ago he was so cut up in this manner that the doctors needed a sewing machine, almost, to repair the rents in him. Barring these incidents, the life of Squealing Charlie is easy if not luxurious.

The nomadic and renegade Indians travel back and forth between the Ukiah rancheries and the Round Valley reservation, eighty or ninety miles distant. When they want liberty they go to Ukiah; for rations they go back to Round Valley. The Catholic teachers, who conduct schools at each end of the route, count their copper-colored pupils at both places, and get a per capita appropriation for socking them full of catechism. Some of the more advanced pupils are able to tell what is the chief end of man, but it is said that over their moral natures the church has less influence than the jail.

Brotherhood of Moralists.

Report of the Propaganda Committee of the Brotherhood of Moralists, at Hannibal, Mo., for the month ending May 10, 1891.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

Owing to the illness of the secretary and a delay in printing constitutions the enrolment this month falls below the average.

Nine membership certificates hav been issued. The new members are from Illinois, California, Wisconsin, New York, and Iowa. The total enrolment is 1422. We are under obligations to Brother M. H. Cone, of Kansas, and Sister Ella E. Gibson, editor of the Moralist, for Liberal papers. We hav received many encouraging letters, and the outlook is favorable, notwithstanding the opposition of certain bigoted Liberals who imagin that those who do not believe as they believe hav no right to organize. The Unsubstantial Basis of Christianity.

Referring to the statements regarding the anonymity and consequent historical worthlessness of the gospels, a correspondent desires fuller information than we could giv in the article on the alleged resurrection of Jesus. We hav been over this ground a great many times, but are not unwilling to again traverse it, for the reason that when it is fully comprehended and its logical significance understood and admitted Rationalism need go no further for evidence that the Christian religious scheme is wholly untrue.

And if, then, the miracles are false; if Jesus was not born of a divine father; if he was no more than a man, dying as any other convicted man dies, and remaining dead so far as any earthly person knows —if these things are so, then there is no so-called "salvation," and the preaching of all the preachers is vain. And that these things are not so—providing of course that Jesus ever lived—is only evidenced by the gospels. Destroy the evidence of the gospels and you destroy the whole scheme. This has indeed been done, not by Infidels but by Christians, and yet so fatuous is the blind faith of the people, so deep their ignorance of this thing, and so powerful the business interests of the leaders of the church, that few know it, and still fewer comprehend its far-reaching meaning. Notwithstanding that the entire Rationalistic theological scholarship of Germany—which includes a large proportion of the scholarship of the country—and the Liberal Christian scholarship of England, France, and the United States, hav united in pronouncing upon its anonymity and consequent historical worthlessness—as well as inherent untruthfulness—the vastly greater part of the church-going and non-church-going people still imagin that the Bible is what their little Methodist or Congregational or Presbyterian ministers say it is. They think that Paul wrote fourteen of the epistles of the New Testament; that Matthew wrote the gospel bearing his name; that Mark wrote his; that Luke wrote his as well as the Acts; that John wrote five books, Peter two, and James and Jude one each. They imagin that these books were all written within a few years after the death of Christ, and that they were received as authentic in the apostolic age, and hav ever since been so received by the church. They imagin that the writers agree in fact and theory and doctrin; that Paul corroborates Christ, and that Christ prophesied what Paul should teach.

Yet there is, after all these centuries of false belief, and church councils, and voting on books, and making confessions of faith, and dogmatizing upon the subject, not a word of truth in it. The errors consist in: 1 The ascribed authorship; 2. The date of writing; 3. The reception of the manuscripts in apostolic times; 4. Their recognition and reception by the Christian church; 5. Their harmony and concurrence of view of Christ; 6. In the unity of doctrin taught by Peter and Paul and by Christ himself, as recorded in the apostolical epistles and the gospels.

1. To begin with the Pauline documents. It is now admitted by competent scholars that a portion of Paul's epistles are fraudulent. Dr. Davidson, a Protestant of great learning and high repute, givs up Paul's epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians, and declares also that the epistle to Titus, and the first and second epistles to Timothy, were not written by Paul. Drs. Oort, Hooykaas, and Kuenen say that these two letters to Timothy and the one to Titus "were certainly composed long after the death of Paul." And to the fraudulent Pauline epistles they add at once, and certainly, "that to the Hebrews, which does not bear his name at all, and, therefore, does not even profess to hav come from his hand." These distinguished theologians agree with Dr. Davidson in doubting the genuinness of the letters to the Ephesians and Colossians, and cast the same suspicion "perhaps on the first, but certainly on the second, of the epistles to the Thessalonians." Further, Professor Davidson inclines to agree with Professors Evanson and Bauer, who question the genuinness of Romans; and Professor Bauer doubts also that Paul wrote 1 and 2 Corinthians and Galatians. Dr. Westcott is one with the three German professors in excluding the epistle to the Hebrews, and Kitto's Cyclopedia says that while it appears as part of the canonical scriptures, and as the work of Paul, "for neither of these assumptions is the evidence allowed on all hands to be conclusiv." In Marcion's compilation of the gospels, A.D 145, he left out the two epistles to Timothy, the one to Titus, and the one to the Hebrews. Giving all this evidence its due weight, therefore, it may be considered certain that only ten of Paul's epistles are genuin, with a doubt of six others, one of which (2 Thessalonians) these eminent Protestant biblical scholars pronounce undoubtedly spurious. Some German critics hold that only four of Paul's "documents" can be safely accepted as genuin. At the most, however, he can only be given credit for ten; and Paul, bear in mind, is the best—in fact, almost the only—authenticated writer of scriptures.

As to Matthew, the probability is that the gospel according to Matthew was the gospel according to the Hebrews with Matthew's name forged to it. Papias (A.D. 150) spoke of the Hebrew gospels, and Epiphanius and Jerome (A D. 403 and 420) say it was the same. Dr. Davidson pronounces with certainty and emphasis against Matthew's authorship of it. Drs. Oort, Hooykaas, and Kuenen say that Matthew did not write the book of Matthew, and that it is of more recent date than their headings would lead us to suppose. That Matthew wrote the historical part of the book is also denied by nearly all the German critics, who will only allow that he may hav written down some of the sayings of Jesus, which were afterward made the basis for a historical narrativ by a Greek translator. Schleiermacher, Schneckenberger, Lachmann, and others are cited in Kitto as holding this opinion. The critics all agree that Matthew never wrote the gospel that we hav bearing his name.

Neither do we know the author of the gospel of Mark. In his "Introduction to the New Testament," Professor Davidson announces this as an indisputable fact. He is supported in this opinion by the authors of "The Bible for Learners," Drs. Oort, Hooykaas, Kuenen; by Credner, Westcott, Strauss, and others. In Eusebius's "Ecclesiastical History" there is a paragraph which says that Papias says that John the Presbyter says that Mark was the secretary of Peter. According to this, Peter told Mark what Jesus said, and Mark wrote it down, making his gospel. The only testimony to the authenticity of Mark we hav, therefore, is that Eusebius said that Papias said that John the Presbyter said that Mark wrote down what Peter said that Jesus said. And Kitto's Cyclopedia, which is, perhaps, the ablest special pleader for the New Testament the Christians hav, acknowledges, on the strength of the passage in Eusebius, that Mark did his work disjointedly and incompletely. This is all the authority we hav for Mark, and the enlightened common sense of the world, since it became acquainted with Eusebius and his brethren of the church, has decided it to be insufficient.

And poor Dr. Luke is a myth also. He wrote neither the gospel which bears his name, nor the Acts of the Apostles, which is ascribed to him. The same mass of critical testimony against Matthew and Mark is a unit against Luke. And we may as well include the gospel of John in this, for of the Johannine authorship of that gospel Davidson says: It "has receded before the tide of modern criticism; and though this tide is arbitrary at times, it is here irresistible. No certain trace of existence of the fourth gospel can be found till after Justin Martyr, i.e., till after the middle of the second century." At that time the Apostle John had been gathered to his fathers and the dust of decades had obliterated his grave. The gospel of Luke, of John, and the Acts of the Apostles were written by men who never saw Jesus nor his apostles, nor the preacher Paul. Kuenen and his colaborers considered the Acts to hav been written by some one who revered the memory of Paul, but did not understand his doctrins; a "heathen Christian" who tried to conceal the disputes, differences of opinion, and squabbles that existed in the early church. He maimed and falsified history, say they. The ascription to John of the book of Revelation rests upon loose foundations, or upon none at all, says Kuenen. There is no more reason to believe he wrote the gospel of John, the three letters credited to him, and the Apocalypse, than there is to believe the story that he lay down while alive in his grave, where the ground still gently heaves in response to his breathing, and where he still "awaits the coming of his Lord." The epistles of James and Jude, supposed to hav been brothers of Jesus, are, like the others, compositions of some one other than the accredited authors. The same testimony that we hav cited against the authenticity of the gospels is equally strongly directed against these.

It is absurd, also, to dogmatically say that Peter wrote two epistles. In fact, the doubt that he wrote even one is very strong. Kuenen, the professor of theology at Leiden, and one of the foremost theological historians in the world, says that Peter did not write either epistle bearing his name. Westcott one-half agrees with this, for he says that nothing was heard of the second epistle till the year 170 A D. At that time, like Apostle John, Peter lived only in mythology. Dr. Davidson, with Drs. Kuenen, Oort, and Hooykaas, is certain that Peter did not write the first epistle; and of the second, he says: "Internal considerations go far to disprove its authenticity, and, with the external evidence, are very strong."

So much for the authorship of the New Testament documents. As to their date:

2. There is no Christian scholar whose reputation extends beyond his personal acquaintances who will, for a moment, contend that the four gospels were written in the first century. In "Supernatural Religion," which is as scholarly and capable an authority as any, the writer says that none of the gospels was known for one hundred and fifty years after the events it pretends to recount—that is, before A.D. 180. Dr. Davidson, who, by the way, is a Christian professor, places Matthew at 118–19, Mark at 120, Luke at 119–20, and John at 150 A D. But these dates are too early. Others, and as competent historians, place Matthew at 180, Mark at 175, Luke at 170, and John at 178. Like Davidson's estimate, these dates are approximate. Dr. Davidson puts Acts at 125; Titus and 1 and 2 Timothy at 120 to 140, John's epistles at 130, and 2 Peter at 170. This leaves but a few unimportant letters which can properly be dated in the first century, and these, with the exception of some of Paul's, were written by no one knows whom. To say that the New Testament documents came into existence before the close of the first century is a falsehood, proceeding from ignorance or dishonesty.

3 and 4. The gospels and epistles were not received as authentic nor as authoritativ in the apostolic age. In the age of the apostles themselvs the gospels were not known. In the age of the apostolic fathers there were scores and scores of "gospels" and "scriptures" which were considered as authentic and as authoritativ as those now in the Christian canon. And many of our present canonical books were not received at all, but were kicked about as writings of uninspired and commonplace people. In fact, it was not until A.D. 170 that any of the books were called sacred. Westcott says that for a century and a quarter after the death of Jesus the Old Testament was considered to be more authoritativ than the New, and others place the date of the change of sentiment much later. When Paul referred to the "holy scriptures" he meant the Old Testament, says Westcott; and Davidson confirms this by saying that wherever the early Christian fathers used the phrase "it is written," or the word "scripture," they had exclusivly in mind the Old Testament. When the Christian canon was forming there were in circulation some forty gospels, and a much greater number of acts, epistles, and revelations. Origen says that very many were written, and when the fathers began to form canons they each adopted what books they liked. Instead, therefore, of having a New Testament, which they all agreed was authentic and authoritativ, the early Christians had dozens of them which had no authority for any one but the compilers. The early Christians were split into sects, and they had their heresies and heretics just as they hav now. No two sects used the same books. The first collection of New Testament documents was not considered iuspired by its compiler (Marcion, about A.D. 145), and he did not include a number of books now in the canon. He had a "gospel" of his own, which was identical with about three-fourths of Luke, and it is probable that Luke's gospel was made up from his. When Ireneus made up his canon he ignored many of the books now found in our canon. The ancient Syriac Christians omitted several books now in the New Testament. So did the Bible of the early African church. The canon of the early Abyssinian church was different from ours. The Thebaic and the Memphitic versions left out Revelations. Origen considered the authenticity and authoritativness of some of our canonical books extremely doubtful. Eusebius did not recognize as authentic all of our scriptures. Cyril, bishop of Jerusalem, did not accept Revelation. The council of Laodicea also omitted this book from its canon. So did the majority of Christian fathers as late as 365 A.D. St. Chrysostom left out five of our canonical documents. Theodore of Mosuestia rejected six. The Sinaitic, Vatican, and Alexandrine manuscripts do not agree. The Clermont Codex, a Latin list of the books read in the African church in the third century, does not include all the books now considered sacred. The Apostolic Constitutions (a collection of rules, mainly for the guidance of the clergy, dating from the fifth century) omit eight of our present New Testament documents. The council of Trent (1546) adopted the canon of the Catholic Bible; the Westminster Assembly (1647) adopted the list of the Protestant Bible. The various councils held previously adopted sometimes one canon and sometimes another. The statement that the books of the New Testament "were received and recognized as authentic and authoritativ in the apostolic age, and hav ever since been so received and recognized by the Christian church," is a gigantic falsification of history.

5 and 6. The concurrence of view of Christ alleged to be found in the gospels is one of those mental delusions which occur often to men desirous of making people believe that which is not true in order to keep fat positions of profit and power. The gospels, the historical part of the New Testament, contradict each other as to facts, and the doctrins of Peter and Paul are widely enough at variance to found upon one the Roman Catholic church and upon the other the equally huge system of imposture called the Protestant church. The gospel of John is so different from the other three that Kuenen throws it aside as valueless for historical purposes, and approves what Drs. Oort and Hooykaas say of the other three: "In the synoptic gospels we find certain narrativs which refer to Jesus in appearance only, and really rose in the apostolic communities in consequence of the division in their midst. . . . More than once we encounter narratives that cannot possibly be understood in connection with the life of Jesus. . . . When we place Matthew, Mark, and Luke side by side . . . we are surprised to find that the evangelists, from the very fact of their going to work so artlessly and simply, and introducing most of their alterations without exactly intending it, emend and refute themselvs." That is a pretty and gentle mantle to throw over the sins of the writers of the three gospels, but can it be stretched to cover the alterations in the traditions which they did intend to make?

But if in the gospels there is no harmony, much less can it be found in the teachings and doctrins of Peter and Paul, or between the doctrins of those two gentlemen and the doctrins of Jesus. Keeler has stated the facts succinctly: "The contest between Peter and Paul raged fiercely in the early days immediately following Jesus, and each was vigorously supported by factions. The doctrins which Protestant clergymen preach so much—predestination, foreordination, sanctification, and similar ones—are Paulisms, Jesus never having taught them. Paul was the apostle of uncircumcision and of the gentiles; Peter, of circumcision and of the Jews. Paul wished to 'carry Christ' to the gentiles and still allow them to be gentiles. Peter said if they became Christians they must also become Jews, be circumcised, and do as the Jews did in the ceremonial. In those days Paul was not recognized as a lawful teacher of Christianity, nor was he for more than a hundred years. In these days, if Peter should come back to earth and advocate circumcision, the strangulation of bullocks, and the strict observance of the Jewish ceremonial, he would not be permitted to preach in any Christian church, Catholic or Protestant. Paul said if anyone, even an angel from heaven, preached any other gospel than he did, that person should be accursed. He claimed authority as an apostle equal to that of the apostles at Jerusalem. But they had been appointed by the master in person, or eleven of them had been, and they had elected a twelfth to fill the place of Judas, Peter superintending the process, while Paul had appointed himself; and for him to claim to be their equal was something to which they could not submit. Paul asked, 'Am I not an apostle?' and the others said he was not. Revelation (a Johannine and therefore an anti-Pauline work) says, referring to Paul, 'And thou hast tried them which say they are apostles and are not, and hast found them liars.' Paul claimed that he and his followers were still Jews, even if they did not practice circumcision, but Peter and his friends denied it, and Revelation, again thrusting at Paul, says, 'I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews and are not, but are of the synagog of Satan;' and 'then of the synagog of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie.' Paul conceded that he had caught some of his followers by being crafty and using guile, but he thought that if he had misrepresented as to his apostolic authority, since good had come of it, no harm had been done.

"'For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner?'

"Paul's early spirit as a persecutor appears when he wishes that those anti-Paulines who troubled the Galatians were cut off. He once met Peter in Antioch, and an open conflict occurred. The Ebionites, one of the most powerful of the early sects, rejected Paul, and said he was an apostate from the law. The Clementine Homilies attack him bitterly under the name of Simon Magus. They reject his epistles entirely. Justin Martyr rejected him and scarcely deigned to notice his writings. Hegesippus would not use his epistles, and said, substantially, that he had falsified scripture. The Paulines, on the other hand, rejected the epistle to the Hebrews—which Christians now attribute to Paul—and they also rejected Revelation. The followers of Valentinus were Paulines, as were those of Marcion; those of Basilides were Petrines. The Corinthians opposed St. John as well as Peter and Paul; the Simonians opposed Peter; the Ophites rejected St. John and St. Paul. They were snake-worshipers, and claimed to hav derived their doctrins from James the brother of Jesus. Another sect, the Donatists, held that there were no virtuous people in the Christian church except such as belonged to their sect, and required all who joined them to be re-baptized. Jerome was bitterly hostil to Origen's views, even accusing the latter, substantially, of heresy. Rufinus adopted Origen's theories, and Jerome, who had been Rufinus's dearest friend, loaded him with the most terrible reproaches, until the quarrel became the scandal of the church in that time. It sounds strangely to hear persons in these days express a desire for a 'return to primitiv Christianity, when all was peace and love.' There never was such a time."

Our correspondent can see therefore that the strongest evidence against the resurrection of Jesus is the fact that the works relating it are fanciful tales, written no one knows by whom, where, or when. And if this is the case how absurd, irrational, foolish, and false to base a religion which must be believed and supported upon pain of eternal damnation—literal burning in hellfire—upon such slight, or rather upon no, evidence. If the facts are as the Rationalists state, then the orthodox are all wrong. As without the Garden of Eden Calvary is wholly superfluous, so are all the church doctrins and preaching and prayers and faith unless the New Testament be an authentic and divine record of the life and acts of a being who really possesses the power to bless and condemn as set forth by our religious teachers.

And another insurmountable hypothesis for the church is this: Supposing we havn't any immortal souls for the Lord or the pope or the preachers to send to hell or heaven!

Editorial Notes.

MR. WILLIAM DAVIES, a friend who livs in the West Indies, has been on a long tour of Europe. Before going he purchased a "Pictorial Text-Book," and upon his return he writes: "It may be interesting to you to learn that some friends of mine in London hav been so taken up with the copy of the 'Pictorial Text-Book' that it is now making the rounds among them, and I had to come away without it."

THE Minneapolis Journal of the 10th ultimo has this to say of Bishop Ireland's recent visit to Washington to force cash from the government to support Roman Catholic Indian schools: "It is very evident that among the burning questions looming up for consideration and determination, in the not remote future, the deliberate and continuous violation of the Constitution by the United States government in using the public money for the support of sectarian schools is by no means the least. When a prominent ecclesiastic can go to Washington and bully and dictate to the interior department, touching the teachers in the schools of his denomination, and hav more schools established for his sect and supported by the government, it is time for the American people to awaken from their indifference and reflect upon the inevitable result. It matters not which sects are so maintained by the government; the whole system should at once be abolished. The alliance between church and state in any form is abhorrent to the American mind; yet for years the government has been quietly cementing such alliance by the payment of from $300,000 to $600,000 a year to religious sectaries, who not only devote the schools taken on contract to dogmatic teaching, but convert the government schools into church nurseries, with all the varied paraphernalia of their sects flaunted in defiance of the law. Surely it is time to call a halt on this business. Already the sectaries are becoming dictatorial and claim government support as their right. Away with the dangerous system! Away with it, and the sooner the better."

THE Rev. Mr. Parkhurst of this city holds vigorous and heretical ideas. Last Sunday he spoke upon "Dead Sea Fruit," and in the course of his sermon he scored the church for her repression of new thought and general tendency to be on the wrong side. Some of the things he said were: "The church has always fought new ideas, never subscribes to a discovery in science until it has to, always widens its conceptions grudgingly and sulkily, and when on the frontier between the known and the unknown it has always behaved as though it were scared. The man who has a new understanding of a thing is always a hated man. No matter what his character may be, no matter how willing he might be to lay down his life for the truth, as he apprehends it, he is a feared and hated man. They always try to kill him. They do it as a part of their religious life. They think they are doing God's service by killing him as Saul thought when he chased the poor Christians up to Damascus. The history of orthodoxy shows that it has been happy in shedding the blood of heterodoxy. As civilization has advanced modes of burning alive hav been modified and assumed more esthetic forms, but there is the same impulse back of it all. Take the entire country and there is not a tithe of the interest felt in the conversion of the world to Christ that there is in seeing what the church is about to do with a conspicuous doctrinal suspect. The church has no fondness for altering what it is pleased to call its mind. It does not like to be bothered about the reasons for things. We are not saying that maliciousness is the secret of this, but it is an indubitable part of church history. When a recent vote was passed in our presbytery, indicating that one of our number would hav a chance pretty soon to stand up in the ecclesiastical rack, the moment the vote had been declared I saw one of the oldest and one of the saintliest members of the presbytery smile with a smile that was well on toward six inches in length. He is a saint if there is one in our presbytery, but there was the same spirit in that smile that was in the satisfied faces of the old inquisitors who used to roast heretics over slow fires and tickle their flesh with hot pincers. The church is steadily against the man who dares express original convictions, and takes what seems to it a holy satisfaction in seeing him squirm for it."

ORANGE CITY, IA., May 11, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: In your last issue I noticed a letter from Dr. C. W. McCormick, of Houston, Tex. I think his plan of a criminal census good, and if he has the time and is willing to do the work for $1,000, I am willing to open the subscription with $10, which I hereby pledge myself to send at any time the doctor notifies me that the rest is secured. I only think that the doctor under-estimates the cost of the undertaking.

Respectfully, DR. G. A. F. DE LESPINASSE.

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 18, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will please find $1 to keep up my subscription to the greatest Freethought journal afloat. As long as I possibly can spare a few cents it shall be with me. It is my Bible, and its contents cheer me up more in five minutes than the so-called inspired holy Bible of the Rev. John Wanamaker's caliber would in five years. So success to you and the great Watson Heston. Keep on pushing the good work for Universal Mental Liberty.

Fraternally yours, IGNACE GLASER.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 8, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Yours relating to "Text-Book" is received. Thanks. Inclosed find fifty cents, for which send me by return mail the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKER'S ALMANAC, and the Truth Seeker Library's "Age of Reason," by Thomas Paine. Do not forget to send me my copy of "Infidels' Death-beds," as soon as printed. Put me down as being opposed to closing the Chicago Fair on Sundays, and for Robert G. Ingersoll as president of the United States. JOSEPH MAILLE.

WILBUR, NEB., May 5, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to say to the truth seekers along the route which W. S. Bell is now traveling (Eastward from this place), that they would do well to secure his services for two or three lectures. He delivered two lectures at this place on his way East, and he set up some cold facts that will cause much thinking and hav already caused much talking. He has the pleasing art of illustrating by a comic story that forces a broad smile on the face of the most rigid Presbyterian. He decapitates the Christian dogmas without inflicting unnecessary pain. 'Tis a Bell that will ring out the old and ring in the new if kept tolling. H. KILGORE.

HARMONY, IND., May 11, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: How was it about that apple business, that the Gods cursed the world on account of it, and never thought of the remedy for four thousand years, and then brought it about in a way that disgusts thinking men and women?

I went to a certain church one night after 11 o'clock to see what was keeping my granddaughter. When I walked in you could just see the small taper on account of the dust or fog, and there stood a great big ghost that would weigh about two hundred and forty pounds avoirdupois—perhaps the same species of ghost that overshadowed a certain young Jewess nearly nineteen hundred years ago. There this ghost stood, grinning, raising hell, to get those poor sinners to heaven.

Hurrah for Heston and the pictures. JESSE MAURER.

NEWARK, N. J., May 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in your edition of the current week a characteristic effusion that emanates from W. W. Morris, of this city. His opening statement is thus, "The pope is tackling economics." Would it not be better, Mr. Editor, if for once Brother Morris would follow Mr. Pecci's example? Like all of us, he has his hobby, i.e., abuse of that poor old Italian gentleman now residing at Rome—or, as Col. Elliott F. Shepherd would hav it, "Roma"—but instead of Liberals abusing potentates abroad, would it not be better to see to the little popes at home? The crying evil and the curse of humanity is contained in two capital G's—i e., God and Government. And until both these ideas (for they are ideas only) are eradicated from the human brain, "Universal Mental Liberty" is utopian. Abuse, especially when accompanied with incorrect statements, is the worst weapon Freethinkers can hav.

Moreover, we as Freethinkers hav a mission, that is this: We hav no hereafter and no crown of glory to offer our fellow-beings; it is necessary therefore to put something in place of these superstitions; that is, to strive for absolute freedom for man, woman, and child, and this can only be accomplished in its entirety by and through the philosophy of Anarchism. Fraternally, CHARLES B. MOORE.

SPRINGFIELD, MO., May 14, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I received a letter the 11th inst. from Mr. J. E. Remsburg at Oak Mills, Kan., stating that on his way to Texas he would stop off and deliver us a lecture here in Springfield, Mo., provided we would procure a hall. To my surprise, I found the letter had been delayed thirty days at this office on account of not having my street number (306 E. Comm. street) in the address. Therefore, failing to receive his word in proper time, and knowing I was too late to further the matter, and at present not knowing Mr. Remsburg's whereabouts, I take the opportunity through your valuable paper to offer, with many of my Freethinking friends here, our sincere regret at missing this chance, hoping at some future time to be able to hav Mr. Remsburg or some other prominent lecturer to stir us up.

My "Pictorial Text-Book" is almost worn out through constant use. The 'Frisco railroad shops employ from eight to nine hundred men here, and the book was there two months among them taking the rounds, many taking it home and reading it through. It has converted several. Quite a number would like very much to hav a copy of it, but as times hav been rather dull this winter and spring I hav at present been unable to secure any orders. I also received yesterday three valuable pamphlets from the American Secular Union, which shall receive my utmost attention. Thanking them for the same, and wishing success to Watson Heston and others, J. L. THOMAS.

BARRE, MASS., May 17, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Please afford me sufficient space to ask your readers to take down their old Bibles and turn to Isa. xxxv, 8, and there read, "The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

The clergy, in view of so many differing sects, each going to the same book for authority for their own special doctrin, hav undertaken to smooth over this slippery spot in their infallible word of God by misquoting the assertion, usually rendering it, need not err therein, may not, or might not, as if to throw the blame on the poor wayfarer and exonerate God, who dictated such an ambiguous piece of folly that one thousand sects could arise from it, containing some sixty thousand contradictions in its sacred pages.

Now, I ask you all to hold the Christians to their Bible shall not, never misquoting it after their pattern. Do not allow them to quote it, neither "need not," "may not," "might not," but compel them to keep it in the imperativ form that men shall not err therein. Do not allow them, without correction, to use the subjunctiv mood, as if in a contingency they might err; their infallible word says imperativly, though fools, they shall not err therein, which proves that none of these sects do err, no matter how contradictory their creeds. Neither the Catholics nor Protestants err, and so of all the other fighting denominations!

A wonderful book, this Bible! and a wonderful God, this maker of Bibles and worlds! ELLA E. GIBSON.

PORT ANGELES, WASH., May 4, 291.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $10.50, for which please send THE TRUTH SEEKER to the following addresses, also the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, "Bible Contradictions," and Washburn's "Was Jesus Insane?"

The churches are trying hard to win the people here. Some of the preachers say that it is right for church property to be taxed, and quote scripture to prove it.

About the 1st of March, when Mr. C. B. Reynolds was here, the preachers were all invited to attend the lectures and reply to him, but coward-like they failed to appear until after he had gone. Then they misrepresented him and Freethinkers in general in their pulpits. Again, they were invited to come to the Secular Union hall and hear their sermons replied to, and also take part in the discussion, but they hav not done so yet. I will try to get some of them to meet Mr. Putnam when he comes. He will be here the 20th of this month. We are getting a good many of the Christians to read Liberal literature. Mr. D. R. Cullen was distributing some in the Salvation Army when the captain got hold of an Ironclad Age and tore it to pieces and informed Mr. Cullen that they were not allowed to read anything excepting the War Cry and the Bible. But some of the Salvationists continue to read what we giv them. The captain asked me to read the Bible and be converted. I told him I had read it and thought I could quote as many passages of scripture as he could. He said he did not doubt it, as he did not claim to know anything about the Bible; had never read three verses in the Bible when he commenced preaching. He said, "A man don't hav to go to college to be a preacher in the Salvation Army, glory to God!"

The town is growing fast. It has one of the best harbors in the state; is the nearest of any to the ocean. One large daily steamboat runs here, and several smaller ones also. Ocean steamers and ships come into the harbor. This country has remained unsettled on account of the dense growth of timber that covers it, fir trees from three feet to six feet in diameter and three hundred feet in hight and smaller ones so close together that it is impossible for a horse to go through. The Union Pacific railroad is coming here. Two saw-mills are turning the forest into lumber, and more large mills are soon to be built. There is an abundance of fish in the bay, and plenty of elk and deer eight or ten miles back in the mountains. All who wish any more information about Port Angeles can obtain it by writing to me.

Yours for truth and justice, FRANK MORSE.

CARYSVILLE, O., May 1, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: It is almost enough to excite indignation in the most patient mind to witness the irrationalism and stupidity displayed by those who enjoy the advantages of living in an age of enlightenment and surrounded by all the prerequisits adequate to the establishment of a high degree of intelligence.

For the past month, being at leisure, I hav occasionally visited the various gospel shops in our town, and hav heard in the stories discussed the various phases of Christian thought. I hav heard the experiences of both the unfledged convert and the fully developed theologian. I hav heard the sky-pilot dilate upon the importance of surrendering to Christ, and seen the convert, dethroned of his reason, fall before the assumed mercy-seat. I hav met and conversed with men and women, who appeared to be intelligent upon other questions, that were so befogged in their religious frenzies as to be unable to reason upon that subject. And while this is lamentably true, it is not within the bounds of justice to lay the blame at the feet of the credulous dupes of a simguided judgment. If I hav any power to pity, it seems that I could lavish it upon the poor victim of superstition. As Ingersoll has said, "I do not hate a man because he has the rheumatism, but I hate the rheumatism because it has the man." The subject of a diseased body often excites our pity, and so the subject of a diseased mind should create within us feelings of pity rather than hatred. I am magnanimous enough to believe that the masses of the church laity are sincere. Born and reared in the very atmosphere of Christian empiricism, having had their minds warped and distorted in the Sunday-school and around the family altar before they were old enough to reason, having been taught that faith is superior to reason, that science is a deception and logic a snare, it is not strange that they should develop beliefs so strictly in accord with their environments. No, it is not the credulous, confiding people that are to blame. It is the educated hypocritical leeches who know better, and who liv off of the fears of their dupes, that arouse our indignation. It is not possible for those who possess the advantages of a collegiate course of training in the scientific branches of learning, that they should be unable to see the absurdities of Christian dogmas. There are thousands of persons who are the blind dupes of the church, who lack opportunities, and who could be saved from the thralldom of priestcraft were it not for the timidity of Freethinkers. There are too many who claim to hav thrown off the shackles that are yet in galling chains, and who hav not the moral courage to lift their banner above the slough of ecclesiastical dogmatism. It is true that social ostracism is hard to endure, as most of us desire to meet with the approbation of our fellows, but when our liberties and the liberties of our posterity are at stake, it becomes us as men and women laboring in a noble cause that we buckle on the whole armor and let our battle-cry be, "Giv us liberty or giv us death." When I remember the years spent in early life, when I review the dark days and gloomy nights passed in my youth and early manhood, when I remember how my young mind was made to recoil at hearing the squeaking of the bats or the hootings of the owls of superstition, I feel in duty bound to do what little I can to alleviate, if possible, those of my fellows who are similarly situated. Our salvation lies in our free schools aided by a free press. Education will eventually so adjust human intelligence as to enable man to soar above the mists of irrationalism, where he will be enabled to look down with horror upon the rottenness of ecclesiastical tyranny and be enabled to breathe the pure air of universal mental liberty. To this end then let us labor. Let us put our shoulders to the wheel, and if we do not achieve success in our day we will hav left a foundation upon which posterity may erect a monument to our credit.

THAT AWFUL BOOK.

VINELAND, N. J., May 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: This day, May 16, 1891, completes the ninetieth year of my life, and I do not know how I can spend a small portion of the day better than by again calling attention to the book called Bible or God's holy word, hoping thereby to add a few more names to the thousands I hav already caused to giv up that book as a divine guide and seek for a better life than such a book can lead to. The greatest wonder of my long life is how such a book could ever be palmed off on people capable of reading and thinking as the inspiration of a being supreme in wisdom, justice, love, and mercy, when nearly ever chapter proves directly the contrary. The book was written by men without inspiration, many of them very ignorant men. Each writer gave the book and its God a patch of his own character. The story of the creation proves itself false. The world never was spoken into existence in one week nor in thousands of years. Matter always existed and the laws of nature produced the different forms that we behold. The planets are kept in their places or on their courses by attraction or repulsion among themselvs. There are two different stories told about the creation of man. The first says that God created man in his own image and likeness, male and female created he them, and placed them in a garden, giving them liberty to eat of all the herbs and fruits in the garden. Nothing was forbidden them. A little further on it says that God made man of the dust of the earth, breathed into him the breath of life, and he became a living soul. He placed him in a garden and gave him liberty to eat of all herbs and fruit except one particular tree, and told him the day he ate of that he should surely die. The woman was not then created. After busying himself awhile with other matters he discovered that he had made a mistake—that it was not good for man to be alone, so instead of keeping the man perfect and making a woman of something else he took a rib from the man's side, before surgical instruments or so much as a butcher knife had been made, and of that one little dry bone made a full-sized woman. These two different stories about the creation of man are enough to prove the Bible unreliable. After God had got through with the work of creation he pronounced everything good that he had made. After that it appears that he discovered a mistake, for it repented him that he had made man and grieved him to the heart. The book also tells us that he made an angel in heaven, but made him so imperfect that he soon rebelled and was cast out into the earth, where he outwitted God and got the whole human race doomed to eternal fire and brimstone. There is no more divine authority in the Bible than there is in any other fiction written by man, and the book has done more harm than any, if not all, other books ever written by man. It has been the means of putting millions of the best people of their time to death, and even now, at this age, it is dividing the people of this nation into one hundred and forty different sects, each sect hating all the others. It causes enmity between husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, and parents and children, and so long as it is regarded as of divine authority it will retard the progress of everything that is pure and good. It givs eighty thousand priests and clergymen of this nation the opportunity to liv lives absolutely injurious to their fellowman. Honesty, justice, kindness, benevolence, all the virtues, can be better practiced without the book and its clergy than with them, and the sooner it can be put aside the better for the human race. Within a few weeks I hav read the headlines of every chapter in the Old Testament and nearly three hundred of its full chapters, and such another mess of filth and nastiness I never found in any other book. If I believed in a being supreme in wisdom and goodness, I should consider it rank blasphemy to say that he had anything to do with writing such a book. The anger, wrath, cruelty, revenge, that that book accuses him of pouring out upon his children exceeds anything charged to the devil himself, and makes the author of the book the worse character of the two. The book calls David a man after God's own heart, but a bloodier old villain never lived. When at home and not engaged with his women he was always cursing his enemies and praying for God to destroy them, and then would take his army out and destroy a thousand or two better people than himself without any provocation.

I tried to learn how many wives David had, for I thought a man after God's own heart should lead a chaste life if the God was a good one. I found that he had eight wives before he went to Jerusalem. Then it says he took more wives and concubines after he went to Jerusalem, but does not say how many, but goes right on and givs the names of thirteen new children that he had after he went to Jerusalem. When he got frightened and fled from Absalom he left ten concubines to keep his house. While he was absent another man got into the house with his concubines apparently to spite him. This so enraged the old buck that he carried the concubines away and locked them up, and never saw them any more, but kept them locked up during life.

This will do for the present lesson. Let Postmaster Wanamaker read it to his pupils every Sunday till shame banishes the vile book from every school and family in America.

Your friend, J. HACKER.

BOSCOBEL, WIS., May 7, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I to-day mail you two copies of a local paper containing each an argument upon a subject of which I hav before written you. On page 4 of the Teller of May 8th will be found a criticism of one of these articles, wherein the editor endeavors to show that certain parties classed in my article as Atheists or Infidels, were Christians. Now, the three first of these—Galileo, Kepler, and Darwin—were cited in an extract from the argument on the trial for Blasphemy, by R G. Ingersoll, therefore must be correct, as he never makes mistakes; but having no works for reference upon the subject, I cannot establish the fact of their Infidelity. I inclose stamps, and if you can giv me any assistance in the matter it will greatly oblige me.

In regard to Thomas Paine, whose religion, as formulated by himself, was simply "to do good," the editor cannot certainly class him with those whose religion is "to believe." Yet I think you may be familiar with some brief sentence or line which will settle effectually his entire unbelief in any orthodox God or religion. I hav never understood that the Deist's God was called by any Christian or Jewish names, and Mr. Paine's use of these was as any Atheist may hav done. I hav heard more than one openly avowed Atheist called a Christian believer because he or she had said "God."

The editor in question much over-estimates my reading attainments. For the past thirty years I hav had but little more time to read than the average of people who keep house and do their own work. My library is by no means extensiv. Aside from the Boston Investigator and THE TRUTH SEEKER, I hav read some of Mr. Ingersoll's works, and a few other Liberal pamphlets, and also books and papers by Mrs. Stanton, Miss Anthony, and Mrs. Gage. The names of these three greatest women of our time I do not mention, as the editor would, in all probability, so harass my work with his strictures that it would be almost impossible to proceed. Also, in regard to Mr. Ingersoll, so many pietists hav put their foot down that they will never read a word of his writing, that I delight in giving extracts from his works and withholding the author's name.

Please excuse this trespass upon your valuable time. My only apology is the cause of Universal Mental Liberty; and hoping I may hear from you at your early convenience, I remain, Very respectfully, MRS. E. G. TAYLOR.

[Of the persons whom you cite as Infidels, Tyndall, Helmholtz, John Stuart Mill, Ernestine Rose, Lucretia Mott, Horace Seaver, D. M. Bennett, James Parton, Jefferson, Courtlandt Palmer, Parker Pillsbury, Voltaire, Humboldt, Garrison, and Spinoza do not seem to be challenged by the editor of the Teller. They are all Infidels, and if any are disputed we will supply you with proof. That Abraham Lincoln—also unchallenged—was an Infidel may be shown from Mr. Remsburg's exhaustiv investigation lately published in this paper. The Teller asks, "When did Darwin ever say he was an Infidel?" In 1879 Darwin wrote to a German student, "I do not believe that there ever has been any revelation;" in his "Life and Letters" are his words that between 1836 and 1842 he had come to see "that the Old Testament was no more to be trusted than the sacred books of the Hindoos;" he rejected design and said, "I for one must be content to remain an Agnostic." Thomas Paine, while mustering arguments from every available quarter to strengthen his countrymen in a crisis, indeed used the language, "The will of the almighty as declared by Gideon, and the prophet Samuel, expressly disapproves of government by kings." But at a later date he issued his "Age of Reason" in which he declared his personal disbelief in the almighty of Gideon and Samuel. His late use of the word "God" is in designation solely of the God of the Deist. The remaining two, Galileo and Kepler, we may conjecture to hav been thorough disbelievers in Christianity, but we cannot well demonstrate them to hav been such to the satisfaction of a Christian. A reperusal of the references to them in "Blasphemy" will show you that Colonel Ingersoll does not assert them to hav been Infidels. However, Galileo declared that "in scripture there are propositions which are false in the literal sense of the words," and that "in all natural questions philosophical argument should hav more weight than mere scriptural declaration." His astronomical propositions were contradictory of scripture and of church doctrin. He was denounced as a heretic, and forced to recant. Kepler's "theses on theological topics exhibited too great a freedom to merit the approbation of" the college that he attended when young. He was perpetually harassed by the clergy, and about 1615 his mother, Johnson's Encyclopedia phrases it, "became a victim of her son's scientific reputation." She was accused of being a witch, and narrowly escaped the flames. Kepler's persecutions as "not only a heretic, but as the son of a witch," continued till his death. On these two men see Professor White's "Warfare of Science." The age in which they lived did not admit of the expression of fully Infidel opinions. For hazarding what expressions they did venture, they barely escaped death; had they uttered all that we may believe they thought, they could not hav existed and achieved their magnificent scientific discoveries. They sought, says the Teller, to produce scriptural confirmation of their discoveries; we add, they had to, or not make them. They lived in outward rites as Catholics, it is true; they had to or not liv at all. Let the pietists state how many of the great scientists of this age, when expression is comparativly free, figure as Christians.—ED. T. S.]

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 10, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Wonders will never cease. Last Sunday as I was strolling about Newark I saw a notice that Miss Ada Campbell would lecture in the hall that afternoon. Well, I rubbed my eyes to see if I was awake, for that is the name of the lady who seven years ago at the other end of the world made an Infidel of me. I will tell you how it was. It was in Tasmania, which is a very orthodox place. I am now ship's steward. I was then before the mast. We had put in at a little seaport in the north of the island called Leving. This lady had come to lecture there. She had been burnt in effigy a short time before, and people were very excited against her. They said she wanted to take away their God and religion so that they might become devils and go to hell and be burnt for all eternity. There was a man preaching that day about her and showing out of the Bible in Revelation that she was the Scarlet Woman of Babylon whose coming foretold the end of the world was at hand. Well, it was not expected she would leave the place alive. Our first mate came on board at supper time and said, "Lads, you would not see a woman killed if you could stop it?" We said, No. He then told us how the lady had been treated and how he had heard her in Queensland, and how she had fought the government for the people's rights, and that some Irish Roman Catholic navvies that were there making the railroad had sworn to kill her—that they would turn out the lights and rush on the platform and a few blows on her skull would finish the job—that nobody could tell in the darkness who did it. Well, one of my messmates jumps up and said, "I don't believe in religions, none of them; but I believe there is a God. Anyhow, I am not going to stand round and see a woman killed, specially one as has got the grit in her this lady has." Well, we armed ourselvs with short clubs and pistols. There were nine of us in all. We went on shore. As we went up the sands some one of us remarked, "Would it not be best to warn the lady how great is her danger, and that she runs too many risks and ought to stay at home?" Our officer said, "She has been warned, but said she came here to lecture and she is going to lecture if she dies for it." It was a dark, dismal night. The wind was blowing a stiff gale. There were no lights in the streets, only here and there a flickering one from an oil lamp in a store window. We went to the town hall where the lecture was to take place. We found then she would not get the hall for any price, because she was an Infidel. But mind you, the next week a reverend sky-pirate got the hall for nothing because he was lecturing against her. His name was Greenwood, and he said he hailed from Hobart and he was following her all through the country to destroy the poison she was putting in men's minds. He said she was a free lover, a dynamiter, and an Infidel of the lowest sort. When he said that, some one jumped up and said, "That is a lie," and he said he could prove it. This man said, "Well, you prove it." The reverend slanderer said it was not convenient just then, because in his hurry he had left the proofs where he was lecturing last, but he would bring them next time. Then the man said, "Don't you make it convenient to blacken that lady's character until you make it convenient to hav the proofs with you." Then our officer got up and said, "Why don't you meet the lady in debate? She has challenged you all, but none of you come forward." The reverend humbug said he could not lower the dignity of his calling by arguing in public with a creature who was a disgrace to her sex. Our officer said, "No, but you can lower the dignity of your calling by calling her names behind her back and making charges against her which you say you cannot make it convenient to prove. Is that a specimen of Christian charity?" And then some of the people clapped and said, "Hear, hear!" The reverend said he was sorry if he had offended them. He was sorry this woman had got such a hold upon the minds of some of the people, and if they did not wish him to go on he would retire. Then some cried out for him to go on, but a good lot of people left the hall and were arguing outside, and soon we heard those inside singing a hymn, "Washed in the Blood."

But to go back to Miss Campbell and how I became an Infidel. Well, she had taken an old weatherboarded hall down the banks by itself on the sands close to the water's edge. When this was announced the crowd followed to the hall. There was a man on the bank with a lantern who waved it to and fro to light the people down. Just as the lecturess got close to the hall some ruffians threw big stones at her. I do not know if she was struck, but one of us who was behind threw himself down and cried, "Murder!" and that drew the crowd aside until she got into the hall. We followed close and got the front seat between her and the rest of the people. The platform was only about two feet high. The hall was poorly lighted with kerosene. The lecturess came from behind the screen where she had taken her hat and jacket off. She began to speak, and though she was very white her voice had a very determined ring in it. She asked for a fair hearing. She said she had heard there would be an attempt at violence, but she warned anyone who thought of molesting her that she had come prepared to defend herself. Then some of the navvies at the end of the hall began to hiss and yell. Presently there was a lull, and the lecturess said with a sneer, as she looked defiance at them, "Bah! a goose could do that much, and the bigger the goose the louder it can hiss." She warned them to keep quiet, and said the first man that attempted to come on that platform without her permission was a dead man, and her eyes blazed as she said it, and she looked so determined we felt sure she would keep her word. Then she began her lecture, and showed that this so-called Christianity was a fraud that had been palmed off upon the ignorant masses by the early Christian fathers to make the churches rich and powerful. And she brought forward her Bible and proved out of it that what is called Christianity is not the teachings of Jesus, but the opposit, and that if anyone tried to carry out the commands or follow the example of Jesus he would be put in prison by the Christians as a criminal or a lunatic. She then showed up all the frightful crimes and horrible cruelties of Christianity, and that the Roman Catholic church was responsible for most of them. Then one of the navvies said, "That's a lie!" and tried to make a row, but a policeman who had come quietly into the hall put him out. Then one of the lights went out. One of my mates turned round and his jacket fell back and showed the pistol stuck in his belt. The lecturess was pale before, but her very lips turned white then, but she walked to the edge of the platform right opposit him and said, "I see you are armed. Well, so am I. Remember, a life for a life." My mate was awfully taken aback at that, for she looked at us one after another sternly. She said, "I am here to do you good, not evil. I am risking my life to pull the priestly bandage of superstition off your mental eyesight." Then she seemed to think we were sailors, and said that men who were pillars of the church bought old vessels that would founder at the first gale, got a heavy insurance on them, and sent them to sea knowing that the chances were a hundred to one but at the first heavy sea or approach of a storm they would go down with all on board, not taking any account of our lives or that they made widows and orphans of our wives and families. Well, it seemed soon after she began talking as if scales began falling from my eyes, and I wondered I had not thought of all those things before, for they were plain around me if I had only taken notice of them. I tell you, that lecture was a regular eye-opener. And so was that lecture last Sunday, which the people agreed as they went out was splendid. Well, at the other lecture which I write of, while the people were filing out, just as the lady's attention was occupied, three rowdies crept to the platform, but we jumped up and barred the way. One tried to push past us, but one of my mates took hold of him and dragged him to the door. He fought hard then, but my mates pitched him out in spite of his struggles. Our officer then made himself known to the lady and told her we were her friends and would form a guard to take her home. She gave us a little book entitled, "Why I Am an Infidel." The lecturess wrote it herself. I tell you, that book did not leave any room for the Gods and religions. She also gave some to the other people, and if they had the same effect on them as on us there are a good many Infidels there now. The rowdies threw some stones at us in the darkness as we took the lady home. That is all that happened.

Now, my friend in Newark is a Freethinker, but though I call at his house when I am in New York, yet I never knew it until I saw him at the meeting last Sunday, and he was just as much surprised that I was an Infidel. You see, his "missis" is inclined to be religious and the subject is never mentioned in his house. I did not know where to get a Freethought paper until he told me. He lent me several of his papers, TRUTH SEEKERS, which I read with great pleasure. THE TRUTH SEEKER is far better than any of the English Freethought papers. It is the best I hav seen yet.

Now, I think a badge is needed for Freethinkers—not a rubbishy pansy, which is worn by nearly everyone when in season, but the torch of reason and the blue sky of clear thought. If my friend in Newark had one and I had one and we had worn them, we would hav known we were of the same way of thinking; which is important, as when a ship comes into port the sky-pilots send their emissaries on board for us to come and hear the Rev. this and the Rev. that and to join the Seaman's Christian Union, and distribute tracts about the Holy Ghost and the blood and such-like theological chestnuts. Which reminds me to say, the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER are splendid—just what they ought to be. I hav made arrangements with my friend to hav THE TRUTH SEEKER sent after me. There ought to be some way to let strangers coming to your ports know where to get a Freethought paper and hear a Freethought lecture. When I was in Frisco a couple of years ago I could not hear of either.

With my gratitude and best thanks to the lady whose courage to speak the truth made an Infidel of me and others, who will remember her with respectful affection as long as they liv, wishing the lady, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and yourself every success,

Respectfully, one of the brotherhood of reason,

GEO. J. MORRIS.

To Stella!

Hair like raven's wing,
Lips as ripened cherries,
Tiny feet,
A form petite,
Eyes as brown as berries.

Voice of melody,
Hands of slender whiteness,
Every word
(Perhaps you've heard)
Shows sympathetic brightness.

Loveliness and grace
Every move discloses.
A dainty skin,
A dimpled chin,
Cheeks like damask roses.

Nose of Grecian shape,
Brow of alabaster,
Teeth like pearls,
Olympian curls
(I wish my rhyme flew faster).

Coquetry and wit,
All the graces blending.
Cupid's darts
Rend our hearts.
Damaged past all mending.

Waist of symmetry,
Throat so white and slender,
(My heart's aglow,
I love her so)
Manners soft and tender.

Smiles like radiant beams
From Phoebus straight descending,
Raiment fine,
In short, divine,
Herself, all art transcending.

GEORGE HAMO.

School Children and Their Answers.

Though not exactly a child, perhaps, a lad once appeared before Bishop Wilberforce for confirmation. The bishop, feeling sure that he had confirmed him before, bent over and said, in a low tone, "My boy, I think I hav confirmed you before." The lad opened his great wild eyes, and replied, "You be a liar."

"What would hav happened if Henry IV. of France had not been murdered?" asked a teacher of a sharp-looking boy. The prompt reply was, "He would probably hav died a natural death."

In a Sunday-school. "What did the Israelites do when they came out of the Red sea?" drew forth the answer, "They dried themselvs." "Where was Bishop Latimer burnt to death?" was immediately answered, "In the fire."

While youngsters appear to get considerably "mixed" in digesting their historical information, their ideas of geographical facts are also not unfrequently, to say the least, original. A young hopeful said that the surface of the earth consisted of land and water. "What, then," asked the teacher, "do land and water make?" "Mud," was the instant rejoinder.

A volcano has been described as "a large mountain with a hole at the top and a fireplace at the bottom;" and a "bar is a piece of iron across a river mouth. It prevents navigation, and has to be cut through with a steam edge."

According to the Schoolmaster, "stability" was recently defined as being "the cleaning up of a stable;" and an answer to some question about insurance had this passage: "The money is provided by the company to defray the expenses of the birth of members in pecuniary distress." In the summer, it seems, "the day is longer owing to expansion by the heat;" and that season itself is thus explained: "Once a year we hav the whole bright side of the sun turned toward us. Then it is summer. The sun is in the solstice and stands still."

"What comes next to man in the scale of being?" inquired an examiner. "His shirt," was the reply. Asked to giv the distinction, if any, between a fort and a fortress, a boy nicely defined them: "A fort is a place to put men in, and a fortress is a place to put women in." On being asked what the chief end of man was, another boy, without any hesitation, said, "The end what's got his head on!"

A teacher asked a very juvenil class which of them had ever seen a magnet. A sharp urchin at once said he had seen lots of them. "Where?" inquired the teacher, surprised at his proficiency. "In the cheese."

Being asked what conscience was, a boy replied, "An inward monitor." Asked what a monitor meant, the ready reply was, "An ironclad vessel."

Another lad was asked what he understood by "celerity," and, perhaps from experience, says the contemporary account, he described it as "something to put hot plates down with."

The members of a girls' class were asked a few questions. One was interrogated as to what was meant by "bearing false witness against your neighbor." "It was," said she, "when nobody did nothing and somebody went and told of it." Another was asked how beef-tea was made, and she replied, "Buy a tin of beef extract and follow the directions on the lid."

"What are warmth-producing foods?" a third girl was asked. The reply was, "Cayenne pepper and Jamaica ginger."

"What is the feminin of friar?" asked a teacher of his class. First boy: "Hasn't any." "Next?" Second boy: "Nun." "That's right," said the master. First boy, in an indignant tone: "That's just what I said."

"And now, dear," asked a governess, "what can you tell me about Minerva?" "She was the goddess of wisdom, and she never married," was the reply.—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

The Capitol Dome, Washington.

The capitol dome at Washington is the only considerable dome of iron in the world. It is a vast hollow sphere weighing 8,000,300 pounds. How much is that?

More than 4,000 tons, or almost the weight of 70,000 full-grown persons, or about equal to 1,000 ladened coal cars of four tons each, which, if strung one behind the other, would occupy a mile and a half of track. On the very top of the dome the allegorical figure "America," weighing 13 985 pounds, lifts its proud head high in the air. The pressure of this dome and figure upon the piers and pillars is 14,477 pounds to the square foot.

It would, however, require a pressure of 755,286 pounds to the square foot to crush the support of the dome. The cost of this immense dome was a little short of $1,000 000.

GEO. J. REMSBURG will speak at schoolhouse of No. 20 on evening of June 25th. Subject, "Some Bible Facts." Admittance free. Everybody respectfully invited to attend. Freethought, a journal published in San Francisco, Cal., says: "George J. Remsburg is a youth of rare precocity. Though not more than eighteen, he has been talking and writing on politics afid theology for several years."

[The above notice shows that our friend George is certainly doing his part toward Liberalizing that part of the state where he livs. In future years we expect his name will be everywhere as familiar as household words. Success and prosperity attend him. —ED. C. C.]

Correspondence.

WESTMINSTER, CAL., April 26, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner.

My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. He has not taken it a year yet. I like to read and look at the pictures in the paper. I think it is the nicest paper we are taking. That woman and the pretty baby in the paper of April 18th made such an impression on my mind I cannot help but be a Freethought girl.

Papa and mamma did belong to the church, but they do not now. The Sunday-school teacher wanted me to go, but I would not; I had rather stay home and read THE TRUTH SEEKER.

If this does not go in the waste-basket, I will write again.

Your Liberal friend, EUNICE MARTIN.

TRICOVISTA, TURKEY, March 1, 1891.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: I am sure you must think me very rude in not having written to you for such a long time, but I will tell you the reason why. We are no longer living in Salonica, as father's business has been very bad for many months; he has hired a farm for seven years, eight hours away from Salonica. It is a very large one, indeed, but is in a very bad condition, as the last three years hav all been bad. There is no food for the animals to eat, even the people belonging to the farm having nothing to eat, so you see it is rather difficult for papa just now, but we hope it will be a good year this one and then all will be right.

We all like this life very much indeed. It is a very nice place to liv in, as there are beautiful trees and woods.

My little brother Nelson seems to like this sort of life better than anyone, for he has grown so fat since we came here, and he can almost walk. He will be a year old soon. My sister Lily has grown very much; she is now three years old, and she talks very nicely; and as for the boys, they seem to grow every day, they are so happy.

Would you mind sending us some seeds, vegetable or flower? As we are living on a farm, of course we will hav a garden. Mamma would very much like to hav one or two melon—muskmelon or watermelon—seeds, which grow in America, if it will not be troubling you too much. I hope you will not mind my having asked you for the seeds. Some day, when papa photographs our house (you know he has a photographic apparatus) I will send you a copy, and then you will see how a farmhouse in Turkey looks.

I must now end my letter, as I hav some more to write. And hoping you will excuse me for troubling you about the seeds, with much love from mother and myself,

Yours affectionately, DAISY SUTER.

OAK MILLS, KAN., May. 1891.

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend and Teacher: Since my letter describing my collection appeared in the Corner, I hav received many kind letters from its readers offering to send me something in the curiosity line. I wish to thank you for your kindness in giving my letter a place in the Corner. You hav always been very kind to publish my humble contributions, and I feel that I owe you a debt of gratitude. I also wish to thank the readers of the Corner for the many kind letters received from them.

Miss Wixon, I shall anxiously await the promised description of your collection. I know it will be interesting, for you never write a line but what is interesting.

I read your letter on the badge-pin controversy in a late issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I fully concur with you. Wettstein's badge is the best emblem of Freethought ever brought before the public, and no Freethinker should be ashamed to wear such a badge. They who object to this beautiful and expressiv badge, and refuse to wear it, are not true and genuin Freethinkers. Miss Churchill's "U. M. L." badge is a neat emblem of Freethought. I was sorry to learn of her death. She was a noble woman. Let us honor and cherish her memory.

I was sorry to hear of Colonel Ingersoll's recent illness, and am glad that he is now on the road to recovery. I once had an attack of that dreadful disease, la grippe, and I know how to sympathize with our great and noble leader.

I hav just been reading a book called "Daring Deeds of American Heroes," and it is one of the most interesting and thrilling books I ever read. It tells how bravely the early colonists resisted unjust "taxation without representation," and how they fearlessly bared their bosoms to the storm of shot and shell, to avert the terrible destiny which threatened the country they loved so well. This book is filled with stories of their daring intrepidity, and when one reads it his blood boils with the contemplation of the heroic virtues which characterized the early colonists in their struggle for independence.

Every child in America should read this book. It will help to embalm in their memory the "daring deeds of our American heroes;" it will help to perpetuate the sentiment of gratitude which they owe to these heroes, and "to keep burning pure and bright the fire upon the altar of patriotism." The record of the "daring deeds" achieved by our ancestors, "will impress upon the minds of the young an idea of their priceless value," and it will help to imbue them with a love for their country.

Mr. L. L. Goodwin's letter in the last Corner was appreciated. He has given us some good, sound advice. Such letters help to make the Corner valuable and instructiv. Mr. Guiwit's description of the prehistoric relic in the Bad Lands was very interesting.

My letter is longer than I intended for it to be, so I will close, with best wishes to you and the Cornerites.

Yours for Universal Mental Liberty,
GEORGE J. REMSBURG.

EAST PORTLAND, ORE., April 26, 1891.

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend: It has been several years since my name appeared in the Children's Corner, and it is not merely to recall my memory to the minds of my readers that I write, but it is that I wish to impart a little knowledge to my friends concerning the work of the Liberals "out West."

My home is in McMinnville, Yamhill co., but I hav been attending Business College in Portland since last November. I hav enjoyed my study very much, but that which I hav enjoyed more is the true Liberal society in which I hav been permitted to go.

The Universal Reform Club, founded by Prof. J. H. White, which meets every Sunday at 3 o'clock, was doing good work when I came, and is now quite as popular, and a great deal more beneficial, than the Sunday-school. It is a club of which every one is a member who attends. It holds a free platform, and the voice of the ecclesiastical bigots and priest-ridden slaves rings out in perfect harmony with that of the liberty-loving children of nature. All important questions are discussed, and it is only by the presentation and careful study of both sides that truth is obtained. Long may the club survive!

About two months ago a society was organized under the name of the People's Reading Room and Library Association. It was with the greatest of difficulty that this association was organized, owing to the strongly opposing sentiments of the church; but, through the persistent efforts of a few of our most energetic and enthusiastic Liberals, we now hav a library of about five hundred volumes of the very best literature, which is frequented by two and three hundred men per day. We also hav a lecture hall joining the reading-room, in which is given a scientific lecture every Saturday evening. The lectures are generally short, followed by a discussion, in which everyone has a right to speak his or her honest opinions. These lectures and discussions are enlivened by instrumental and vocal music, which renders the evening quite enjoyable.

This association is undoubtedly a great benefit to this city, and in time will be one of the central features of the intellectual field.

Many young men who spend six evenings on the street, or in some den of vice and shame, and the seventh at church, may here, each and every evening, find open doors and a hearty welcome to the silent, though beneficial companionship of the most intellectual men and women of our age. And many women, too, who hav no means of educating themselvs at home, may, by feeling free to visit such a room, filled with intellectual food, become better qualified to make good wives, good mothers, and good citizens.

Now, I wish to say to my friends and to all who are interested in the cause of humanity and the elevation of our present corrupt condition of society, that here is a golden opportunity to lend your aid. Any good books, pamphlets, or reading matter of any kind will with pleasure be received at this reading-room at any time.

We cannot do too much toward the advancement of a cause like this, and I think it one in which our young people should feel the deepest interest. The shadow of superstition has too long darkened our pathway, and now, when an opportunity presents itself, let us step out into the light of reason and justice, and beat down these ecclesiastical monsters with the sword of free thought, free speech, and free press.

Any books or papers may be safely addressed to the People's Free Reading Room, 171 Second street, Portland, Ore.

I may write more concerning this reading-room in the future. Hoping to hear of liberal donations from our friends, I remain,

Very respectfully, NETTIE A. OLDS.

P.S.—What has the editor to say?

[It will be seen by the above that a good work is being done in East Portland, Ore. We hope all who can will aid in the good cause by forwarding the right kind of reading matter to the People's Free Reading Room. We are pleased to hear from Nettie once more, and proud to note her progress. —ED. C. C.]

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

The New Thought (Chicago) says: "It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw. . . . To state the whole thing in the language of another, the first book shows what a heaven is coming on this earth after it shall have passed through the necessary discipline, and the other books show what a hell of a time we have to get there."

The Chesaning Argus (Chesaning, Mich.) says: "It is one grand sublime poem . . . a perfect history in blank verse of the social and religious struggles of our earth, and would be good reading for those who have been interested in 'Looking Backward.'" Describing Book 6 it says: "This chapter will be found especially interesting to ladies."

The Phrenological Journal (New York) regards it as equal to the great epics of a hundred years ago or more.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," says: "I have read it with much interest. I am in entire sympathy with its spirit of boundless faith in human development."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says it is one of the significant indications of the signs of the times.

The Nationalist, of Boston, considers its style as equal to Milton's, and says it "engages the reader's attention with the first line and keeps it engrossed until the final word."

Brick Pomeroy's Advance Thought (N. Y.) says: "It contains much to benefit humanity."

A great tract will be desolated and innumerable cities and towns ruined, but the corruptness of the legislature makes it probably impossible to avert the disaster.

'LISH IS PERSUADED TO EAT BREAD.

And it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and she constrained him to eat bread. And so it was, that, as oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.—2 Kings iv, 8.

PIETY and conformity to them that like,
Peace, obesity, allegiance, to them that like.
I am he who tauntingly compels men, women, nations,
Crying, Leap from your seats and contend for your lives! —Walt Whitman.

I FOUND Christians all at variance about these doctrins, unable to agree as to what the revelation of God really revealed. I found that many scholars doubted the genuinness and authenticity of the gospels, and all the probabilities seemed to me to be on their side. The Dutch school of criticism gave a satisfactory explanation of the Bible as a compilation of Hebrew literature. Science, humanity, and reason were opposed to tradition; and I gave up tradition.—Robert C. Adams.

Is it not to the purpose here to remark, that what has been blasphemy in one country has often been piety in another? Suppose a Tyrian merchant landed at the port of Canope; he might be scandalized by seeing an onion, a cat, or a goat, carried in procession; he might speak indecorously of Isheth, Oshireth, and Horeth; he might express his opinion at supper, or even sing some song in which the Tyrian sailors made a jest of the Egyptian absurdities. He might be overheard by the maid of the inn, whose conscience would not suffer her to conceal so enormous a crime; she would run and denounce the offender. The tribunal of the shoens, or shotim, would condemn the Tyrian blasphemer to a dreadful death, and confiscate his vessel. Yet this merchant might be considered at Tyre as one of the most pious persons in Phœnicia.—Voltaire.

THE more confident you are on just grounds of being in the right, the more fearlessly ready should you be to hear all that can be urged on the other side.—Whateley.

WE liv in the midst of religious machinery. Many mechanics at piety, often only apprentices and slow to learn, are turning the various ecclesiastical mills, and the creak of the motion is thought the voice of God.—Theodore Parker.

No invaders ever found patriots so desperate as a man who attacks a prejudice finds the peaceful possessors of its realm. Error livs in the hearts of its subjects; it is the most venerated and beloved of monarchs.—Lord Lytton.

O PLACE! O form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! —Shakspere.

OUR opinions are but running streams, flowing in various ways; but truth and justice are ever the same and permanent, and our opinions break about them as the waves round a rock, while they stand firm forever.—Fortnightly Review.

BEWARE of a nominal acquiescence in certain alleged truths, because you hav been taught them in your infancy, or because they are the established opinions of those with whom you are connected. . . . It is the part of a well-regulated mind not only to know the truths, but to know the grounds on which they are believed to be true.—Abercrombie.

THE Swiss people present to the political philosopher the unexpected and most remarkable social phenomenon of a people eminently moral in conduct, yet eminently irreligious; at the head of the moral state in Europe, not merely for absence of numerous or great crimes, or of disregard of right, but for ready obedience to law, for honesty, fidelity to their engagements, for fair-dealing, sobriety, industry, orderly conduct, for good government, useful public institutions, general well-being, and comfort; yet at the bottom of the scale for religious feeling, observances, or knowledge, especially in the Protestant cantons, in which prosperity, well-being, and morality seem to be, as compared to the Catholic cantons, in an inverse ratio to the influence of religion on the people. . . . It is a very remarkable social state, similar, perhaps, to that of the ancient Romans, in whom morality and social virtue were also sustained without the aid of religious influences.—Laing.

it seems, must with man come up from the earth, and if at death it passes from the body into space, then by this process the earth would diminish as long as man existed upon it. But this may be a law of nature. Then it is said or believed by learned men that the earth is continually increasing in bulk or weight by condensation or solidification of invisible matter attracted to it. Whatever views we may entertain concerning these things, it is certain that we are as yet but babes in the way of learning pertaining to the invisible forces of nature.

MR. EDITOR: Should you think the inclosed notice of the death of my son worthy I would be glad to hav it appear in the grand old TRUTH SEEKER.

I hav been watching both THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Investigator for some definit reply of the postmaster-general to your and the Investigator's attempt to get an honest decision in relation to the mailability of the so-called Holy Bible.

Now allow me to suggest the idea of publishing in pamphlet or some other form the chapters of the Bible containing the vile and filthy language. I think it would force him to a point where his holiness would hav to speak. If a book containing this holy filth could or would be allowed to go through the mails, I do not know of any book that ought not to go through in the mails just the same. I am opposed to all indecent and vile prints being sent over the land by mail or otherwise, no matter from what source they come. If I was able (as I once was) I would bear the expense of the publication alone, and present it to the two holies—Comstock and the postmaster-general. I think that would bring them to their senses. I would giv the book some high-sounding title. "Filth from the Holy Bible" would do, I think. But I am poor now, and having passed the seventy-fifth milestone in the rough journey of life, battling for truth, free thought, and free speech, I must be content.

G. W. SKINNER.

DIED.—At Colorado Springs, Col., May 7, 1891, of la grippe followed by pneumonia, George Skinner, Jr.

He had reached and passed the midway milestone in the journey of life. Death had no terrors for him, life had few joys. His only regret was for his aged father and mother and sister Maud. He welcomed death as a release from suffering. He did not fear to go, to take the welcome messenger by the hand, to tread the way unknown and distant, and bid farewell to father, mother, brother, and sisters. Hand in hand with his best of friends, death, he crossed the narrow channel that divides the mysteries of life from the sterner mysteries of death. He has left us standing on the narrow isthmus of time, between the great gulfs, the past and future, soon to follow him. He died as he lived, free from all superstition, a noble, manly man. But he has gone and left us. My household bond is broken, the thread has parted, the web is marred. He suffered no pain, no convulsions, only a deep, dreamless sleep settled calmly over his heart, eye, and brain. He was buried, as he often wished to be, where the sad, slow music of the wailing pines will continually vibrate around and about him in his lowly bed.

Maud writes that she left him to be guarded by the snow-crowned Rockies, and I know that as long as earth exists they will faithfully guard him. Here we leave him to slumber in his grave forever.

MR. EDITOR: I am now fifty-five years old. I am in life's decline. The infirmities of old age are creeping on. I grew up between the plow handles on a backwoods farm, and educated myself by my own efforts after I became a man. I am now running a little backwoods farm and supporting a little family with my own individual labor, and hav not time to write for the press. I was born a thinker, and Free-thinker, with an intense thirst for knowledge. I hav always been a close and discriminating observer, a close student of nature and of books. My mind was never satisfied with partial knowledge, but desired to solve mysteries and to go to the bottom of any subject which I took up for study, and not to be deceived or humbugged. I hav studied nature, science, and theology as much as my limited means and time would admit, and feel it to be a duty to giv, while I can, to your family of truth seekers the benefit of what I hav learned, or of what I think I hav learned, and to submit my ideas to the test of free criticism. I long since formed a resolution never to espouse any cause which could not stand the test of free discussion before the people.

I hav found nature too vast for my comprehension. She extends beyond the reach of my perceptiv faculties and my comprehension both in minuteness and grandness; but when nature is reduced to ultimate analysis, according to the best lights that we possess her constituent parts may be expressed with three words—spirit, matter, motion. The only spirit known to us, discoverable by our senses or the appliances of science, is what we call electricity and magnetism. This mysterious, subtil force is not perceptible to our senses. We only know that it is, because we can perceive its influence upon material bodies. This subtil force is believed to be infinit; to be associated with every material atom, molecule, mass, and organism; it fills the same space and at the same time with material bodies, and will jump or fly through space from one material body to another, and flows through dense material with more facility than it does through rare material. Now, as we cannot go to the bottom of matter to find out what it is, we cannot affirm that electricity is not matter, but its known characteristics seem to indicate that it is not matter, and if it is not spirit there is nothing known to us which is entitled to that name.

A God, or deity, has been inferred from the phenomena of nature, and it is now well-nigh a settled fact that what we call electricity and magnetism produce all the phenomena. Heat and light play their part, but they are only sensible manifestations to us of electrical or chemical action. Heat and light are sensible manifestations of the oscillatory motion of material molecules, and electricity is the motor. Now, my conclusions are (and if I had the time and space I could produce much evidence to sustain them), that what we call electricity and magnetism is all the force, all the intelligence, all the deity, Ghost, and soul that there is. That instead of spirits there is one universal Spirit which animates and controls every material organism, and that I am only one of its organized batteries through which it works, and that when I pass through that stage called death the spirit will not be dead, extinct. It will only cease to circulate through my nervous system, and will return to the great Theo as a drop of water returns to the ocean. And my condition after death will be just the same as before birth.

CEDAR FALLS, IA., May 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just had a revelation. It has this night been revealed to me that such men as D. M. Bennett, Moses Harman, Watts, Remsburg, Jamieson, R. G. Ingersoll, yourself, and others, are the true followers of Jesus; that such men as J. Cook, Crosby, Braden, and Talmage are the embassies of satan (evil); that the churches are the temples of the devil, and that the aristocratic church-members are the very class Jesus denounced when he was alive. He beheld Jerusalem and wept over it on account of its cruelty and wickedness. This was exactly my case with Cedar Falls on the 15th of this month, when I learned that they had arrested and imprisoned a poor old one-legged man for selling lead pencils on the street without paying a (tariff) license of $5 a day. And following the advice of Jesus, I visited the prisoner and found him in a dungeon that is a disgrace to civilization. The building is not very nice on the outside, but on the inside I found it filthy almost beyond imagination. Of course I had to look through the grates and could not see the vermin, but the poor one-legged man on the inside said the blankets were so filled with vermin (lice) and they bit him so that he could not sleep. There were no vessels furnished by the city, and the prisoners for a long time had been compelled to use the floor for an outhouse. This is what he said, and from what I could see through the grates, I believed it to be true. I then went to the leading merchants, to the lawyers, and other prominent men of the city, men that are willing to take my word in business matters, and even gave me a letter of recommendation as being in every way reliable (a specimen of which I will giv you below), and asked them (perhaps fifty of them) if they were ever inside of their city prison. They all answered, No, they knew nothing of the condition of the inside. And some thought the building itself was a disgrace to the place. I then told them the condition of the inside, and asked them to go with me and see for themselvs. I should hav included in this catalog the mayor, city attorney, chairman of the city council, manager of both of the English papers, and also two ex-mayors of the city. I begged of them to go and examin the place, but was only told that it was none of their business, and many of them told me that I had better mind my own business. I will venture the assertion that these men are all church-members, and that they are a fair specimen of the church-members generally.

Be it known that Cedar Falls is the town where I hav been stoned, egged, and spit on; threatened with hanging, and the insane asylum, because I dared to differ from the majority with regard to theology and the cruel treatment of man under the name of law.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND.

STILLINGS, MO., April 12, 1891.

MY DEAR FRIEND: The length of my letter will be my excuse for not answering yours sooner. You seem to think that I am lost unless I speedily change my opinion upon religion—that the great, good, and merciful God who made me will destroy me. My friend, giv yourself no uneasiness upon that score. Did God not know when he created me that I would not believe the inspiration of the Jewish Bible; that I would not believe in the divinity of Christ; also that I would not believe that the author of all this universe would create a poor miserable being in this world for the sole purpose of torturing him in some other? And, my friend, do you not know that I can in no way alter my belief? I believe a thing or I do not believe in spite of myself. I hav no control over my belief. I hear the evidence and I believe or I do not believe, and I cannot help it. So I am not responsible. I may change my opinion, but it will depend upon evidence; I cannot change it at will.

You say there is just as much evidence, and men hav just as much reason to believe the Bible as any other history, and that thousands of people hav believed it for hundreds of years. I am surprised at you. The Bible is no history. History deals in events of nations and happenings among men; and accounts considered true and historical are always corroborated by contemporary evidence. History has nought to do with the supernatural, while the Bible writer revels in the supernatural, the grotesque, and the miraculous, and is not corroborated by evidence sufficient on which to base a belief. The Jews, the very people who are said to hav been eye-witnesses of the miracles performed by Jesus, did not believe that he was divine. They did not believe that he performed miracles or that he arose from the dead. The very people among whom it is said that he wandered for twenty-five or thirty years, and performed his wondrous works, looked upon him as an impostor. The four writers who giv their respectiv narrativs of Jesus all disagree as to some of the most important events of his life. As to the place and time that certain events are said to hav happened and miracles to hav been performed, there is positivly no harmony among the four writers. And all the accounts of miracles performed hav never been accepted as natural events. They are looked upon as outside of the ordinary course of nature. The performer of miracles is looked upon as being supernatural, the writer of them as being inspired, and there is not a particle of evidence of either.

As to the fact that people hav believed the Bible being evidence of its inspiration, it is absurd and foolish. Thousands of people hav lived and died firmly believing that there is but one God and Mohammed is his prophet. About three hundred million of people to-day believe that the Koran is the inspired word of God. Is that any evidence to you of the truth of the Mohammedan religion? Millions of Buddhists hold as tenaciously to their religion as do the Christians. And here at home, what of the followers of Joseph Smith? A great many people hav believed that Smith was an inspired prophet, and how is it that you do not believe in Mormonism? A few years ago people believed in witches, and so firm were they in that belief that a great number of innocent people were burnt as witches. And yet I don't think you believe in witchcraft.

I do not think that there ever was an insane theory bred in the disordered brain of fanatics in any age but what had followers, no matter how absurd and foolish it might be. Some people must be led, and they will follow, no matter where. So if this is a reason why you believe the Christian religion the true one, you hav the same reasons to believe the same of all other religions.

All unbelievers recant on their death-beds and die in fear, say you. I am sorry that you hav so long been hoodwinked by priests. Paine seems to be the one singled out and comes in for the most calumny and abuse. All priests and religious fanatics failed a few years ago to furnish any evidence that Paine recanted on his death-bed. All could slander the dead; none could furnish evidence enough to get the one hundred dollars in gold offer d by Colonel Ingersoll for one particle of evidence that Paine recanted or that Voltaire did not pass away as calmly as the coming of the dawn. Why do the preachers, priests, and fanatics talk of Paine and Voltaire? Why do they not tell you that D. M. Bennett, Charles Bradlaugh, Courtlandt Palmer, and a host of others recanted? Simply because they know better. There are too many living witnesses that those great unbelievers fell asleep without believing in the doctrin of eternal pain. The clergy can lie about the death of Paine or Voltaire, and their lies are believed by people who take no trouble to investigate the facts for themselvs, because the deaths of those two men are shrouded in the shadowy mists of the past. It is very likely that the clergy will claim one hundred years from now—if there is any clergy—that Bennett and Bradlaugh died most miserable deaths; that they prayed, sang psalms, and saw weird and hideous sights, ghostly visions of devils eager to get possession of their souls. There has always been a superstitious notion among men that in death the vail is rent asunder and the dying are enabled to see the future. The mutterings and vagaries talked by the enfeebled, diseased, delirious, and irrational are looked upon by the ignorant as wisdom and a foresight into the future that in their most healthy and rational moments they were deprived of. How childish this idea! In what way can the dying know more than the living? In the healthiest, happiest moments of all man's existence is when the mind is f eest from shadow. It is then that it is the most activ. While all know that a disease of the body more or less impairs the mind. Must we go to the dying for evidence of a future existence, for evidence of a world of happiness and a world of everlasting pain? How vague and unsatisfactory must such evidence be to the living—evidence obtained during the pain and horror of dissolution from lips that quiveringly utter half-formed, incoherent words of no meaning, from sightless eyes that gaze as they swim in death on nothing, while nervous hands wander aimlessly through empty air as if in search of one more tender clasp of those they love, while with sobs of grief and wails of almost broken hearts the loving ones cry aloud and seemingly struggle with death to hold their darling back from the dark and misty shadowy realms of the unknown. A time, indeed, for Christian evidence! And the Christian is certainly welcome to the consolation he derives from such scenes. The testimony of the dying crazed by pain and suffering is no evidence only to the most ignorant. No one ever knew of an unbeliever of true and honest convictions ever recanting. There are, no doubt, some men claiming to be unbelievers, who are not, and who fear the approach of death. They fawningly hug their idol whom they hav pretended to cast off, but they are not and never were unbelievers in the old Jewish book of fables a single day in their lives—just as hundreds pretend to believe the Bible and do not believe one word of it. The orthodox Christian has nothing but contempt for the man who dares to deny the truth of his Bible. He keeps aloof from the depraved Infidel in life, but on the approach of death he will hover over him like a hungry wolf or devouring vulture, and will torture and twist every utterance of the dying into prayers and recantations.

My friend, you hav been imposed upon by designing men. Take a resolution that you will not believe everything that a priest or preacher tells you—that you will investigate these things for yourself. Read Paine's "Age of Reason" and you will not believe that he recanted. Read your Bible as you would read any other book and you will not be so shocked after all to know that there are people in this world who will not believe that God is a monster, that all cruelties and crimes recorded in the Bible are his commands, that he sits smiling in heaven while millions suffer all the tortures of the damned in a world of everlasting pain.

Yours truly, JASPER BRADSBURY.

Parental Authority.

I was very much interested in reading an article entitled "Two Types of Firmness" in the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and in the illustration the author gave.

I hav often enjoyed reading Miriam's essays to the Children's Corner, but could not resist the temptation to criticise her method of punishing "Master Tom" for disobeying his father. She says: "Had I been the father and he still persisted in staying out, when he got ready to come in he would find the door fastened against him. He would certainly lose the satisfaction of sleeping in my second-best live-geese feather-bed that he is so fond of occupying. He could stay in the yard, or go into the barn and stay with the cattle. In the morning, if he should come sneaking into the house for his breakfast he could hav it only on these conditions—by asking my pardon for his disobedience, and promising to mind me like a good boy in the future. And that is the way I would train Master Tom."

Now, that seems to me a very poor way to correct a boy and bring him up to hav the proper affection for his parents. In the first place, I think the father was the most to blame. I do not think he had any business whatever to speak to his son in that tone. If he had told Tommy why he wanted him to come in, he would never hav been answered in that insolent way. When I hear of parents, guardians, or teachers complaining of disrespect from boys or girls, I always come to the conclusion that it has been provoked by their irritableness, or the example has been set by their elders in some way or other. I hav seen some children that are quiet, orderly, and as well behaved as one could wish them to be. And it is always followed up by their parents never scolding, or fault-finding, and ordering them around. Consequently, they do not hav the trouble that other parents hav who are forever punishing and correcting their children. And such children are generally found "out nights," insolent to their teachers and friends, selfish to their school-mates, and making themselvs disagreeable wherever they are.

I will giv the following illustration for Miriam's benefit: A lady of my acquaintance gave her little son permission to join some other boys spinning tops. He had not been out long when she called for him to come in. Like Master Tom, he demurred, and the mother, possessing that type of firmness so admirable in Miriam's eyes, came out armed with the "rod of chastisement," and with a "I'll see whether I am to be obeyed or not young man," proceeded to administer a castigation to her little son for not coming in when she wished, to relieve her of the care of her little infant whose existence her little boy had nothing to do with. That boy is noted for his insolence and mischievous disposition, and his mother is forever correcting him.

Such cases are so common, and people, while telling what they would do, never stop to think of the cause of it. It all springs from the popular error that children are under obligations to their parents. For my part I never could see where the obligation came in. Were the children ever consulted about their opinion when they were brought into existence? Do you suppose the parents ever thought of the pain and misery that helpless little infants would hav to go through as they held them in their arms? It certainly does not look much like it. In regard to what I hav just said, I agree with Mr. Pentecost. But I would not go so far as he did, to say that the obligation was entirely on the parents' side. For there is no mistake but that most parents sacrifice a great deal for their children's sake. Still, they ought not to receive praise for that, for it is plain that it is a purely selfish motiv that prompts it. It seems to me that Miriam's idea of punishing disobedient Tom is not only cruel and unjust but hurtful. To fasten your doors against your son and make him sleep in the yard would, in my estimation, be a thousand times worse than a severe "old-fashioned" whipping would be. It is contrary to the laws of hygiene. The idea of making a boy sleep out of doors, and perhaps take a severe cold, simply because he refused to come in when told to! Had I been the father I would hav given my reasons for wanting him to come in, then, if he wished to stay out, he could. I think if Master Tom had been treated in that manner, I could safely vouch for the proper respect for his parents. It would be better than respect—it would be love. And if parents hav the love and confidence of their children they hav nothing to fear. Be truthful to your child and it will be truthful to you.

Correspondence.

ROCKVILLE, IDA., May 13, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write to the Children's Corner for the first time. I am ten years old, and I am going to school. My studies are reading, spelling, writing, singing, physiology, and geography. The teacher's name is Mr. James F. Smith. I cannot think of anything more to write, so I will close for this time.

From your true little Freethinker,
CHARLES C. CARLTON.

BLOOMDALE, O., May 17, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to you. My papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I go to school and am nine years old. My teacher's name is Mrs. Todd. I am in the Second Reader, and besides study spelling, grammar, writing, and arithmetic. I love to go to school. I love my teacher too. I hav two pet cats; they are very playful. We all hav fun watching them. I must now close.

Your little friend, CLARA GERMANN.

BLOOMDALE, O., May 17, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Seeing the many nice letters in the Corner, I thought I would write one, too.

We take THE TRUTH SEEKER, Freethinker's Magazine, and the Chicago Liberal.

Papa has nearly ten volumes of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and it givs us much pleasure to look over them.

I like George Remsburg's letters; they are very interesting.

I like the idea of starting a children's paper, and think that you could make it so nice and interesting that even those who did not hav children would subscribe for it.

I am thirteen years old, and hav one brother and sister younger than myself. As this is my first letter, I will not make it too lengthy.

Remaining your Freethinker friend,
GUSSIE GERMANN.

COLLINS, NEB., May 16, 1891.

MISS WIXON: I write to let you know that there is a Liberal family away out in western Nebraska.

Father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like to look at the pictures and read the Children's Corner.

This is a beautiful country. We liv on the north side of the North Platte river. We can catch all the fish we want to eat. We caught half a sack full the other day; the largest one weighed four pounds, the smallest one weighed two pounds. We can see Laramie peak from our house. We liv six miles from the Wyoming line.

I hav three sisters. One is older than I am and two younger; the oldest one is eighteen, the other two are eight and ten. I am twelve years old. My two youngest sisters and I go to Sunday-school, because there is no other place to go to. I like to hear the singing. Oh, I am taking up too much of your valuable space, so I will close.

Your Freethinker friend,
MABEL COCHRAN.

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON: I hav been for several years a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and am well pleased with the management of the Children's Corner. I am rejoiced to know that a few children in this country hav not their minds bastiled by Christianity—that is, superstition, ignorance, and hypocrisy. I know, not that my redeemer liveth, but that if every child of America was taught according to your ideas a redeemer would be unnecessary. Now, we need many saviors (Miss Wixons, TRUTH SEEKERS, and the like) in the United States to preserve our children from being contaminated by the orthodoxy of religion. I send you herewith a silly poem about a silly business, which perhaps might cause a laugh for some one of your many young readers of the Children's Corner. If you like, please publish in THE TRUTH SEEKER Children's Corner.

Very truly, EDWIN W. BEECHER.

[Thanks, brother, for kind words. The knowledge that we are accomplishing some good in the world is very gratifying.—ED. C. C.]

PRAYERS OF MY CHILDHOOD.

'Twas ever thus my childhood heard
Our pious parson pray;
He called for rain which never came—
'Twas God's mysterious way!

He asked that God would giv his sun
To us without delay,
And God gave three weeks more of rain—
'Twas his mysterious way.

He 'seeched that all who heard him then
Might not from Christ's fold stray,
But the devil captured half his flock—
'Twas God's mysterious way.

He 'sought that Christ would be with us
Throughout the holy day—
That day his wife did break her arm—
'Twas God's mysterious way.

He prayed for all that's truly good,
He wished to hav his say,
Then a hornet stung him sur le nez—
Oh! God's mysterious way.

He wished to God the Holy Ghost
Would come and with us stay,
But we didn't see it with our eyes—
'Twas God's mysterious way.

EDWIN N. BEECHER.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The autnor is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

The New Thought (Chicago) says: "It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw. . . . To state the whole thing in the language of another, the first book shows what a heaven is coming on this earth after it shall have passed through the necessary discipline, and the other books show what a hell of a time we have to get there."

The Chesaning Argus (Chesaning, Mich.) says: "It is one grand sublime poem . . . a perfect history in blank verse of the social and religious struggles of our earth, and would be good reading for those who have been interested in 'Looking Backward.'" Describing Book 6, it says: "This chapter will be found especially interesting to ladies."

The Phrenological Journal (New York) regards it as equal to the great epics of a hundred years ago or more.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," says: "I have read it with much interest. I am in entire symcathy with its spirit of boundless faith in human development."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says it is one of the significant indications of the signs of the times.

The Nationalist, of Boston, considers its style as equal to Milton's, and says it "engages the reader's attention with the first line and keeps it engrossed until the final word."

Brick Pomeroy's Advance Thought (N. Y.) says: "It contains much to benefit humanity."

News of the Week.

A CITIZEN of Gora, Germany, has been sentenced to eight months' imprisonment for saying that his sovereign the prince of Reuss might emigrate to the land of the Hottentots if he desired adulation, but that he (the citizen) would certainly refuse to recognize him as a superior being reigning by the grace of God.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD, the Canadian premier, seems dying.

GLADSTONE advises Samuel Montagu, the philanthropist, to collect the detailed evidence of the barbarity of Russia's Jewish persecution and giv it to the world in such a form as will raise an effectiv public opinion against that country.

THE Russian holy procurator Pobiedonostzeff has refused to see Arnold White, the agent sent by Baron Hirsch to confer as to removing Jews to the colony to be benevolently given them. The procurator is resolved to expel the Jews in as cruel a manner as possible.

A CABLEGRAM says that the anti-Jewish persecution "is now admitted or asserted to be religious persecution. Whoever in Russia, be he a Jew or gentile, is not of the orthodox faith, is anathema. The government of Russia is a hierarchy more intolerant than the papacy, perhaps because it has more power."

M. POBIEDONOSTZEFF, the procurator of the Russian Holy Synod, who is to the Greek Catholic church what the Grand Inquisitor was to the Roman Catholic, has forbidden Jews to observe Saturday as the Sabbath by closing their shops or otherwise, commanded them to work that day, and commanded them to observe Sunday.

PRINCE MESTCHERSKIY, editor of the Russian Grazhdanin, says he prays to heaven that Russia may ever "stand the lowest in all the aspects of popular education."

THE pope, on being informed by Vicar-Apostolic Glorieux of Idaho of the freedom given Catholics there, ejaculated, "God will bless the people inspired by sentiments of justice and liberty."

THE American Medical Association will not send delegates to the 1893 International Medical Congress at Rome unless friendly relations are by that time restored between Italy and America.

A DISPATCH from Poland, which land Russia is trying to convert from Roman to Greek Catholicism, says that it is no uncommon thing to see a procession of Roman Catholic peasants lashed into an Orthodox Greek church through lines of fierce Cossacks.

CATHERINE KINSELLA slipped on the ice in front of the Church of our Savior, Brooklyn, N. Y., last winter, and broke her leg. She sued the church for damages, alleging that the church authorities had allowed water to flow through an open leader to the gutter and freeze. Justice Pratt, in the supreme court May 21st, gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that the church was a religious corporation, and not liable for the negligence of its servants.

THE pope's encyclical on labor treats of wages, hours, female and child labor, arbitration, etc., and in general essays to draw under the church's patronage the reforms which she took no interest in at the start but now sees are to become popular. Sanitation of factories is commended, while it is notorious that the church was for centuries an opponent of sanitation as a rival of her faith, prayer, and miracle cures. Most of the encyclical is vague, meaningless stuff. It concludes with the declaration that human efforts are impotent without the concurrence of the church.

A CASE in test of the power to debar immigrants to Utah and Mormonism will be made of Marie Haselman, bound from Germany to Logan, Utah, where she has a sister. She is unmarried, but says if she had a husband she would not object to his having other wives. Her parents are believers in polygamy. She says that "the Bible teaches her that Mormonism is God's faith," and that "the Bible tells us that the great men of old had more than one wife." Merely for these statements of belief, and for no crime, the immigrant commission hold her at New York.

And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught him by the feet: but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her: and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.—2 Kings iv, 27.

DESTROY the churches? No, let them be the grand lecture-rooms, enforcing morality, humanity, and education by exposition of the glorious and fast revealing facts of nature, upon which alone they rest, and which supply the only lasting incentiv to their culture. Let Sunday be the great day of mental instruction and elevating diversion to the toiling millions, in Sunday-schools, churches, libraries, art galleries, fields, and woods.—Robert C. Adams.

THE more we see of the world, the more we see it abounding in contradictions and inconsistencies. . . . Men who make a vow of poverty, gain in consequence an income of about two hundred thousand crowns; and, in virtue of their vow of humility, they become absolute sovereigns.—Voltaire.

RELIGIOUS wars and persecutions hav always proved extremely detrimental to industry. The expulsion of the Jews and Moors from Spain, and of the Huguenots from France, were perhaps the most severe blows ever directed against the industry of either country; while the nations which on these or similar occasions were wise enough to receive the fugitivs reaped an immediate and enormous advantage.—Lecky in Hist. of Rationalism.

THE truth is, that while laboring for the destruction of absolute power in the spiritual order, the [Protestant] religious revolution of the sixteenth century was not aware of the true principles of intellectual liberty. It emancipated the human mind, and yet pretended still to govern it by laws. In point of fact it produced the prevalence of free inquiry; in point of principle it believed that it was substituting a legitimate for an illegitimate power. It had not looked up to the primary motiv, nor down to the ultimate consequences of its own work. It did not know or respect all the rights of human thought; at the very moment that it was demanding these rights for itself, it was violating them toward others.—Guizot's History of Civilization.

MEN do not will according to their reason, but reason according to their will.—Fichte.

THE phrases men are accustomed to repeat incessantly end by becoming convictions, and ossify the organs of intelligence.—Goethe.

TRUTH is truth, because it is truth, not because anybody says it is truth; and if it be truth, it will stand any and all tests.—D. G. Thompson.

MAN ought to hav pride or shame enough to blush at being . . . imposed upon, and when he feels his proper character he will.—Paine.

THE Bible shows that the primitiv man's guesses at the riddle of existence, however natural to an ignorant age, and however useful as a working hypothesis to the simple patriarchs and peasants of those far-off times, were pregnant with all sorts of errors, which it has taken many centuries to correct.—Arthur B. Moss.

THERE is no counting with certainty on the justice of men who are capable of fashioning and worshiping an unjust divinity; nor on their humanity so long as they incorporate inhuman motivs in their most sacred dogmas; nor on their reasonableness while they rigorously decline to accept reason as a test of truth.—John Morley.

IN this planet of ours Nature has not trusted our welfare to the whims of tricksy spooks, but has endowed our own minds with the faculty of ascertaining and improving the conditions of that welfare; and the time can not come too soon when well-directed labor shall be recognized as the only prayer ever answered to the inhabitants of this earth.—Professor Oswald's Bible of Nature.

ALL waits or goes by default till a strong being appears;
A strong being is the proof of the race and of the ability of the universe,
When he or she appears materials are overaw'd,
The dispute on the soul stops,
The old customs and phrases are confronted, turn'd back, or laid away.
—Walt Whitman.

Notes and Clippings.

In Holder's life of Darwin, just out, there is, says the New York Post, one statement to which serious exception must be taken. The author says: "He [Darwin] was in theory an Agnostic, in practice an orthodox Christian of the broadest type" (p. 148). Darwin, corrects the Post, was a noble example of ethical perfection, but that he was a Christian, much less an orthodox Christian, in any legitimate sense of the term, cannot be truthfully asserted.

Europe is literally aghast at the Jewish persecution being brutally wrought before its eyes. There has been such a wholesale application of the censorship over the telegrams and letters from Russia in the last ten days that we know only vaguely what is now going on; but what we know already exceeds in its terrors the worst that could hav been imagined. Apparently these wild, primitiv hates and passions which hav been fomenting every stratum of the Russian social and political structure for years hav burst out at last beyond human control, and are sweeping the whole nation from the czar down to the moujik fiercely forward toward a tragic crisis. All that can be guessed is that the outcome may make as grimly unique and awful a mark upon the history of this century as the French Revolution did on the last. That strange creature, Alexander III., will not go to Copenhagen any more, they say, nor hold communication with Western Europe.

More important than all, says the Sun, in considering the theological confusion now prevailing among the churches, the question of the authority of the scriptures as an infallible revelation from God has now been raised to agitate and confuse the minds of Protestants generally. Dr. Briggs presents a theory of the Bible utterly opposed to the distinctivly Protestant view, and yet he claims that he is altogether within the lines of its orthodoxy. Though he propounds the Roman Catholic doctrin as to the scripture, he calls it Protestant. Obviously, if the Bible contains human errors along with divine and infallible truth, it needs an infallible interpreter to show its infallibility, for otherwise each individual can accept or reject what he chooses, and theology has no indisputable foundation. The Bible, as it is, did not drop down from heaven. It is made up of writings selected from a mass of religious teaching and history by church councils, whose discrimination must hav been infallible, if the books selected are infallible. Consequently Dr. Briggs and his school of biblical critics hav been the chief creators of the present confusion of Protestantism, for Protestantism is based on the Bible alone, as opposed to church authority and infallibility. They are leading toward Rome or toward the religious philosophy which rejects the scriptures as an infallible source of divine authority.

Captain Porter of the United States Secret Service has returned from southern Illinois, where within the past week he has put behind the bars the preacher-counterfeiters, George Vancil and Jeremiah Holmes. Jerry Holmes was a counterfeiter and a general outcast in Duquoin, Ill. The Rev. George Vancil was a Baptist minister. The men met one night under the stars and Vancil preached a sermon to Holmes to such good effect that he professed repentance. He fell on the ground, and with his hands toward heaven declared he would forever renounce his ways, and he afterward said that he had been converted like Paul on his way to Damascus. Holmes turned preacher and became the pastor of a Campbellite congregation in the country near Duquoin. It was not long after this that Holmes gave Vancil some counterfeit money, and Vancil passed it. Later, Holmes gave him some more, and he passed that upon some members of a traveling circus. This Vancil confessed, but he declared that he took the money and continued the acquaintance of Holmes for the purpose of learning his secrets and exposing the gang of which Holmes was the leader. "It makes no difference where this lands me," said Vancil after he had been landed in a cell, "because I hav been serving God and my country at the same time. Serving God in preaching his word and my country in taking this money from those sinners that I might finally bring them to justice." Jerry Holmes, who made the coin, and who was captured a week ago, held religious services in jail last Sunday, and had all his fellow-prisoners shouting for glory. He preached a regular fire and brimstone sermon. He was still possessed of the true spirit, he said, and glad that he had confessed his sins, as they were a great weight off his mind.

The Russian prince Mestsherski recently declared in the Grashdanin: "All popular education is an evil." This opinion has been indorsed with unusual unanimity by official circles in St. Petersburgh, especially in consequence of the prevalent conviction that radical, if not revolutionary, ideas are invariably the result of teaching the common people too much. In accordance with these prejudices, the general governors of Kiew, Volhynia, and Podolia issued instructions to the provincial police some eight months ago that all home instruction of children should be subjected to a strict censorship. The remarkable manner in which this censorship was conducted has just been illustrated in the manufacturing city of Uladovka in Podolia. The chief of police proclaimed that from now on all workingmen were prohibited from instructing their children at all, and in order that he might test easily the fulness of their obedience to his order, he commanded that the workingmen's children should not be kept in the house, but sent into the streets, where he, in passing, might observe their occupations. This, however, was not enough. He announced that no educational books or tracts should be kept in the house. He made sure of the observance of his new order by having all his men turn in and search every workingman's house in the city. Wherever educational matter was discovered, or children were found studying, a full report of the details of the offense was made, and the books or other educational materials were confiscated. These unprecedented proceedings hav been too much for a part even of the gagged Russian press. "Who has given the police the right to confiscate private property thus?" inquires the Wedjejad. "Who has sent them into private houses to make searches? He is unknown to us. The result has been that in Uladovka all education of the young has been abolished, the parents hav lost their heads, and the children are in the streets."

God and Religion.

In the more common accepted meaning of the word religion, the idea of some kind of a god is understood, and without a god as a basis there would be no religion, consequently a religionist who makes a profession of any kind of devotional worship must hav some conception of, and belief in, a God, and a knowledge of such an idealistic being tells at once what their mode of worship is. To be a religionist we must first know, or at least believe, there is a God, what kind of God, what he requires of us, how he reveals himself to us, etc. The first question for us to answer satisfactorily to ourselvs, "Is there a God?" is the more difficult to answer, for in arriving at an affirmativ conclusion we must necessarily prove his existence, probable location, the attributes and characteristics of his nature, besides his legal and divine right to control us, to make us happy or miserable, or to giv us a free agency to do as we wish with the consequent evils that accompany such freedom of will.

Personally, I am an Agnostic on the God question, having never seen or heard one, neither hav I seen those who hav, consequently I neither affirm or deny the existence of such a being. I wish, however, to search the records a little and learn all I can of the actuality of such a personage, and will appeal to both history and reason to determin the truth as I may find it. On the historical side of the question, however, I can find little or no evidence of a God, or the need of religious worship, except that found in one or more of the many written or traditional legends of mythology, and to prove such authentic or true in any one particular, as touching the question of deity, would require more time, talent, and search than to prove God from other sources, for neither the Koran, the Five Kings, the Tri-Pitikes, the Vedas, Zendavesta, scriptures, or other of the so-called sacred writings (and each believed to be the original and only true one), tells the same story, or describes God as the same being, or to be worshiped in the same way. A belief in any one or all of them would not prove either true, for belief simply takes possession of the mind when actual knowledge is absent, and as neither of them can be authenticated outside of their own pages (and even then the accounts as given are extremely contradictory and self-condemning), I shall not undertake to prove or disprove the existence of divinity from such an unreliable and contradictory source, but will take nature and reason alone as the only agents of intelligence that can reveal the seemingly hidden mystery.

It would be no argument to say that, because we see much in the beauties of nature that seems designedly perfect, there must necessarily hav been a perfect designer, for the hundreds of imperfections in nature would as readily imply an imperfect designer, and the two, being contradictory terms, could prove nothing. So, also, if there must be a cause for all things, there necessarily must hav been a cause for such cause that produces all things, and the door would be at once opened for unlimited causations, which would prove nothing. One may think matter is eternal, another that only God can be self-existent, yet neither can prove their belief, and leave us still in the dark, as both views are profoundly speculativ and far above the mind of man to understand, or even to conceive of.

It is well enough for the theologian to say that "we see a watch with all its intricate and perfect parts and we know at once that it must hav had a maker, which proves that the world could only hav been created by the hand of a great and divine mechanic who said, 'Let there be light and there was light.'" Yet this proves nothing, for we see a watch and know its maker must hav been a man and we can trace him but to his earthly parents, and we find ourselvs lost and as ignorant of the great first cause as when we started. We could easily account for all the watches in the world by assuming that something first made man and then that man makes the watches. But the question hinges on the cause or the something that first made man, and is what we are seeking to know.

We can mantle ourselvs with the beauties of nature, cover our ignorance with a happy belief, and "praise God from whom all blessings flow," but the loophole of more candid thought brings to our view the intermingled strife, misery, sorrow, and death that the same cause at least allows us to pass through, and we then begin to question the giver of our blessings and doubt his being an all-wise, all-powerful, and all-merciful creator. Anything short of this would be no God at all.

It will not do to say that God has given us all the blessings and that our sinfulness has caused all the sorrow, pain, and death, for certainly God would hav been unmerciful in his dealings to hav caused us to come from inanimate clay to this life knowing that we would be sinful and hav to suffer here, saying nothing of the dogma of eternal suffering hereafter.

Is not the same suffering found in all the animal creation, in a greater or less degree, as seen in man, and can it be that all animal life must pay the penalty of sin to appease the anger of an all-wise, all-powerful, and all-merciful father? Can such be among the characteristics of the God we would worship?

We see a beautiful rivulet of water, our ears hear it as it rushes down the mountain side, we drink of its cooling substance, bathe in its depths, and then conclude that it is our duty to worship the giver as being more than a mortal being. And as we are about to prostrate ourselvs to praise him a Johnstown horror appears to our mind, and what but a moment before appeared so beautiful and full of joy has turned to reckless destruction and the great object of our adoration falls into the abyss of doubt.

Man has ever been seeking to know of the eternal, to learn of his duties and obligations to his creator, and sure it is that no one, however low in the scale of immorality, could wish to detract from deity one iota of divine worth or refuse to pay to him the last tribute of homage due him. How many hav sought in vain and could only find him in their deceptiv imaginations but no real proof of his existence? The sincere devotee often testifies to having found one or more of the many saviors or deities that heathen and Christian mythology has so unexpectedly forced upon their credulity, for which they hav sealed their faith with their own blood—yea, many times hav been the willing instrument in the hands of those higher in authority to pile the burning fagots around the writhing forms of those who hav dared to express a different faith, that only their own should receive support. Sure it is, if God wishes our love and adoration he would make himself known in unmistakable ways, that the most ignorant could not mistake him. Thus far in the lives of men ignorance and fear hav been the authors of all the Gods that hav degraded our earth. And as soon as the more intelligent hav sought to learn the truth of such, the mystic veil has risen and the supposed deities hav fled unseen and unknown. Still we are seeking and wondering why God does not reveal himself, that we may, like the benighted Catholic,

> Stoop ourselvs in ignorance low
> To kiss the pontiff's dirty toe.

We push forward to search the world in endless space from north to south, high and low; everything, everywhere, is searched in vain for the Gods in hiding. We descend to the lower strata of formational earth, seek the protoplasms of the earliest existing epoch of time, until at last we explore the hidden mysteries of what may possibly be found to be a spiritual nature, the psychical laws that may govern mind in its relation to matter, and this is where explorers are found to-day, searching the depths of psychology in hope to find some clue of the great first cause of creation. If this fails, where can we further look?

O God, wilt thou reveal to us thy hiding? Open the dark recesses of our ignorant minds and let the divine light of thy wisdom shine upon us. We would know thee that we may better adore thee. Reveal to us thy love, and teach us to love thee in return. We would be worthy and obedient, but can not worship that which we know not exists.

Reveal thyself to us, that we may love thee. Art thou a being of form, of personality or individuality, having either a mental or material substance or existence, with power to alleviate our suffering condition, and wilt not do it? Help us to pray in such a way as will meet thy approbation, that we may feel thy love and know thy mercy.

How many such prayers hav been offered by humble applicants, and yet God secretes himself behind the curtains of mystery, and our faith and hope still lack confirmation. How little man actually knows of God, a future, or even of the present, much less of a spirit that governs the worlds in space! And religious bigots would hav us know less, that they may weld the last link in the chain that binds us to their service and to the relentless curse that lowers us in the scale of mental and scientific development.

What are we to do? Knowing nothing of God or a future, yet many believe in both, and conform to the teachings of dogmatists, obeying priest and prelate, making ourselvs and others miserable, besides substantiating error, only to appease the anger of some supposed God and gain life everlasting—both a myth as far as can be known, and originated in the deceptiv brain of those who would that their fellowmen should bow before them with tithes, as the agents of an unknown.

The better we can do for ourselvs and others, the better and more perfect our happiness. In so doing we get nearer God than in any other way; and if there is a future life awaiting us, the haven of peace will be open, that we may reap the reward of our well-doing. No burning of the fallen wicked; no separating of loved ones; no pearly gates to screen us from those who hav stood by us in our earthly afflictions; no innocent babes in hell looking to heaven for a fond mother's protection; no loving wife to suffer eternal misery while the repentant husband is sheltered beneath the cloak of a crucified redeemer. Away with such idealistic gods and damnable creeds. Let us build up for ourselvs the noblest and grandest God possible for the highest attainments of our mental faculties, and build upon his worth the Golden Rule with wings of charity outstretched to show favor to all, believing ourselvs the agents of reform to deal mercifully with all, from man down to the lowest order of organized living beings.

Follow not the example of religionists of the past, but stand up for liberty of conscience for all, that none shall be shorn of their rights to think and believe as their reason may dictate. Allow no one to think for you and wring from you your manhood and hard-earned shekels, that they may wear the crown in this life that belongs to you. Hav a mind of your own founded upon the best ideas in your possession, and in doing so you will not hav to depend upon myths or the unknowable, but will proudly bear the standard of your own virtues, and hav God revealed within you. A. D. SWAN.

Another Letter from Mr. Heywood.

STATES PRISON, P. O. BOX 100, CHARLESTOWN, MASS., May 23 Y.L. 19.

DEAR MR. MACDONALD: Among the welcome publications that hav reached me here during the last ten months, "Antislavery Reminiscences," by Elizabeth Buffum Chace, and "Reminiscences," by Lucy N. Colman, hav been especially interesting. Mrs. Colman was in Boston in 1878 and 1883 during cases then pending, activ upon the platform, the witness-stand, or wherever else mental liberty needed "standing up to be counted for." Mrs. Chace is now eighty-five years old. From girlhood Bessie Buffum has been alert to assist right and resist wrong. Quaker born and raised, with Lucretia Mott. Mrs. Chace stood for peace in war times, and with Parker Pillsbury and Mrs. Colman sees that free speech needs assertion now as of old, when proslavery censorship tried and failed to get a law to exclude Antislavery opinions from the mails as "incendiary literature." The Peace convention in Boston, March, 1866, was presided over by Adin Ballou, of Hopedale; it adjourned to Providence, and there, in May, completed the organization of the Universal Peace Society, of which Alfred H. Love, of Philadelphia, has been president ever since. Mrs. Chace, Mrs. Love, and I were the committee to prepare a declaration of sentiments and constitution, my draft being, in the main, accepted; and the object of the society, to "remove the causes and abolish the custom of war," then and there stated, still floats on the banner of its purpose. During the Centennial, in 1876, at Philadelphia, Mrs. Heywood, Josephine and Flora Tilton, and I dined with E. M. Davis, an old subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and there met, for the last time, his mother-in-law, Lucretia Mott. She spoke with glowing fervor of the work for peace since 1861, and prophetically foretold struggles for right which were yet to engage attention.

From 1844 to 1861 the Abolitionists were disunionists, favored separation of the states as the best way to avoid war and free the slaves. December 17 1860, Horace Greeley said in the Tribune, "If the Declaration of Independence justified the secession from the British empire of three million of colonists in 1776, we do not see why it would not justify the secession of five million Southrons from the federal Union in 1861. While we deny the right of slaveholders to hold slaves against the will of the latter, we cannot see how twenty million of people can rightly hold ten or even five in a detested union with them by military force." Lincoln did not want war. All the way from Springfield, Ill., to Washington, he was reaching toward New England for one firm hand to join his and say, "No" to bloodshed. Had Garrison and company been men, not Abolitionists merely, peace methods, "an arm of tougher sinew than the sword," would hav accomplished far more for liberty and order than has martial violence. In the conflict of arms chattel bondage went down; but there is far more slavery to-day in these states than before 1861. By piratical tariffs, land monopoly, money monopoly, and the censorship of the press imposed by obscenity statutes, sense of right and spirit of liberty are so far "crushed out" that newspapers are now suppressed and editors imprisoned, yet few even ask the reason why. In the New Yorker, in 1837, Horace Greeley said: "The only security for public liberty is in the absolute and unqualified freedom of thought and expression, confining penal consequences to acts only which are detrimental to the welfare of society. How does the prescription of a man in any way for obnoxious opinions differ from the most glaring tyranny?" Mental freedom is the breath of life to free institutions. Yet now, twenty years, we hav had a post-office inspector of opinions riding free over all the mail routes of the republic, boasting of the numbers of publishers and reformers who hav died under his torturing supervision! Bad as the old proslavery Democracy were, they never succeeded in getting enacted such restrictiv statutes as Republicans now impose on us. Chase, Greeley, Bird, Sumner—almost every old-line Republican—went over to the Democracy because they would not recognize the religio-political banditti that run things in the "grand old party."

A censorship of style, effort to make one "an offender for a word" in debate on morals and physiology, is as unjust, impolitic, and absurd as would be a restriction of religious liberty. A Frenchman undertook to write a book devoid of thought, but failed; even the thought to write without thought, was thought, and he gave it up saying "style is thought." This whole business of censorship is contrary to the creed of Natural Rights, the genius of freedom proclaimed by the Revolutionists of 1776. In all healthy association, thrifty life, truth is between persons, words are bonds; but decoy, falsehood, treachery hav so eaten out the heart of integrity that lying is now "ordered" by a cabinet officer, the postmaster-general, and made "law" by a United States judge! I once heard Emerson say in Music Hall, Boston, in a sermon to Theodore Parker's society, "I hav thought a sufficient measure of civilization is the influence of good women." Among many other women who hav written me here is Mrs. Francis H. Drake, of Leominster, Mass., an old-line antislavery seer, whose husband, John Drake, still living, knew Abner Kneeland, and has been a resolute reformer more than sixty years. Mrs. Drake headed a petition from her town for my release, and is one of the many New England women who stand with Mrs. E C. Stanton, of New York, and Annie Besant, of London, to say that free speech and open-faced action, not decoy clandestinism, "Watch and Ward" vice society fraud, should be law in these states. The Comstock "law," by trying to supervise woman's maternal function by act of Congress, is an ineffable insult to woman's natural right to hold and control her own body-self. In proclaiming Woman's Rights from Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848, where Mrs. Stanton then lived, and the first Woman's Suffrage convention was held, she, Mrs. Mott, Mrs. Chase, Mrs. Colman, and their many later coworkers, asserted the inviolable sanctity of woman's person, which is the soul of domestic order and fruitful sobriety. And yet the vice society vermin, the "Watch and Ward" banditti, by aid of Postmaster-general Wanamaker and Judge Geo. M. Carpenter, now make lewd falsehood "law" for sixty million people to hold me caged here! Mrs. M. S. Wetmore, Oak Grove, Malden, Mass.; Lydia Eve Blackstone, Chester, N. H.; Belle C. Skull, Findley, O; Abbie Knapp, of Michigan; Flora W. Fox, Minnesota; Mrs. D. D. Collins, of Maine, and hundreds of other clear-brained women like Margaret Fuller, Harriet Martineau, George Sand, and Madam de Staël, hav the courage of their sex, and are not likely to be frightened from public defense of liberty, when and where it is denied, because vice society reptils, in religio-political grass, hiss "obscenity."

EZRA H. HEYWOOD.

Prohibition.

I notice an article on Prohibition, by Mr. J. G. Hertwig, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 18th, which I would like to criticise. If a man occupy a strong position he should not offer weak arguments to support it. What he offers upon a subject which has been discussed for two generations ought to bear criticism.

Mr. Hertwig says: "A man, therefore, in the United States may use the gifts of nature for his own benefit and for that of others as he sees fit." This is admitted. But do Prohibitionists admit that the liquor traffic is for the benefit of anybody? On the contrary, they claim to hav piled up proof mountain-high establishing the fact that the traffic is a gigantic curse. This is also admitted by a majority of those who hav written against Prohibition. In all the discussions in THE TRUTH SEEKER on this subject, which hav been going on for years, no dealer in alcoholic beverages has announced his business like a man and attempted to prove that he was engaged in a useful occupation. Why assume the truth of a proposition which is denied by all on the opposit side and by a majority of those on your own side?

Again, says Mr. Hertwig: "The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly decided Prohibition legislation in any state of the Union to be lawful under the American Constitution. Yet its decisions in this respect are at variance both with common sense and the fundamental principles of this free country." That is to say, the anti-Prohibitionists possess all the common sense to the exclusion of all the Prohibitionists and the Supreme Court. That may be so, but would not a little proof make it more evident? The supreme court may err, but the fact that the Prohibitionists hav all the decisions of that court in their favor does not prove conclusivly that they are wrong.

Again I quote Mr. Hertwig: "The Supreme Court, in one of its decisions, says that no man has a natural right to sell spirituous beverages by the glass. Why not? They are exactly like tea, milk, coffee, chocolate, and similar beverages, nothing but liquid food." Mr. S. R. Shepherd, in an article against Prohibition some years ago, said that every glass of liquor contained murder. It is not liquid food, but "liquid damnation," and I can prove it. Exactly like milk? Was Mr. Hertwig raised upon that kind of liquid food? Would he recommend it for infants, generally, before they hav cut their first teeth?

Mr. Hertwig agrees that, "In a free country police regulations can be directed only against nuisances—things that annoy and giv trouble and vexation—either to prevent or abate them." But he contends that spirituous beverages are not nuisances, because they are made out of the best fruits and grains and other useful products of the soil. But they themselvs are not fruits, or grains, or useful products. They are made by a process of rotting. Alcohol is the excrement of an animal, and is no more food than a manure heap.

Then we are informed that "These beverages are frequently called intoxicants." That is curious, too, when he says that they are exactly like milk and tea. Where did they get their bad reputation? Singular it is what chunks of wisdom are thrown down carelessly by the anti-Prohibitionists. By and by we shall hear that fulminating powder is frequently called an explosiv.

Once more he declares that "Drunkenness, a vice and shame, can never be made a lawful excuse for any crime or misdemeanor. On the contrary, a man should be as severely punished for any wrong or violation of law committed while drunk as if he had been perfectly sober." Why did not Mr. Hertwig add that he should be as severely punished if the crime is committed by a person while drunk with tea or chocolate or new milk as if he had been drunk on beer or whisky? He tells us that they are all exactly alike, just liquid food.

Mr. Hertwig says, "Drunkenness may be considered a short insanity." Liquid food just like tea causes short insanity. Under the influence of this short insanity people frequently commit murder. An insane person is not responsible. But for the sake of perpetuating this traffic in liquid food just like milk which produces short insanity, we must play that the insane are responsible. And why? Because if it is long insanity, "the law does not hold the man responsible if he commits crime."

Again, says Mr. Hertwig, "Total abstinence is . . . a good and praiseworthy thing for a man if he feels unable to control himself." Yes, a man should drink until he gets so far gone that he cannot stop, and then he should quit.

One word with S. R. S. (S. R. Shepherd?), who inhabits all Kansas and no particular part of it. (See letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER, April 18th.) Your screed is good, but your statistics are defectiv, owing to ambiguity of terms. Who can draw a line between light drinkers, moderate drinkers, and excessiv drinkers? Your results are too near alike. Only one year average difference between the drunkard and the total abstainer. That is about like the old farmer's statistics on greasing boots. He started with a new pair, greased one often and left the other without greasing. The one he greased lasted one day longer. Selah.

Like God Like Man.

An interesting scene was witnessed in a criminal court in one of the counties of this state, not long since.

A man was to be put on trial for the crime of murder, and the court being organized, the case was called, and a jury was being drawn for the occasion. When the first man was drawn, the prosecuting attorney inquired of the man where he lived, and what was his vocation; also inquired if he belonged to any church. Being told that he belonged to the Baptist church where he lived, he told him to take a juror's seat. Then another man was seen and the same questions were put to him. Being told he did not belong to any church, the attorney says, "You need not be used as a juror in this case," and calls for the next juror. The judge, noting the proceedings, inquires of the officer what was the point he was aiming at, saying he was well acquainted with the man rejected, that he knew him to be a good, moral man, a worthy citizen, a man of good judgment, tender-hearted, and competent for a juror, and insists to know the reason why he objected to him.

The prosecuting attorney then says: "The prisoner at the bar, I believe, is guilty of the charge laid to him, and I am told the proof against him is deficient and circumstantial, and in order to convict him I do not want such men as the one last drawn. Such men are slow to bring a verdict for a death penalty, they are always inclined to lean on the side of mercy rather than a penalty, and in this case, where the proof is weak, the prisoner might go clear; but when you hav a juror who belongs to an orthodox church, and believes in the Christian God, he partakes the attributes of his God and will kill every opportunity."

The judge says: "I do not like your mode of procedure; the man is competent as a juror in this case; let him take his seat as a juror."

It seems this prosecuting attorney was no fool, for he had seen the propensities of those who believed on the Bible God—that life, mercy, and justice were not safe in the hands of such people. That, like their God, they went in for severe punishment as pleasing to their God. This was made manifest not only in the case of Mr. Bennett, but in all cases where a Christian people hav opportunity to punish people they do not love, especially if these people they hav to do with differ with them in religious differences.

And this is the case of Moses Harman. A Bible-believing judge, in order to please his imagined God, and please others who were like himself, and also to gratify personal hate, sentenced a harmless man—a sentence worthy of manslaughter in the second degree. And what is greatly noticeable in this case is, the religious people all over the land rejoice at the severity of Mr. Harman's sentence, and I hav read of those people saying, "Hit him again."

No. A man embracing the Christian religion is not made a better man by it. His temper is not softened thereby. He is less tender-hearted than before, less forgiving, less charitable, looks upon others who differ with him in religious matters with disfavor, delights to call them "sinners," "impenitents," "haters of God," "world's people," "blasphemers," etc., and if they had the power would make all they so dislike "hewers of wood and drawers of water."

Yes, this district attorney said and believed things just as they are. And woe to the man who is to be tried for a misdemeanor if he is to be tried by a religious judge or religious jury.

CARLTON RICE.

Hamilton, N. Y.

Sunday or the Sabbath.

Sunday has become the great day of exhibiting good clothes. It is an outward Sabbath only. Sunday is called the Lord's day, but just what this term means we do not know. Does the Lord own the balance of days, or only the Sunday?

The whole week is man's days; the Lord does not own a day of the week; this is a foolish superstition, about one day being the Lord's. Sunday held by the church is a forgery. We believe in doing what is right on any day of the week. Sunday is only for the glory of the priest, and not for the glory of the Lord. The priest has no right to dictate the man's conduct on Sunday. The first day of the week is no more sacred than the balance of days.

Sunday is a collection-day for the priest. Sunday as a day from rest for toiling and striving, is one of the grandest institutions of man. No hour of time can say to another, "I am holier than thou," and for Sunday to say, "I thank thee, Lord, that I am not as other days are," is only hypocrisy. If we feel like enjoying ourselvs on Sunday, we hav not to get the permission of some one.

The state must also take off the hand of its oppression from the Sabbath. We need no Sunday laws to regulate our conduct on this day. The state has no business to interfere with the exercise of man's liberty as long as he does not infringe upon another's right. We want no ecclesiastical guide-boards on the highways. We do not need a priest to tell us where to go. It is better to enjoy Sunday out of the church than to endure it in the church.

Sunday is oftener profaned by what is called worship than by enjoyment. Sunday should be an open day to every human being. You may search the Bible from the words, "In the beginning," to the "Amen" of Revelation, and you will not find the word Sunday in it.

The dishonest clergy, like a lying nurse, continue to tell their bugaboo stories of an angry God, and their silly dupes, like scared children, are afraid to uncover their heads, or they would at once see that nature nowhere "esteemeth one day above another," and the Sunday of the priesthood is an unmitigated fraud and lie.

The government of the United States is not a theocracy. It is a republic, the Constitution of which guarantees perfect religious liberty, and equality before the law of all its citizens. There is no provision in the Constitution requiring the citizens of the United States to conform to any particular religion, but there are, on the contrary, distinct and unqualified guarantees made to secure the religious liberty of everyone. Sunday is a day of rest in the eyes of the Constitution, but not a day of religious worship. Constitutionally it is everyone's privilege to spend Sunday as he chooses. Sunday laws are a solemn farce and a burning shame. They are a warfare upon the rights of man, in the interest of ancient traditions and modern despotism. Let all persons be unmolested on that day, to seek the enjoyment and kind of rest they may respectivly need, they alone being judges thereof, always provided that no one shall infringe on the equal liberty of any other person. We prize the Sunday as a rest-day. Let the museums, halls of science, public parks, and galleries of paintings open on Sunday to all visitors.

Our Post-Office Mission.

Under the above heading we may group the various sorts of work which the American Secular Union is engaged in at present. Like the Irishman at Donnybrook Fair who, whenever he saw a head, struck at it with his shillalah, so the secretary of the American Secular Union, whenever she notes a head struggling above the general level of indifference to progress, throws in that direction a few pamphlets—not, however, to down that head as the Irishman tried to do with his shillalah, but to help its owner to struggle up still further on to the firm standing-ground of Universal Mental Liberty. Sometimes she receives in reply a grateful letter; occasionally the recipient writes to get blanks to organize an auxiliary, or sends a contribution to the national society; but oftener she never hears from those to whom she sends such pamphlets. Nevertheless, she continues in all faith to sow the good seed in the morning, and at evening to withhold not her hand, for she knows that that seed will, soon or later, germinate, and that it will dispose those in whose brains it does germinate to favorably incline toward state Secularization, if it does nothing more.

Nevertheless, the secretary regrets, more than she can say, the necessity of confining ourselvs to this sort of work, when we ought to be up and doing aggressiv, practical work in the field. But our hands are tied at present. We hav no field secretary, and the board hav agreed not to attempt to appoint any for the rest of the fiscal year. Our appeals to the lecturers in the field—appeals which we hav been making for over a year—hav passed unheeded, save in one instance, where a lecturer did discuss the matter in the papers and announced his intention of attending the Portsmouth congress to help in the matter of coöperation—an intention which he was unfortunately prevented from carrying out. With that solitary exception, the Liberal lecturers hav maintained a discreet silence regarding the American Secular Union, or hav at most spoken of it only to criticise. Plainly, nothing is to be hoped for from them—as even Mr. Stevens, the former secretary of this society, has lately volunteered us the information that he found it utterly impossible to secure their coöperation with the American Secular Union.

This, then, is the situation in which the society finds itself for the few months which must elapse between now and the annual congress. Circumstances hav cut us off from aggressiv field work at present, and we are obliged to confine ourselvs to what I hav ventured to denominate "our post-office mission." Can we make this summer's work tell so effectivly for Freethought and state Secularization that, when we come together at the fall congress, we shall be able to count a far larger following throughout the United States than we hav to-day?

I think we can, if you will one and all help. And this is what I want you to do—you who really care for the advancement of the cause:

First, last, and always, circulate pamphlets—especially "Church Taxation" and "The Bible in Schools." Let every Liberal see if he cannot enlist in the work of state Secularization at least one person this summer. Show your orthodox friend or neighbor the great injustice of exempting church property from taxation; hand him our "Church Taxation" pamphlet, and let him think over it. Then follow this up with "The Bible in Schools" or Remsburg's "Sabbath Breaking," or some more radical pamphlet. If you are faithful and patient in your work, you will find that, by enlisting his sympathies with the American Secular Union, you will hav started him so far on the road to mental freedom, that he will never turn back to superstition; and before you are aware, you will number among your associates one more full-fledged Freethinker. How many of you will do what you can in this direction during the summer months?

Meanwhile, here at the office of the American Secular Union, we shall not be idle during the summer. Wherever we see an opening, we shall insert a little wedge of a leaflet, and press it home with an urgent letter where it seems advisable. If the secretary's hands are upheld by our people as they should be, it will go far toward retrieving the set-backs of "the late unpleasantness," and making the work of the American Secular Union a shining success this year. We need money to pay for printing these pamphlets; and we hope that you will every one respond, with dollars if you can, with dimes or stamps if you can do no more. You know the old nursery rhyme:

Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean
And the pleasant land.

We hope that those of you who hav pledged amounts to the Guarantee Fund will promptly send same to the treasurer, as quite a number of these are now past due. We shall be glad, also, to receive further pledges to that Guarantee Fund; and we would remind our wealthy Liberals of Dr. Westbrook's offer to be one of twenty to giv $100 each, and of the fact that a number hav responded, but that the list of twenty is not yet made up. We would also remind those who do not feel like giving so large an amount, but who would gladly giv several dollars, of Seaborn Kitchens, Sr.'s, proposition to be one of six hundred to giv $5 each. Mr. Kitchens, in the full faith that others would respond, promptly came forward with his $5; and it is to be hoped that his fellow-Liberals will be worthy of that faith which he has placed in their generosity.

To auxiliary societies everywhere we would once more commend the consideration of five-cent quarterly contributions from each of their members for the benefit of the national society. We hav heard from quite a number of our auxiliaries, approving this idea, and promising such contribution; but the largest number are still to be heard from. We should be better pleased, let me here say, if the quarterly dues accompanied the letter approving this plan. Still, the mere approval is something, and shows that our people are moving in the direction of coöperation and organization.

The work grows week by week; would that the funds in the treasury grew likewise! We are doing the best we can with the little money we hav, and are as economical as we know how to be; but we need more pamphlets printed, and we hav not the wherewithal for these and for general expenses. It is a shame, a shame that the cause should be so hindered by the lack of a few dollars or a few hundred dollars at most, when the Peter's pence and the foreign missionary appeals of an effete superstition bring responses of thousands of dollars. Is, then, the separation of church and state, is the right to freedom of thought of so little consequence to Liberals, that not one penny a year per Liberal is contributed to the organization which is contending for that right? Something less than eighteen hundred dollars was contributed last year to this society. This would giv an average, allowing one cent for each Liberal in the United States, of less than one hundred and eighty thousand people who believe in the separation of church and state sufficiently to giv one penny a year toward such separation!

Now you know, as well as I, that the people who believe ardently in the separation of church and state—not counting the careful, half-way people who are waiting to know if a thing is going to be popular before they indorse it—number much more than this. They are, in fact, so numerous, that if every person who believes outspokenly in the separation of church and state were to pay one penny a year to the American Secular Union, this organization would hav a financial power in the land that would cause its appeals to our lawmakers not only to be respected but to be heeded.

Dear friends, one and all, upon you individually rests the burden of our failure to accomplish great things, as well as the glory of what little success has so far been ours. Uphold us financially and with personal efforts, and the American Secular Union cannot help but carry out the plans of its founders, for it has truth on its side. Withhold your help, and you hav only yourselvs to blame for our failure to resist successfully the growing encroachments of the church upon the state.

Fellow-Liberals, which shall it be for the American Secular Union, failure or success?

IDA C. CRADDOCK,
Corr. Sec. American Secular Union.
Philadelphia, Pa., May 29, 1891.

THERE is something pathetic in the simplicity with which a narrow student will judge the doctrins of a foreign religion by their antagonism or conformity to his own orthodoxy on points where utter difference of opinion exists among the most learned and enlightened scholars.—Tylor.

Religious Notes Through Liberal Optics.

In many of the Catholic churches last Sunday the statue of the Virgin Mary was crowned with flowers by the children. What is this but rank idolatry?

The church systematically denounces Spiritualism out of its own domain, but in its own history reveals itself as a believer in spooks and ghosts. The "devotion of the Sacred Heart" is of modern origin and owes its existence to the story of a nun who lived in the seventeenth century, who related that, while praying in a grotto, the ghost of Jesus Christ appeared to her and told her that this devotion was most acceptable. This materialization séance was at once accepted by the church as genuin and the medium canonized. What a pity Dis Debar could not hav lived in the seventeenth century! In spite of the ponderosity of her proportions she would hav been beatified and made Blessed Editha, and instead of kicking up high heels as a delicate cupid, she would hav been a marble statue and crowned and prayed to in the church.

The Living Church (P. E.) says of Dr. Heber Newton:

If we hav not completely mistaken his meaning in discourses which hav appeared of late, nothing is clearer than that his teaching is not Christianity as this church has received it, and as he, at what should hav been the most solemn moment of his life, undertook to teach it.

In other words, the church pins its preachers down to the acceptance of absurd and ridiculous dogmas, and any attempt to modify or naturalize them for the sake of common reason is a heresy which demands expulsion. The saddest part of it all is, that the necessity of living by a vocation to which a man has been trained and educated leads sometimes to a recantation or modification of utterances spoken in all truth and sincerity, and which but for this unfortunate dependency would be adhered to.

Thus is the church the despot of mentality, the slave-driver of thought, the foe to honesty, and the home of hypocrisy and fraud—the greater the hypocrit the larger his reward.

But at last the edifice of Christianity is commencing its inevitable demolition, and its supports, its timbers, the very foundation itself, are being destroyed, not by advancing hosts of the enemy, but by the inmates themselvs, who are commencing to see that it is but a rotten charnel-house of corruption, of imprisoned thought and superstitious despotism. Wait but a little and it will fall.

We are informed through the medium of the Eagle that Rev. Willard W. Robinson will shortly return to Brooklyn after an absence of three months spent in the Holy Land. Mr. Robinson went with a party of distinguished Baptist divines whose churches gave them seven months' leave of absence while his was but for three months.

Is it not monstrous that churches should beg money from their members and spend it in sending ministers to the Holy Land, which now bears about as much resemblance to its ancient appearance as Ben Butler does to a winged cherub? But it is fashionable to send "our minister to Europe," and no matter if children go hungry to bed the beloved pastor must hav his fling at Europe. He must stand on the banks of the Jordan; he must visit the alleged place of crucifixion, the alleged tombs of departed saints, and shed some alleged tears, and on his return home open wide the eyes of guileless Sunday-school children by the alleged marvels of the dullest, laziest, and most unattractiv spot on the face of the earth.

If superstition did not cost so much—if it did not draw the life-blood as it were from the ignorant and credulous who are also poor—if it were but the amusing plaything of the rich and well to do, we could afford to laugh at its absurdity and pass it by. But when it becomes (as it is) an oppressiv taxation on the laboring class which superstitious fear compels it to promptly pay, we know it to be the duty of every sensible man to expose its fraudulent character and if possible liberate its votaries from their self-imposed imprisonment of thought.

Sunday-school teacher: "Yes, Johnny, if God had so pleased, Jonah could hav been swallowed by an oyster as easy as by a whale. Everything is possible with God."

Professor Harper in a lecture to fifty students at Yale: "It is the very best history [alluding to the Bible] God himself could make. If he could hav made a better one he would hav done so."

Here is a how do you do!

Sunday-school children are taught that God can do anything, Professor Harper puts a limitation on his powers. These "higher criticism" gentlemen would hav us believe that they hav measured God's ability, know all about his intentions, been let into his secret counsels, know all about his reasons for making a muddle of the Bible, in fact, to use prevalent slang, that they "are in it." They certainly hav put their foot in it. In one breath we are told that God never made a mistake, and that the Bible is the word of God—in the next, that the Bible has errors in it and yet it is still the word of God.

Now, this contradiction is so plain, so palpable, that it cannot fail to reveal to the most obtuse and fanatical religionist the absurdity of the whole story. It will ultimately reach the denouement that has ensued when a wag suddenly stops on Broadway, steps to the corner, and gazes intently upward; in a second another man stops and looks up and asks "What is it?" but the wag only shakes his head mysteriously and soon another and another join in skygazing, until the number reaches fifty, then the wag calmly walks away, leaving the crowd to realize the "sell" in their own good time. And so it happens that some ancient wags hav perpetuated this sort of a joke on humanity. They hav kept their eyes heavenward; they hav shaken their heads mysteriously; they hav spoken in horrent whispers of a God, of a heaven, and of a hell, and humanity is just awaking to the fact that it is as simple a joke as any jester ever originated, and is becoming ashamed that it did not see it before.

We welcome the "higher criticism" scholars; they are the first to raise a doubt as to whether our ancient Hebrew wags ever saw anything. "Do you see yonder cloud?" says Hamlet to Polonius; "methinks it looks like a weasel. It is backed like a weasel, or like a whale." "Very like a whale," echoes Polonius. As a matter of fact, Hamlet and Polonius were looking at a cloudless sky, and the crafty old sycophant, like the time-servers of Moses and the prophets, re-echoed his master, and the whole court was ready to swear that it was "very like a whale." These old ancient fakirs knew the humbuggery of "divine" pretensions made by themselvs and their brother-wags and "gathered in the face on't," and here we are in the nineteenth century just beginning to discern the real character of the rascals. We hope the New York Sun will see the necessity of starting anew the familiar cry, "Put the rascals out."

WM. ALLEN SMITH.

The "First Cause" and Its Creation.

It is strange how some men will set up, merely to knock down, a man of straw, to show that somebody else has set up the same thing. Christianity is founded upon the inventions and hallucinations of priestcraft about a great "first cause," and the time when "all things were created" and the machine put in motion by a personal being called "God," who continues to hav an interest in the way the machine runs—in short, that "he" is not only the creator but the "governor and ruler" of the machine, or universe, or whatever you may call it, including especially his own created "dearly and beloved children," a certain portion of which were "foreordained" from way-back to be damned, regardless of any effort on their part to be good and go to the place of the elect; who also are as prone to kick over the traces and to sin as sparks are to fly upwards—even as those who are elected to be "damned."

The Christian dogmas also teach that this incomprehensibly good father and creator occupies a place called "heaven" and sits on a golden throne, with all fore, as well as future, knowledge of all things that ever did, or ever will, happen; and that in spite of the Bible record of his acts and disposition, he is a being of infinit love without possibility of hatred or anger. The Christian dogmas do not teach who created this being, and assert that he is self-existing without a "first cause;" but are silent as to where he was and what he was doing, solitary and alone, for indefinit time before he conceived the idea or begun this labor of "creating all things," ponderable and otherwise, out of nothing, and starting them whirling through space. Nor do the Christian dogmas tell at what particular time, "time" and space were created; but of course it must hav been during the seven days; during the time that he created all things "without whom nothing was created." This, however, still remains of the great "mysteries of godliness." The sacred and inspired and infallible records are sadly deficient in this regard, and God's regular successor, Pope Leo, nor any of his infallible and truly moral and eminently victorious predecessors, hav ever condescended to enlighten the world on this point so well calculated to induce Infidelity among their followers, if any of them should happen to indulge in a thought. There is little doubt that they knew all about it, but would not tell, for fear of breeding thoughts. And Leo XIII. wants to keep it as his own particular and pet secret. But it is reasonable, in view of storage, to suppose that time and space were both created before the time when the "heavens and the earth," and the sun, moon, stars, and planets, were all molded and located.

Now I come to my point that some people will do ridiculous things in erecting men of straw to knock down, as did A. Wettstein in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 16th to make the untenable vagaries of Mr. Walker look more ridiculous. To do this he assumes and argues from the idea of limited space by saying that "when space is once filled, as it must evidently be at some time," etc., in which he is referring directly to infinit space where God has his abode according to the Christian idea. It is no great triumph over Mr. Walker's man of straw to set up another one, too weak to stand or be knocked down. How can Mr. Wettstein reconcile the idea presented in his argument "with the postulate of science generally accepted," that infinit space has no limit? To make his idea worth basing an argument upon he will hav to indicate the extent of space that "must evidently be filled at some time," and then let us know what is the thickness of the shell and what is on the outside, and how far it is to some other place beyond. However old time may be, conceding space to be unlimited, it at once makes the idea of any person or being as the "ruler and governor" of it supremely ridiculous and impossible; unless "God," the reputed creator and ruler, through his inspired "expounders" has utterly failed to giv his children the meaning of words and a language to express truth. On the same page with Mr. Wettstein's idea on "Space Filling" is also "Mr. Laperche's Views"—another proof that some people will say ridiculous things regarding what they evidently do not know much about, for the purpose of setting up straw men to be knocked over. But it is one of the great and good features of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER that everybody can get a fair hearing, subject to the knocks that may come from being a little "off color" now and then—for the sake of an argument, to push over a scarecrow. Brother Wettstein is a vigorous writer, but, like others, liable to slop over, in his zeal to render justice to the many-colored inventions of priestcraft to keep their dupes in ignorance and proper subjection, to reach their bottom dollars.

Illinois Legislators Go to Heaven.

From the Byron Express.

At 9 o'clock on Sunday morning a distinguished party of representativ men of Illinois left the city of Oregon for a place of considerable notoriety, "Heaven," situated about five miles from Rockford. The party passed through Byron en route at 11 with only a moment's stop for coal. The parties reached the mansion at 12.30 o'clock, and were given a royal welcome by the only and inimitable Geo. S. Schweinfurth, familiarly known as Jake or Colonel Jake, but by those of the true faith as "Christ," "The God-man," "The Savior."

The party consisted of Senators Leeper, Shumway, Wright, and Farmer; Representativs Wilkinson, Stringer, Meyer, Craig, and Wilson, and were under the guidance of Al. H. Waggoner, of Oregon, now chief engrossing and enrolling clerk of the state legislature.

These men were not there on official business. They came simply to satisfy their curiosity and for a lark. Al had been there once before in summer and listened to the old man talk, played with the golden-haired heir of heaven, and sighed at the angels, but he had little idea of the sermons preached by the reformer. In addition to these honored names mentioned above we must add the names of Attorneys Seyster and Bacon, and Samuel Ray, of Oregon. Mayor Bacon enjoyed the name of being the only Republican of the party, and Seyster enjoyed the sermon, the first one of the year, at least for him. A little fellow in a white hat, from Rockford, was also there. He represented the Star and wanted the mob to understand that. He needed breathing-room enough for two senators and one representativ, and next to Col. Jake was the man of the occasion. The party was comfortably seated in the audience-room of the mansion, and at 1 o'clock P.M. the grand master began the ceremonies, firing the force of his discourse at the distinguished gathering in front of him. A mistake was made when the audience was seated. They scattered the male members of the flock Triumphant among the representativs, and to the uninitiated it was hard to tell which was which. We picked out the ugliest old plug we could find there and said, "Sel Van Pruag—smart man—too bad he livs in Chicago." In the testimony part of the meeting this old chap rose to testify, and we turned away disgusted. There ought to hav been a strawberry mark on the saints or the solons—we wanted to know which was which. The ceremonies drag. The old man has prepared a sermon for the occasion, and the newspapers come in for some practical advice—bourgeois, leaded, and "tf." After this he talked to the law-makers and gave them some practical advice on the future laws; it was given freely, without cost, and worth as much. It was fun to see the boys as the sermon progressed. They twisted around on their chairs and squirmed like eels; some slept, and others looked longingly out of the windows; some got up and went out; some groaned and grunted as the hard chairs blistered their tender forms, but stayed. Outside was gathered quite a crowd, and local politics was the theme of conversation. Sen. Leeper walked around to rest his weary limbs, and as he viewed the beautiful place, he said, "If I owned this farm the rest of them could go to h—l." This seemed to be the general impression. Poor Waggoner fared worse than some; he was given a front seat and put on his good behavior, and there he sat, nothing to eat—all he could do was to look at the soprano singer. Seyster and Bacon agreed as regards the sermon. It reminded both of them of a former county clerk of Ogle county talking on the tariff question. But the longest discourse, as well as the toothache, comes to an end. Schweinfurth finished at 3:20 P.M., and sat down after the second best effort of his life. We'll say nothing of his other effort, save that it was well done.

And now the testimony was in order, preference being given the angels. And they testified well, without a skip or a break, believed Schweinfurth was the second Christ, a great reformer, a holy man, the savior; that theirs was a heaven on earth, etc., ad infinitum, ad nauseatim. A couple of the younger angels testified to their absolute purity with a freedom of expression that certainly was fresh, one mentioning the parable of the vine and the branches and expressing the hope of union with Christ. It was too much for our delicate sensibilities. Some were very bitter in their denunciation of the world, the flesh, and the devil. It struck us thusly: Schweinfurth wants a corner on the earth; a little more flesh would improve the looks of some of the skeletons there and the devil wouldn't take the whole lot without a bonus. One of the visitors, who answered to the euphonious cognomen of Jack, said: "Well, we've settled it. Schweinfurth is pure and holy, a paragon of perfection, but who was that soprano singer?"

The clock now ticks out 5 and the son of divinity stops the orgies. It is over and there is an exodus, each trying to get away first. The boys from Springfield are hungry, but no one complains of thirst. They were disappointed. Hadn't seen the child that lisps out "ma" and "Holy, Holy, Holy Ghost," nor congratulated Mary. As soon as it is fairly out they drive home, and when once away from the mansion recover their youthful spirits and say they've had a big time, but something seems to say, "Sold, sold, sold. Ain't you fellows sold? sold? sold?" We suppose that they will show up on Tuesday morning at Springfield, not much the worse for their Sunday's sermon, and be in condition to draw their pay when it is drawable, this visit included in the bill.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Portsmouth, O., Secular Union has entered upon a mission of practical work, distributing literature, etc. Donations of books and pamphlets by friends of the cause will be thankfully received. Correspondence solicited.—Will S. Andres, Secretary; J. L. Treuthart, President.

W. S. BELL recently gave three lectures in Coggon, Ia., where he was threatened with rotten eggs, and where Elder Brown mendaciously told the audience at one of the lectures that Ingersoll, Underwood, and Watts were licentious men. Mr. Bell told the man of God that he was an infamous liar.

THE Chicago Secular Union has closed its regular Sunday evening lecture course, to reopen on the first Sunday of September. The committee is preparing the list for September and October, which will cover a variety of interesting subjects, treated by able speakers. Hon. Elliot Anthony (superior judge) has already accepted the invitation to address the Union. A few special meetings may be held during the summer vacation.

How to Help The Truth Seeker.

1. When renewing get a friend to subscribe and thus save a half dollar apiece.

2. Get your newsdealer to display it on his stand or in his shop window. Be sure that he displays the pictures.

3. Get your newsdealer to keep in stock one or more copies, with your guarantee to take off his hands at the end of the week any that remain unsold. If he exhibits them the pictures alone will sell them.

4. Take a few extra copies and circulate them among your acquaintances. On your request, we will send you back-number sample copies free.

5. Leave a copy occasionally where it will be picked up—in the train, in the factory, in the meeting-room, in the cigar store, in the barber-shop. Leave it picture-side up.

6. Keep in your pocket some of our cheap tracts, and when convenient hand one to a friend.

7. Get a new subscriber by pursuading some friend to take it.

WHAT! is it not idolatry? asked my friend quietly. What else can you call the religion of you Christians, which makes a human being of that Incommunicable God, that Supreme Deity, the Great Spirit of the Universe, Jehovah, our Lord, whom we Jews worship in spirit and in truth? You pray to a man who, you say, was God Incarnate; you worship one who lived and died a man like yourselvs, and who is still, to you, now in heaven—especially moved to listen to human prayers because of his own experiences on earth. . . . God has been incarnate in man no more than in the Egyptian bull; and your worship of Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph and Mary, is as pure idolatry—that is, the worship of a created and finite being—as was ever the faith which made Apis a divine incarnation, and Dagon a god in whom were light and life and power.—Mrs. Lynn Linton.

Sunday Laws and Sabbath Observance.—Concluded.

Sir William Domville says: "Centuries of the Christian era passed away before the Sunday was observed as a Sabbath. History does not furnish us with a single proof or indication that it was at any time so observed previous to the Sabbatical edict of Constantine in A D 321" (Ex. of Six Texts, p. 291).

"Not any ecclesiastical writer of the first three centuries attributed the origin of Sunday observance either to Christ or his apostles" (Ibid., Supplement, pp. 6, 7).

Prynne declared: "It is certain that Christ himself, his apostles, and the primitiv Christians for some good space of time, did constantly observe the seventh-day Sabbath. The evangelists, and St. Luke in the Acts, ever styling it 'the Sabbath day,' and making mention of its solemnization by the apostles and other Christians, it being still solemnized by many Christians after the apostles' times, even till the council of Laodicea, A D 364" (Diss. on Lord's Day Sabbath, p. 33, pub. 1633).

Heylyn said: "Take which you will, either the fathers or the moderns, and we shall find no Lord's day instituted by any apostolic mandate; no Sabbath set on foot by them upon the first day of the week" (Hist. Sabbath, part 2, chap. i, sec. 10).

We now present the translation of the celebrated edict of Constantine. The original edict may be seen in the library of Harvard College. "Let all the judges and town people and the occupation of all trades rest on the venerable day of the Sun, but let those who are situated in the country freely and at full liberty attend to the business of agriculture, because it often happens that no other day is so fit for sowing corn and planting vines; lest the critical moment being let slip, men should lose the commodities granted by heaven" (Ency. Britannica, Art. Sunday).

The same authority (Ency. Britannica, Art. Lord's Day), after calling attention to the usual scriptural arguments, says: "Still it must be owned that these passages are not sufficient to prove the apostolic institution of the Lord's day or even the actual observance of it."

"Buck's Theological Dictionary" (p. 403), after presenting all the first-day arguments, says: "These arguments, however, are not satisfactory to some, and it must be confessed that there is no law in the New Testament concerning the first day."

Kitto (Cyc. Bib. Lit., Art. Lord's Day) reads: "Though in later times we find considerable reference to a sort of consecration of the day, it does not seem at any period of the ancient church to hav assumed the form of such an observance as some modern religious communities hav contended for. Nor do those writers in any instance pretend to allege any divine command or even apostolic practice in support of it."

Tyndale, who gave us our English version of the Bible, says: "As for the Sabbath, we be lords of the Sabbath, and may yet change it into Monday, or into any other day as we see need, or make every tenth day holy day, only if we see cause why" (Tyndale's Answer to Moore, book i, chap. 25).

Zwingle: "It is lawful on the Lord's day, after divine service, for any man to pursue his labor" (Cox's Sabbath Laws, p. 287).

Beza, the great Calvinistic theologian: "No cessation of work on the Lord's day is required of Christians" (Ibid., p. 286).

Bucer, the great German reformer: "And doth not only call it a superstition, but an apostasy from Christ, to think that working on the Lord's day, in itself considered, is a sinful thing" (Ibid., p. 287).

WHO CHANGED THE SABBATH FROM SATURDAY TO SUNDAY?

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH!

The Roman Catholics are the only consistent observers of Sunday; they do not pretend that the Bible, and the Bible alone, is their sole rule of faith and practice, as all Protestants do.

Protestant reader, we ask your very careful study of the following extracts from Roman Catholic catechisms, published by the Roman Catholic publishing house, by and with the authority and approval of the bishops of the church; and in use by all good Catholics.

Q. What are the days which the church commands to be kept holy, or observed as days of particular devotion?

A. The Sunday, or Lord's day, which we observe by apostolic tradition instead of the Sabbath.

Q. What warrant hav you for keeping the Sunday preferable to the ancient Sabbath, which was the Saturday?

A. We hav for it the authority of the Catholic church and apostolic tradition.

Q. Does the scripture anywhere command the Sunday to be kept for the Sabbath?

A. The scripture commands us to hear the church (Matt. xviii, 17, Luke x, 16), and to hold fast to the tradition of the apostles (2 Thess. ii, 15), but the scripture does not in particular mention this change of the Sabbath. St. John speaks of the Lord's day (Rev. i, 10), but he does not tell us what day of the week this day was, much less does he tell us that it was to take the place of the Sabbath ordained in the commandments. St. Luke also speaks of the disciples meeting to break bread on the first day of the week (Acts xx, 7), and St. Paul (1 Cor. xvi, 2) orders that on the first day of the week the Corinthians should lay by in store what they designed to bestow in charity on the faithful in Judea; but neither one or the other tell us, whether this first day of the week was to be henceforward the day of worship, and the Christian Sabbath; so that in fact, the best authority we hav for this ancient custom, is the testimony of the church.

And therefore those who pretend to be such religious observers of the Sunday, whilst they take no notice of other festivals ordained by the same church authority, show that they act more by humor, than by reason and religion, since Sundays and holy-days all stand upon the same foundation, viz., the ordinance of the church (The Catholic Christian, p. 231, chap. 23).

Q. What is this day of rest?

A. The Seventh day of the week, or Saturday (Gen. ii, 23).

Q. It is then Saturday we should sanctify in order to obey God?

A. During the old law Saturday was the day sanctified; but the church, instructed by Jesus Christ and directed by the spirit of God, has substituted Sunday for Saturday (Cath. Catechism of Rel.).

Q. What is the third commandment?

A. Remember that thou keepest holy the Sabbath day.

Q. When began the Sabbath to be kept?

A. From the very creation of the world; for then God "blessed it, and rested on it, from all his works" (Gen. ii, 2).

Q. When was this commandment renewed?

A. In the old law; when God gave the commandments to Moses, on Mount Sinai, written with his own finger in two tables of stone (Ex. xx, xxi. 18).

Q. Why was the Jewish Sabbath changed into Sunday?

A. Because Christ was born upon a Sunday, rose from the dead upon a Sunday, and sent down the Holy Ghost upon a Sunday, works not inferior to the creation of the world.

Q. By whom was it changed?

A. By the governors of the church, the apostles, who also kept it; for St. John was in the spirit on the Lord's day (which was Sunday) (Apoc. i, 10).

Q. How prove you that the church hath power to command feasts and holy days?

A. By the very act of changing the Sabbath into Sunday, which Protestants allow of; and therefore they fondly contradict themselvs, by keeping Sunday strictly, and breaking most other feasts commanded by the same church.

Q. How prove you that?

A. Because by keeping Sunday, they acknowledge the church power to ordain feasts; and to command them under sin: and by not keeping the rest by her commanded, they again deny in fact the same power (Abridgment of the Christian Doctrin, p. 58).

Protestant friend! Here is a text from the New Testament bearing directly upon this subject, which needs your most careful and prayerful consideration: "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselvs servants to obey, his servants ye are whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?"

According to the New Testament, then, obedience is worship. Do you worship God, obey his commandments, keep his Sabbath? Hav you the sign that you are of his Israel? Or do you worship the pope of Rome, obey his commandments, keep the day he has substituted? Whom ye obey ye worship.

Is it not evident that Sunday-keepers are God's Sabbath-breakers?

Reader, let us be honest with ourselvs; you hav the clear evidence, the plain, unmistakable facts. Dare to think. Dare to investigate. The time has come to rise out of the deep rut of tradition and blind acceptance of other people's say-so.

There is in the mind of many men a touch of superstition which causes them to fear that there may be something about Sunday-keeping which they ought not to oppose; and which causes them to think it would be better to seem to favor laws for its observance, and so they yield to superstition, instead of investigating for themselvs, and acting up to their convictions.

Why worry over seeing the moon over your left shoulder?

The New Testament never applies the name Sabbath to the first day, never once calls it holy. But it does most emphatically declare that there is no transgression where there is no law (Rom. iv, 15; 1 John iii, 4).

If this be so, what sin is committed by working on Sunday?

If the name Sabbath were no longer applied to the first day, but it should always be called "first day," as it is in the Bible, would it not soon lose all its sacredness in the eyes of the people, and be observed simply as a day of rest and recreation?

Is it not wicked to "make the commandments of God of none effect by your tradition" (Matt. xv, 6)

"He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrits, as it is written, this people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

"Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrins the commandments of men.

"For laying aside the commandments of God, ye hold the tradition of men" (Mark vii, 6, 7, 8).

Let us not be misunderstood. We do not deny the right of a person to keep Sunday, or any other day, as religiously as they please. We maintain that any person, if they so choose, has the right to keep Sunday; although there is no command of God for it, and by doing so they ignore God, Christ, and Bible, and worship the pope of Rome. That is no one's business but their own. Men are responsible to their God alone for their conduct respecting any religious observance they believe to hav been enjoined by him.

What we do very strongly object to is the assumption of authority by Sunday-keepers, and their demand for laws to compel everybody else to keep Sunday, regardless of the fact that it is contrary to the plainest teachings of the Bible, and a violation of our state constitution, which guarantees absolute freedom of religious sentiment, belief, and worship to every individual.

THE LEGAL EVIDENCE.

Sunday laws are contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

The first Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was adopted in 1789 by the first Congress that met under the Constitution. It reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

In 1796 a treaty was made with Tripoli in which it was declared, Article 2, That "the government of the United States of America is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion."

Bancroft in his history of the Constitution of the United States (last chapter) says, "Vindicating the right of individuality even in religion and in religion above all, the new nation dared to set the example of accepting in its relations to God the principle first divinely ordained of God in Judea. It left the management of temporal things to the temporal power; but the American Constitution, in harmony with the people of the several states, withheld from the federal government the power to invade the home of reason, the citadel of conscience, the sanctuary of the soul; and not from indifference, but that the infinit spirit of truth might move in its freedom, purity, and power."

The passage of a law compelling rigid Sunday observance would constitute decision of a religious controversy in which even Christians themselvs are at issue. And would thus place a religious dogma in the statute law, thereby uniting church and state.

It elevates that branch of the Christian church which keeps Sunday by establishing a religious tenet held by them, and it brings hardship upon those who disagree with them.

And this hardship would not come to the Jew, the Seventh Day Adventist, and Baptist by virtue of their relation as citizens, but by virtue of their religion, which comes not in conflict with the rights of their fellow-citizens, but in conflict with a religious dogma enforced by civil law.

No sophistry can evade this conclusion. Sunday legislation means religious legislation, class legislation, and union of church and state.

Sunday laws are a direct invasion of our constitutional rights, and the inalienable right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property.

The following extract from an opinion of the supreme court of California, is language that can never be successfully controverted: "The right to protect and possess property is not more clearly protected by the Constitution than the right to acquire. The right to acquire must include the right to use the proper means to attain the end. The right itself would be impotent without the power to use the necessary incidents.

"If the legislature hav the authority to appoint a time of compulsory rest—it is without limit, and may extend to the prohibition of all occupations at all times. For the Constitution to declare a right inalienable, and at the same time leave the legislature unlimited power over it, would be a contradiction in terms, an idle provision, proving that a constitution was a mere parchment barrier, insufficient to protect the citizen, delusiv and visionary, and the practical result of which would be to destroy, not to conserve, the rights which they may assume to protect. The legislature therefore cannot prohibit the proper use of the means of acquiring property, except the peace and safety of the state require it" (Ex parte Newman, 9 Cal. p. 517).

As the right to acquire property includes the right to use the proper means to attain that end, and as such a law deprives a man of the use of such means during one-sixth of his time, it follows that it is a violation of that provision of the fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution, which declares that "No state shall deprive any citizen of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

LEGAL PRECEDENTS.

We are told there are many precedents—decisions of supreme courts of several states—favoring Sunday laws.

So there are "precedents" for the rack, the thumb-screw, the dungeon, the fagot, and the stake. There is the precedent of the most holy Inquisition to make men religious according to law (torture their bodies for the salvation of their souls; 1 Cor. v, 5), but that does not make those precedents worthy of respect; nor does it make right a principle which, persistently followed up, would necessarily lead to such methods.

COMPULSORY LEGAL WORSHIP.

We are told that a Sunday law is not intended to compel people to worship on that day, but only to compel them to close their places of business and stop secular work.

The people are not so much concerned about what is intended, as they are about what is accomplished by such legislation.

Washington declared, "Every man who conducts himself as a good citizen is accountable alone to God for his religious faith, and is to be protected in worshiping God according to the dictates of his own conscience."

It is true men require rest; they also require sleep and food. (Why not hav a civil law to secure a day of rest for women, and prohibit extra cooking, dish-washing, bed-making, as well as extra dressing and fixing, on holy Sunday?)

Men need to sleep at night. Shall we hav a civil law decreeing—under penalty of fine and imprisonment—what time all shall go to sleep?

Men eat, generally, three times a day; the majority dine at noon. Shall we hav an act of Congress—a civil law—compelling all people to eat between the hours of 12 and 1?

If legislation is necessary to secure the workingman rest one day each week (and it seems the ministers are convinced no other day will giv the needed rest than Sunday), why is it not much more necessary to hav a law to compel them to rest every night?

If the people of the United States do not know enough to rest on Sunday, or any other day when they need rest, then it is certain they much more require the paternal wisdom of Congress to send them to bed each night, for all must admit sleep each night is more necessary than rest on Sunday.

The rank hypocrisy of the advocates of a civil Sunday law is at once apparent if it is suggested that a law be passed to insure all a day of rest every Wednesday. Every Sunday-keeping fanatic indignantly protests, Oh! that would be a violation of their religious rights. No. They want a law to compel everyone, whether they believe it right or not, to keep Sunday.

It is not a civil law, a sanitary regulation, they desire, but a religious law—a law to compel all to adopt their religious ideas and notions; and they admit that the enforcement of a rigid Sunday law is but the entering wedge toward enforcing obedience to other duties they allege we owe to God.

Civil government has nothing to do with what we owe to God, or whether we owe him anything or not, or whether, if we do owe him anything, we pay it or not.

SAINTS HELPING GOD.

Religious zeal enlists the strongest prejudices of the human mind, and, when misdirected, under the delusiv pretext of doing God's service, excites the worst passions of our nature. When man undertakes to become God's avenger he becomes a demon. Driven by the frenzy of a religious zeal he loses every gentle feeling, forgets every claim alike of justice, mercy, and humanity, and becomes ferocious and unrelenting.

ASK HELP FROM THE LORD, INSTEAD OF THE LAW.

If there is a day which the almighty desires should be exclusivly devoted to his worship—and remember the proof both biblical and historical is herein given that Sunday is not that day—would it not be better to rely on his almighty power than on the arm of the law?

Why are the ministers and church organizations spending so much time, means, and energy, trying to obtain the power of the law to force all to obedience, when, if they fulfill their avowed mission, if they only hav faith as a grain of mustard seed, they can so readily obtain the sure and almighty power of God?

When the Sunday law advocates shall in answer to their prayers hav secured the ministrations of the Holy Ghost to move on the hearts of men, inducing them to yield loving obedience to all God's requirements, there will be no need of the strong arm of the law, the policeman's club, or threats of fine and imprisonment, to induce all to observe "the Sabbath" or any other religious rite or ceremony.

The church has never been able to stand on its own feet. It has invariably leaned upon the crutch of the state. Christian priests hav always endeavored to hav their dogmas propagated by law, so they could silence all opposition and compel obedience—in olden times by the rack, the dungeon, and the stake, in our day by means of the policeman's club and the felon's cell.

The church when unable to assume supreme power has been harmless as a dove, but whenever wedded to the civil power it has become tyrannical and persecuting; before it the greatest despots the world ever saw pale into insignificance.

No scrap of history records an instance of any government ever persecuting its people on account of their religious belief until some religious power got behind the throne. No exception can be cited in all the history of the past whenever any religious power got behind the throne that persecution of the people who differed with that religious power did not result.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

A most distinguished humanitarian truly declares: "You might as well hav a government united by force with art, or with poetry, or with oratory, as with religion.

"Religion should hav the influence upon mankind that its goodness, that its morality, its justice, its charity, its reason, and its arguments giv it, and no more.

"The religion that has to be supported by law is without value—is not only a fraud, but a curse.

"The religious argument that has to be supported by a musket is hardly worth making.

"A religion of love can never need bowie knives, and revolvers, policemen's clubs, chains, and dungeons.

"Our fathers founded the first secular government that was ever founded in the world. Recollect that. The first secular government—the first government that said every church has exactly the same rights, and no more.

"In other words, our fathers were the first men who had the sense, had the genius, to know that no church should be allowed to exert more than its moral influence. Our fathers devoted their lives and fortunes to the good work of forming a government for the protection of the rights of man."

Our young giant state of Washington is far in advance of all other states in its provisions for religious liberty.

Our state constitution, Article I, Section 11, reads: "Absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment, belief, and worship shall be guaranteed to every individual, and no one shall be disturbed in person or property on account of religion."

The constitution clearly defines, and positivly states, the only conditions which can render a person liable to be disturbed in person or property—to wit, acts of licentiousness, or practices incompatible with the peace of the state.

Hence no person pursuing any legitimate occupation or lawful pleasure or pastime on Sunday, any more than on any other day of the week, can be disturbed, either in person or property, because of any one else's religious opinions.

Under the constitution of the young giant state of Washington every man enjoys the same right of conscience, and is responsible to no earthly tribunal for his religious faith, and cannot be made by fine or other penalty to observe holy days, or other religious festivals, against his honest convictions.

Christians differ as to which day is the Sabbath, some claiming the first, and others the seventh, day of the week, and it is not the province of the government to say which is right.

The rights of conscience are individual and cannot be settled by arraying the larger number against the smaller.

The Constitution regards the conscience of the Jew as sacred as that of the Christian. The test of citizenship is not based on any religious creed. The greater part of a community may be agreed concerning some matter of conscience; but if only one among them holds a different opinion his rights of conscience are just as sacred as those of all others, and must be respected.

Says Judge Cooley: "The Jew and the seventh-day Christian, who is forced to respect the first day of the week when his conscience requires of him the observance of the seventh day also, may plausibly urge that the law discriminates against his religion, and by forcing him to keep a second Sabbath in such week, unjustly, though by indirection, punishes him for his belief."

Legislativ bodies having jurisdiction can declare legal holidays in which no business can be enforced by one man upon another, but hav no right to dictate the manner of observance of the day by the individual; one can work, another pray, and so on, as it suits the individual taste; but no man, no legislativ body, under the constitution of the state of Washington has a right to say to any individual, "Thou shalt not work."

To prohibit men from following their honest occupations at any time under penalty of arrest, fine, or imprisonment is to relegate honest work to the realm of crime.

Under our state constitution not alone religious faith and worship is assured, but absolute freedom in all matters of religious sentiment, and no citizen can be disturbed in person or property on account of religion or religious rites, ceremonies, high days, Sundays, or holidays, however much the sentiment or belief of others—even the largest majority—may regard such observances as essential.

So far from being opposed to Sunday-keeping, we are zealous defenders of its observance. It is the grand, good old solar holiday of all pagan times, and should be devoted to rest, recreation, and amusement, and for those who choose, to worship. But all are entitled to full freedom, to perfect liberty to spend its hours as they please; always providing that in the enjoyment of its liberties no one shall encroach on the rights or privileges of others.

A great outcry is made about the need to hav a Sunday law so as to close up the saloons on Sunday. To insist on a law to close saloons on Sunday is to declare that it is right and proper to hav them open on the other six days of the week. But under our state constitution whatever is permissible on any other day of the week is equally so on Sunday.

It should be remembered that the saloons are the outgrowth of Christianity. There are no saloons to be found outside of Christian communities.

Open the museums, the library, the picture gallery, the baseball grounds, encourage excursions on the sound and in the woods—provide innocent amusements and recreation—if you would hav the saloons deserted.

In the name of law, constitutional and statutory, moral and civil; in the name of enlightenment, progress, and common sense, why should the people of Washington, having the best constitution of any of the states of the Union, desire to go back to the Blue laws of the Puritans?

In the language of that zealous Christian and self-sacrificing worker for civil and religious liberty, Rev. Alonzo Jones, editor of the American Sentinel, in his speech before the United States Senate committee on education and labor at Washington, D. C.:

"The noble men who pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor, when they established our Constitution, separated, as they supposed forever, this nation from all the wicked influences of the church-and-state systems of the colonies, of England, and of all other nations of all times.

"And under this Constitution, in true liberty, civil and religious, in genuin enlightenment and progress, this nation has deservedly stood as the beacon-light of the world for a hundred years. Let this splendid nation ever still look forward and not backward; let it still hold its honored place before all the nations; and God forbid that by any such effort as is now being made in behalf of this Sunday law, this glorious nation should be brought down from her high place and made to follow in the papal train.

"Gentleman, no further argument is needed to show that the Sunday laws of all the states, and the principles of the decisions of the supreme courts which sustain them, are wholly wrong, springing from the papal principle of church and state and supported by the equally un-American principle of the omnipotence of the legislativ power. They are totally subversiv of American principles. Yet Sunday laws hav never been, and can never be, sustained on any other principle. And this is only to say that which is the sum of all this discussion.

"There is no foundation in justice, in right, or even in expediency, for any Sunday laws, or Lord's day laws, or Sabbath laws, under any government on this earth."

Reader, the facts are before you; look them square in the face, discard the smoky, grimed spectacles of sectarianism, and let reason, right, and truth hav free course, and they shall elevate, purify, and glorify mankind. Then we shall hav a religion free from forms that fetter, clear of the cant that kills.

A religion that incites love for all that is highest, holiest, and best, without slavish fear or adherence to a creed abounding in absurdities and contradictions, demanding faith in impossibilities.

A religion that makes righteousness, right doing, rational, true manhood divine, freedom secure, and charity universal.

Comments.

I was deeply interested in "Hebrew Polytheism," by A. H. Darrow, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, May 16th. That first verse in Genesis—"In the beginning the Gods created the heaven [not heavens] and the earth"—has been my trump card against the plenary inspiration of the Bible in all my discussions, both oral and written, for nearly forty years. My explanation is this: The legends and fables picked up by the Hebrews were all fabricated by people who believed in many gods; hence their traditions were in the plural number when referring to their deities. We hav ample evidence all through the Old Testament that the Hebrews were strongly inclined to polytheism, if not wholly given over to it. See Gen. xxxi, 30–33, where Rachel stole her father-in-law's, old Laban's, household gods. It was always difficult for the leaders to restrain their tribes from making and worshiping golden calves in imitation of the miraculous ox, Apis, worshiped by the Egyptians as their deity. Solomon even went after the heathen (?) gods of his numerous strange women, and is now in sheol, according to the decisions of Calvinism and the rulings of the clergy.

The ancients, being anxious to make it appear that the Hebrews worshiped but one god and were monotheists, translated the plural noun Elohim into the singular number, God; and our "holy fathers," and "sich like," were not "smart" enough to follow suit with the pronouns "us" and "our," so we hav all this mystery among the divines as to whom the plural pronouns belong to, that Mr. Darrow quotes.

What a simple solution, and yet the learned theologians hav supposed, inferred, guessed, desired, hoped, wondered, and fooled over this sacred blunder until they hav made themselvs too ridiculous to be laughed at; and all because they were loath to admit that the first chapter of the Bible taught us that a plurality of gods created the heaven and the earth, instead of their one, only, little six-by-nine God of inferior proportions, limited capacity, and finite knowledge.

One Museum Open on Sunday.

At last the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art hav yielded to the inevitable and opened the doors of that institution for at least a part of the day on Sundays. The pressure of public opinion had become too strong for them, and when a petition asking for the opening with thirty thousand names attached was presented to them, they used the opportunity to reinstate themselvs in the good opinion of the public—a good opinion which had very largely changed to the other thing.

A good many years ago the German societies presented a petition for the same thing. This document seems to hav been lost. No one ever heard from it, the press said nothing about it, and it was wasted ammunition. In 1885 the subject of Sunday opening came up in the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, and Mr. Jessup, president of the Museum of Natural History, was invited down-town to show cause why the museums should get their fifteen thousand dollars apiece annually from the public treasury unless the public were permitted to see the collections contained in the museums on Sundays. Mr. Jessup responded, argued against Sunday opening, and the matter was dropped by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

But there were others who took it up. Mr. S. P. Putnam was the secretary of the American Secular Union, and for a time was stopping in New York attending to his sectarial duties. One evening he and the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER were dining together, and the action of the Board of Estimate was criticised, and then and there the two heretics determined to see what could be done in the premises. The Editor drew up the petition, obtained the addresses of all the prominent men in town—politicians, lawyers, business men, judges, heretical preachers, and sent the petitions to them. Mr. Putnam visited the newspaper offices and urged the editors to advocate the opening. Mr. Hepworth of the Herald had already printed something about the matter and said he could not take up the Union's petition, but would proceed on the line that it was a Herald movement. The other papers, to head off the Herald, took up the Union's petition, and the town was extensivly notified that it had some museums, which no one before seemed to remember, and that it was desired by some people that they be open on Sundays. The religious papers, for once, told the truth, and said it was an Infidel movement.

The trustees refused to yield to the petition. Mr. Putnam had to print his argument and mail it to them, and they sent men to Albany to fight every bill introduced in either branch of the legislature to compel them to open on Sundays. They were offered an increase of ten thousand per year from the city to open, but they would not take it. They acted like dogs in the manger, pigs in the trough, and seemed determined to do as they pleased regardless of the public which gave them the buildings and helped support them.

But the agitation begun by the two diners, suggested by the Board of Estimate, has never ceased. Public sentiment has steadily been in favor of the plan, the press has constantly prodded the trustees, and lately separate bodies of citizens hav circulated more petitions for such opening. Altogether over sixty thousand people hav asked the trustees for the privilege of visiting the place on Sundays. Bills hav been introduced in both senate and assembly to compel such opening; successiv boards of city officials hav demanded it—and at last it is done!

The ministers of course opposed it, and circulated a counter-petition, but it was not presented at the meeting of the trustees on the 18th instant when after a three hours' session it was "Resolved, That until further order of this board the museum be opened free to the public every Sunday from 1 P.M. till half an hour before sunset." Of course the pietists are displeased, but the citizens of New York who spend an afternoon in the museum won't care very much for that. Elliot Shepard desires to hav the Fourth commandment altered to read, "Remember one-half of the Sabbath to keep it holy;" but then no one cares much for people of his ilk. Over eleven thousand visitors were in the museum on the first open Sunday.

The trustees of the American Museum of Natural History, on the other side of the park, ought to consider the action of the trustees of the Museum of Art, and go and do likewise.

The Presbyterian Assembly.

The Presbyterian General Assembly met in Detroit last week to consider the affairs of that church, among which were the charges of heresy against Professor Briggs of the Union Theological College. After a great deal of lobbying for and against the professor, the committee to whom were referred the charges reported as follows:

"The standing committee on theological seminaries to whom were referred certain overtures respecting the Rev. Charles A. Briggs, D.D., beg leave respectfully to report that they hav examined the same and find that sixty-three presbyteries hav overturned the general assembly in reference to the utterances of Dr. Briggs, contained in the address which he delivered on the occasion of his induction into the chair of biblical theology in the Union Theological Seminary, New York. . . .

"Inasmuch as the theological training of our candidate for the ministry is a matter in which all the presbyteries hav a deep and common interest, the presbyteries aforesaid are to be commended for their vigilant regard for the purity of the church. . . .

"It appears from that report that on Nov. 11, 1890, the Edward Robinson professorship of biblical theology was founded and endowed by Charles Butler, LL.D., by the gift of $100,000, and that at the same time Prof. Charles A. Briggs, D.D., was transferred to the new chair from the Davenport professorship of Hebrew and the cognate languages. On Jan. 20, 1891, Dr. Briggs delivered an inaugural address on 'The Authority of Holy Scripture,' which has been the subject of severe criticism, and which is the occasion of the recommendations which your committee feel constrained to make to the assembly. . . .

"Your committee are constrained, therefore, to say that in their judgment it is the duty of the assembly to disapprove of the appointment of Dr. Briggs to the Edward Robinson chair of biblical theology in Union Theological Seminary."

Since Dr. Briggs delivered his inaugural address, the directors of the seminary hav interviewed him on his belief. In his address he said:

"I shall venture to affirm that, so far as I can see, there are errors in the scriptures that no one has been able to explain away; and the theory that they were not in the original text is sheer assumption. . . . If we should abandon the whole field of providential superintendence, so far as inspiration and divine authority are concerned, and limit divine inspiration and authority to the essential contents of the Bible, to its religion, faith, and morals, we would still hav ample room to seek divine authority where alone it is essential, or even important, in the teaching that guides our devotions, our thinking, and our conduct."

In his reply to the directors' questions on the same subject he said:

"Question: Do you believe the Bible inerrant in all matters concerning faith and practice, and in everything in which it is a revelation from God or a vehicle of divine truth, and that there are no errors which disturb its infallibility in these matters, or in its records of the historic events and institutions with which they are inseparably connected? Answer: Yes."

This is regarded by nearly all his co-sectarians as exceedingly non-committal and indefinit, and it is so. Almost anyone can say Yes to it. In things in which it is a revelation from God the Bible must be inerrant. The real questions are, Is there a God? and Is the Bible a revelation from him? Dr. Briggs believes there is a God, and that some portions at least of the Bible are his words to man. Therefore he could easily answer affirmativly to the ingeniously worded query. A real heretic would hav immediately asked the directors to show there is a God, and the proof that he ever communicated with man. Of this evasion of the real question by the directors and the professor the Independent says: "It looks as though it were designed to mislead the public. We do not charge this; the directors are all honorable men; we only say that it has the appearance of a trick, to which Dr. Briggs himself has consented in order, if possible, to save his position." The Independent's view is undoubtedly correct.

One of the noisiest of the lay delegates was the editor of an evening paper in this town, who is also the head of the Sabbath Observance Society. He has been assumed, and with good reason, to be more kinds of an undesirable non-intellectual than any other man his respected father-in-law had ever seen. His hobbies were "Anti-Briggs" and "Sabbath" observance. This is what he, as chairman of the committee, committed the Assembly to on the latter subject:

"First.—That this General Assembly express profound gratitude to God for the fulfilment of his declaration in the Fourth Commandment by his blessing the country and those who hav kept his day holy.

"Second.—That we most earnestly recommend to the national and state commissioners and municipal directors of the Columbian Exhibition, to be held in Chicago in 1893, immediately to decide that its doors shall not be open to the public on Sunday and to announce that decision so that the public conscience shall be set at rest on the subject, and that Christians of all denominations may consistently unite in rendering that exhibition a great success by attending it with their families, sending their exhibits there, and praying to God, who would thus be honored by the keeping of his day holy, to bless the exhibition and make it surpass all other similar demonstrations by any nation, and that a certified copy of this resolution, properly authenticated by the signatures of the officers and by the seal of the general assembly, shall be intrusted to the Sabbath Observance Committee for presentation to the said authorities.

"Third.—That the work of the American Sabbath Union in behalf of the Sabbath day is accordingly recommended to our pastors and churches for their action, coöperation, and prayerful encouragement.

"Fourth.—That the first week of April, 1892, be observed by our churches as a period for special prayer for the blessing of our father who is in heaven upon all the people, that they may be led to a better observance of his holy Sabbath day the Lord's day."

The implied threat of boycotting the Fair unless its gates are closed on Sundays concealed in the second resolution will not escape observation. Mr. Shepard and his clique are of that sort of people who devoutly believe in their own right to rule the universe. The "public conscience," outside of the more orthodox churches, is against Sunday closing, most people not being very pious in personal matters, however indifferent they are to the church's encroachments upon our liberties or willing that she should exist at the expense of the general public. But the Sabbath observance people, with an arrogance proportioned to the falseness of their claims, assume to represent the public, and speak just as though they did not know they were lying. And we hav no idea that any General Assembly can control any Presbyterian business man—unless he is as great a hypocrit as a late block-tin importer who cheated the government and gave part of his gains to the church—who may desire to exhibit his productions at the Fair, or any Presbyterian who may desire to visit the Fair on week-days, though some will probably be found who will not personally visit the grounds on Sunday. The resolution of the General Assembly, therefore, will not materially decrease the successful prospect of the exhibition.

It is, however, a very good exhibition in itself of the bigotry and tyrannical principles of Presbyterianism.

Questions Involved in Mr. Harman's Case.

About the time this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is being read, Mr. Harman is undergoing the ordeal of appeal to a higher court from the barbarous decisions of a lower tribunal. The result is doubtful. But if the Holy Bible is a mailable book, as decided by the post-office department, then certainly Mr. Harman has committed no offense whatever. Even the O'Neill letter, coarse and disgusting as it was, is exceeded in nastiness many times by the passages in "holy writ" to which we hav frequently referred, and which Judge Tyner had before him when he declared that the Bible is all right.

The absurdity of having laws so elastic as these under which Mr. Harman is arraigned is forcibly shown in the fact of his sentence on the Markland letter and the further fact that the Bible is declared to be perfectly unobnoxious to the law. No fair-minded person can read the letter and the dirty verses of the Bible and say that the language of the latter is not by far the more objectionable. One Latin word designating a natural function can never be so greatly vile as hundreds of Saxon descriptions of other natural functions. The administering of the law is therefore a mere question of taste and prejudice .And as under such elastic conditions there can be no absolute rule, so will injustice continue to prevail. One man for doing a less act will go to prison; another for doing an equally harmless but possibly more disgusting act—that is, an act of worse taste—of the same character will go scot-free, and even be commended for "disseminating the gospel." It is a shame and an outrage, and such laws should be repealed, for there is no way of administering them so that equal and impartial justice shall be done.

An instance of this is the cases of Lucifer and the Twentieth Century, an Anarchist journal published in this city. For printing the Markland letter Mr. Harman, editor of Lucifer, was sentenced to five years' imprisonment, serving several months of the sentence, and, if the appeal be decided against him, will be obliged to finish the cruel decree, which may mean death, as he is an elderly man. But the other journal has printed a letter on the question of taste, condemning Mr. Harman's taste, but at once taking up the same subject and discoursing thereon in a manner just as objectionable to some people as was the Markland letter to others. And if those people had the editor of the Twentieth Century before them in court he would undoubtedly be imprisoned—a gross outrage, to be sure, but not a bit more so than the punishment of Mr. Harman. But, as it is, nothing will be done to him, as he livs in a little more enlightened community than Mr. Harman. It is this difficulty in drawing lines; the whole matter is so exclusivly a question of taste; the tastes of people differ so widely; so much, in fact all, depends upon the education of the jurors, whether it has been broad and literary or narrow and pious, that there seems but one safe course to pursue, and that is to repeal the federal statute and leave the punishment of vendors of the undoubtedly obscene—those things which hav for their object only obscenity—to the local authorities. Philadelphia ladies found the nude pictures in an art gallery—the best works of the best artists in the country—to be indecent, and if the painters had sent their creations through the mail and had these ladies for jurors, the walls of our penitentiaries would hav been the only places they could hav exercised their skill upon for several years. Indecency is as great a crime in the eye of the Comstock law as obscenity. But what shall be regarded as indecent is again wholly a question of taste. Some people hav said that some of the statues in the Metropolitan Museum statuary room are indecent, but hundreds of the most refined and best educated citizens of New York and other places hav the same kind in their parlors, and find not only nothing indecent in them, but that they are beautiful, refining, and moral influences. Who shall define, then, the meaning of the word indecent? A board of censors would be as fallible and as often foolish as the judges and jurors in our federal courts, for they would inevitably exhibit their lack of broad education, as do the present officials. It is a solid, if lamentable, fact, that federal officials are conservativ, old-fashioned, and narrow, if they be not orthodox; and radical social literature would probably be promptly condemned by any board of censors likely to get into office. College presidents are oftentimes very ignorant people.

Mr. Harman remains cheerfully unflinching through all his troubles, determined to pursue the work he has set for himself. He does not believe in self-appointed guardians of himself and others, and he does not shrink from being "harsh as truth and uncompromising as justice." He yields to all the rights he claims for himself, but is determined to maintain his ground. "I hav no right," he says with the greatest of all defenders of liberty, "to make of my brain a sieve, and say that only that which passes through belongs to the rest of the human race. I claim the right to choose. I giv that right to all." But we somehow think that Mr. Harman has been educated a little by the trouble he is in, and would perhaps yield to the rules of etiquet and politeness which, Thoreau says, the human animal has had to invent to make continued intercourse bearable and to prevent us from flying at each other's throats. From respect for his friends' opinions, if for no other reason, he probably would not print another letter of the nature of those for which he was indicted. In this we believe him to be wise.

Total Depravity.

The Presbyterian Confession of Faith says that by the sin of eating the forbidden fruit Adam and Eve fell from their original righteousness and communion with God, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body. Further, that they being the root of all mankind, the guilt of this sin was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature conveyed, to all their posterity. And, also, by their original corruption the race are utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposit to all good, and wholly inclined to all evil.

This charitable view the Presbyterians—and indeed, in a sense, all evangelical churches—support by reference to holy writ as follows:

"For all hav sinned and come short of the glory of God (Romans iii, 23).

"And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins (Ephesians ii, 1). Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all hav sinned (Romans v, 12).

"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually (Genesis vi, 5). The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it? (Jeremiah xvii, 9).

"Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me (Psalms li, 5). And Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image: and called his name Seth (Genesis v, 3). Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one (Job xiv, 4). What is man that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous? (Job xv, 14).

"For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly (Romans v, 6). Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be (Romans viii, 7). That which is born of flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit (John iii, 6). For I know that in me, (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not (Romans vii, 18).

"And the Lord said, The imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth (Genesis viii, 21). As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one: there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, there is none that doeth good, no, not one (Romans iii, 10, 11, 12).

"Who can say, I hav made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? (Proverbs xx, 9). For there is not one just man upon earth that doeth good and sinneth not (Ecclesiastes vii, 20).

Many other passages corollary to these are quoted, but the above are the most direct and explicit upon the subject. But theologians also show it in another way. They say that "striking proofs of their depravity may be seen in the general propensity of mankind to vain, irrational, or cruel diversions; in the universality of the most ridiculous, impious, inhuman, and most diabolical sins; in the aggravating circumstances attending the display of their corruption; in the many ineffectual endeavors to stem its torrent; in the obstinate resistance it makes to divine grace in the unconverted; the amazing struggles of good men with it; the testimony of the heathen concerning it; and [do not laugh, please] the preposterous conceit which the unconverted hav of their own goodness." So here we hav the three essential theological points which condemn the world, viz.: the statement of the church, the Bible authority, and the human reason for it. The conclusion is, according to the Confession of Faith, that "every sin, both original and actual, doth in its own nature bring guilt upon the sinner, whereby he is bound over to the wrath of God and curse of the law, and so made subject to death, with all its miseries spiritual, temporal, and eternal"—that is, hell! The whole thing, of course, rests upon the acceptance of the Old Testament as of equal authority with the New and upon the truthfulness of the Christian scheme of the fall, the atonement, and the redemption through Christ. But as the Christian scheme is wholly untrue there is no need to worry over it.

We hav written this to help our friend J. B. Wise out in an argument with a preacher.

Mr. Junkin's Peculiar Notions.

Mr. Junkin, of Wyandot, Ohio, rises to remark, in the Herald and Presbyter:

"Why go around by the tedious and uncertain route through Congress when we already hav the power needed [to close the post-offices on Sundays] vested in one man, our postmaster-general! Let the Christian people and all friends of the Sabbath appeal directly to him asking that he issue an order closing all offices and stopping all mails on the Sabbath. Such a proclamation will be only less in importance than that of the immortal Lincoln freeing the millions of slaves in the South. It will liberate many thousands from their Sabbath toil, and grant them that rest which is their right, and help very much in securing the proper observance of the day throughout the land. Such an appeal coming up from the people will command the attention of this good man."

Mr. Junkin seems to consider that Mr. Wanamaker administers his office for the benefit exclusivly of Christians. Mr. Junkin is no doubt a good man, as men go, but he has peculiar ideas of the duty of a postmaster-general.

Editorial Notes.

"WOMEN vote in Kansas. At the recent election in that state a woman in Wichita having safely deposited her ticket in her shopping bag went to the polls with the best intent. But being unable to find her ticket, she kept the judges waiting for ten minutes and at last voted a 'receipt for making pickles.' Whether this was a good omen or not has not yet been decided." A religious journal prints this item as an ill-concealed sneer against woman suffrage. But voting a receipt for pickles is just as sensible as voting for a Tammany Hall politician; besides, a good many thousands of male voters in the city would vote a receipt for making pickles or anything else if ballots were not put in their hands. They cannot read, yet the religious paper maintains their right to vote simply because they are males. But an ignorant woman is no worse than an ignorant man.

THE Rev. Mr. Parkhurst, from whose sermon on the present fuss in the Presbyterian church we quoted last week, sent the manuscript of the discourse to the Tribune, and the Christian Advocate picks out the following expressions for reprobation: "The very best thing in the world is love, and we are going to need quantities of that, or else before the next three years are by the Presbyterian church will be a veritable hades above ground. . . . As though God were tired and the Holy Spirit off on a vacation. . . . If the apostleship had not started before Princeton did, there would be no show for the apostleship. . . . Why, when the recent vote was passed in our presbytery indicating that one of our number would hav the chance pretty soon to stand up to the ecclesiastical rack, the moment the vote had been declared I saw one of the oldest and saintliest members of the presbytery smile with a smile that was well on toward six inches in length. . . . We do not believe that God ever told Moses to say that conies chew the cud, because conies do not chew the cud, Lev. xi, 5, to the contrary notwithstanding. . . . If Presbyterianism cannot keep out of bed without ignoring its Christian scholars and vituperating its Christian experts, the sooner it givs up the ghost the better, for it will economize medical expenses and save watchers." The Advocate thinks that "a spirit of extravagance pervades the statement of facts in the discourse, and much of it is nearly down to the usual level of Ingersoll in its wholesale railing against the church and Presbyterianism, and especially some of the Psalms of David." When Dr. Parkhurst, or anyone else, gets "down to the level of Ingersoll," he will talk better than he or anyone else does now.

Letters from Friends.

FLINT, IA., May 18, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: W. S. Bell, of Oakland, Cal., delivered a course of three Liberal lectures to a large and appreciativ audience, May 9th and 10th, at Peoria, Ia. Mr. Bell as a lecturer is clear, forcible, and entertaining. Societies in want of a lecturer cannot do better than to secure his services.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me another copy of lists of books, as a so-called Christian, a noted Seventh Day Advent minister, bought my history of the Nicene council to get the life of Constantiue the Great, and my small Infidel library is lent all the time and I cannot keep it at home. And especially Miss Gardener's books are all the go among the pure at heart. I am sending all the time for more books. I want those that oppose rotten Catholicism. The world is getting more enlightened day by day.

In sending Freethought or Deist books I giv the ladies preference, as they are the mainstay of churches and superstition.

MAKANDA, ILL., May 17, 291.

MR. EDITOR: I hav carefully read and reread Brother Wettstein's article in last week's TRUTH SEEKER, and owing to the softening of my brain, or some other cause, I am unable to see the logic of his inferences and conclusions. It requires some self-denial not to review his article, but I will not ask the space in the crowded division of your paper to which my articles are allotted, for such review. In my preceding articles I hav stated my views, and the reasons for them, in as plain English as I can command, and I am content to leave the subject, without further discussion, to your thoughtful, intelligent readers.

Very truly, W. W. WALKER.

IONIA, MICH., May 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Please find post-office order for the extra copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER sent me, also for the ANNUAL of this year. Your paper givs me good Sunday reading, while fashionable people are gone to church, not one in one thousand of whom cares for or listens to the preaching, or knows anything of it when he gets home, or ever thinks of his blood atonement professions which he tries to believe.

Now, if two wrongs will make one right,
In blood atonement take delight,
And kill a good man often,
Then chime his praises from church-bell spire
And howl ye hoarse, each pulpit liar,
A savior's blood and brimstone fire,
Till hardened sinners soften.

MR. EDITOR: A noted Presbyterian divine recently died in Denver, Col., and on his deathbed made the following confession: "I hav been a living lie all my life. I hav always believed in Liberalism, but clung to the ministry for the money there was in it. I realize that I am dying. My mind is as clear and I am as sane as at any time during my life, and I desire to state that in belief I am an Atheist. There is no power superior to nature; matter is eternal; it had no beginning, it will hav no end." His last words were, "There is none other god than Nature." Christians never tire of harping over the "deathbed repentance of Infidels." How does this confession sound to them? This is likely the conclusion which the majority of ministers arrive at near the close of life, but the confessions no doubt are suppressed by the minister in attendance. The relativs of the divine mentioned in this article were anxious that the confession be suppressed; their solicitations were of no avail. I myself was a devoted Catholic for forty years, but at last hav evoluted therefrom.

CHAS. FREDERICK HUTCHINSON.

PATCH GROVE, WIS., May 11, 291.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $4 35—$3 to renew my sub scription for the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, and $1 to help Secularize this government. It is the "widow's mite." O that it might hav the power that the widow's mite of old had, to ever increase the store for the cause for which this mite is sent. Consider me as a life subscriber. As long as I can I shall surely help the cause that much, and wish I could do a thousand times as much.

The fools are not all dead yet. Thirteen of them were dipped last Sunday by the preacher in the creek in spite of cold winds. But then I suppose the Lord tempered the winds to the shorn lambs. Bah! I should think it would make them bleat. One man has told me since that his daughter was afraid to be dipped, as she had a bad cold, but he told her not to fear, and she was dipped and her cough has stopped since—no more cough. Which is proof positiv in his estimation that the Lord takes care of those that obey his (the preacher's) commands. What superlativ nonsense! and that, too, in this day and age of time and man! When, oh, when will all the fools be dead, and when will wisdom reign? Echo answers, When? The thirty-five cents is for the "Liberal Hymn-Book," which please send. And giv my thanks to Heston, glorious Heston.

AKIN FARM, ARK., May 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I received your paper, and was well pleased with its Ingersollic tenor. You bet, Gods are scampering and disappearing before the waves of such as Shaw, Ingersoll, and yourself. Giv them Hail Columbia. Let them know that the legitimate result of sin is death, and all that is false shall be followed by evil consequences. You bet, Shaw is making them scuttle down South, a goodly number having already stepped off their flat earth and gone worlds without end. Hell is very nearly frozen over, and in time not very remote we can all skate on its ice with safety and discuss the triumphant victory. Witchcraft, incantations, magic wands (Moses's rod), and the New Jerusalem cornstalk fabric, hav been hunted for, but by all the aid of the telescope no trace can be found, save where Superstition once dragged her clanking chains through the flower-beds of innocence. Priestcraft is dying, and dying hard. In her last moments she still grits her teeth at Science, and her last whisper is Hell—her favorit word.

Dear rose, Freethought! our natural rights
Spring up and giv us truth and light;
Giv us thy colors, tints, and hues;
Giv us thy beauty so bright and so pure;
O float thy fragrance through the land!
Circle this globe on which we stand!
The flowers of spring do fade away,
They wither and decay;
But truth will stand and never fade,
And shine in endless day.

Compliments of W. A. TALLEY.

FORT FAIRFIELD, ME., May 16, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Having been presented with a copy of the TRUTH SEEKER ALMANAC, and having read Brother Heston's "Shoutin' Joe" with unalloyed pleasure and laughter, as well as having read the book all through and liked it very much, I cannot resist the desire to write you.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 28th I read several letters giving pretty exhaustiv arguments with regard to Spiritualism. Now, then, please allow me to state my brief argument as briefly as possible. Suppose, for instance, I am pretty well off (which I am not), and wish to bestow a substantial favor upon a neighbor whom I respect and withhold it from one whom I do not. I hav the power to do that. Then suppose there is a God on high, and he wishes to confer immortality upon man and not upon the brute. He has the power to do it. But how inanimate nature can confer immortality upon man and not upon the brute, is what I cannot see—is what I cannot believe as yet. That's where I stop. That is as far as I can go with my Spiritualist friends, whom I esteem very highly. I cannot possibly see why any one should expect a continued existence after death with nothing to wear, nothing to eat, nothing to drink, nothing to do, nowhere to go, nor anything else but one extremely monotonous life to eternity.

This boundless universe is self-existent, coeternal with eternity, without beginning or end. In my opinion, there never was a time when there was no time; and in my opinion there never will be a time when that sun will not shine from the starry vault above (or if there is, it will be millions of years hence) the same as it has been shining for millions of years in the past. What I mean by the above is, that this universe was never created by the Christian's mythical God.

Very respectfully, H. H. GILMAN.

CLEVELAND, O., May 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Although considerable has already been written on the badge question, I claim the privilege—with the Editor's permission—of adding to the theme by expressing my opinion. The U. M. L. emblem, designed by the late Lucy L. Churchill, West Richfield, O., is the original Freethought badge, and, according to my judgment, is the most elegant, scientific, and complete, as well as the one most widely known. Being the most comprehensiv, it is best adapted to the purpose for which such an emblem is designed, and by wearing it all classes of Freethinking and intelligent people can readily recognize each other and be brought together socially, besides numerically showing their strength to battle with the wily enemy for the overthrow of superstition and ecclesiastical power and the establishment of free speech, free press, and a free country. The United States of America has no need to copy from France, Germany, or other foreign nations; but, having produced the Universal Mental Liberty badge, which meets all requirements—and is therefore the best Freethought emblem extant—can confidently hope that in the not far distant future this design will be worn and recognized as the symbol of Liberalism in every civilized country in the world. I am the possessor of two of these unique badges—one gold and one silver—and hav been pleased and proud to wear one of them the past nine years, and shall continue to show my colors through this medium through the remainder of my life. Having expressed my appreciation of this emblem, and furthermore as "comparisons are odious," it is not necessary to make mention of the "Pansy" or "Torch of Reason" further than to say that a multiplicity of designs without special meaning or merit and inferior to the original one, are neither desirable, nor beneficial to the cause which they are supposed to represent.

JOHN JACOB.

MORVEN, N. C., May 16, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: One of the Methodist sky-pilots in our county is having quite a trouble just now. He has been giving the Infidels the devil for some time, and had a great deal to say in his pulpit about other people's children's meanness. I heard that he said considerable about some boys' playing baseball on the holy Sabbath; among other things, that Christians ought to go and take clubs and break it up if it was not stopped at once. A short time since, he was intrusted with some money belonging to the church of which he was doing the braying. A few days since, he went to look at the money and, lo and behold! fifty dollars of the Lord's money was gone. He called in one of the brothers and told him of the Lord's carelessness in letting some thief steal the money, then told said brother that it must be a little negro girl, a servant in his family, that was the thief, as it was not possible for anyone else to get it. So Mr. Preacher watched the little negro while the brother went to the stores to find some evidence in the way of bills made by the negro. When the brother returned he looked so solemn that the preacher asked him what was the matter. "Why, brother, this is an awful serious case, as the negro is innocent and your own son is the person who stole the money." So they called up Johnnie, and, like the father of his country, he couldn't tell a lie, and said, "Yes, father, I took the money." And so you see there was no stealing done. It made quite a different case from the poor little negro, as she would hav been put in jail if she had taken it. Johnnie is about eighteen years old. I notice our county paper does not say a word about the affair, but if it had been a negro or poor white trash they would hav caught it heavy. They are trying to hush up this case and keep it out of the courts. I am going to do my best to get this case before the next court, for if punishing other people does any good I fail to see just why it wouldn't work just as well with a preacher's son. So much for early Christian training and the prayers of Christian parents.

HENRY R. TEAL.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I am of the opinion, particularly after reading Mr. Laperche's views exposing humbug and fraud in the paper of May 16th, that this so-called "Spiritology" is nothing but a base imposition and a sad superstition. And so think many other readers, as is already proved. THE TRUTH SEEKER has always advocated banishment from the brain of all that is superstitious; and can it be that a "medium," masquerading so much like the preacher, after the pennies, is not too imposing on persons easily deluded? I am for the truth, manliness, enlightenment—light, no darkness until I am dead; and then it will not be my desire to suddenly spring in shrouded "spirit" shape, shocking my sweet sister did she perceive me. Your good paper, Mr. Editor, contains but little of the "spirits," but they are with us in each edition. I would, personally, be one thing or the other; and, as THE TRUTH SEEKER is Agnostic, it is certainly not Spiritualistic. I consider the two widely apart, particularly since the majority of your readers are not believing in any "Holy Spirit," a dark room "cabinet spirit," or "Cabinet Rye" spirit to any excess. You are, and so are the most of us, for truth; and, I will say, investigation. The latter has led us to be freer men and women, no longer to be tied down to any one of the many different creeds, or to be fathered by any clergyman to lead us "out of darkness." No more are we to be led by any individual into the darkness, after a sufficient admission-fee has been taken in for the performance, to view and converse with a long line of lost relativs and departed friends.

I am exactly in accord with Mr. Laperche, and others who came out previously; but further, as you will already understand, I am for eliminating "spirits" from THE TRUTH SEEKER, and suggest that that organ will continue wholly on its original lines.

Possibly I am wrong. My age is still young, and I am comparativly a recent reader of your paper, so grand in many ways. But what do you say, Mr. Editor?

I noticed also in your issue of May 16th the following words you made use of editorially: "And indeed the return to earth of one already dead and glorified, or the veritable apparition of a spirit, is a thing which far transcends the limits of credibility."

BARKER.

KIRKSVILLE, MO., May 18, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: As Spiritualism, pro and con, is being discussed through your paper, please allow me space for a few remarks upon the subject. We cannot conceive of a beginning or ending of matter, time, or space. We do not know when, how, or where the mind of man originated, nor when or where it will end, yet we know upon what it depends for manifestation or development. When a man, or the body, dies, the mind no longer manifests itself through that body. What is the mind of man? Webster's definition is, "the soul;" and his definition of soul is, "the immortal part of man." No body of matter can be moved without contact and power applied. Place a small iron or steel ball on the top of a table and move a magnet around underneath, and you can cause the ball to roll in any direction you please. The latent force in the magnet is developed or manifested through the medium of the ball; which matter or force must of necessity pass through the table and come in contact with the ball in order to move it. Who can analyze or define this invisible matter or force? Certainly no one will deny its existence. If the ball were placed upon the table without carrying out the conditions to success it would not move. Electricity, which passes through iron or steel with the rapidity of thought, must be something or nothing. Who can analyze or define it, or see the limit of its possibilities? Man, by seeking out the conditions required, has to an extent utilized this element or force by sending intelligence under the Atlantic and around the world, lighting cities, propelling cars, etc. If heavy bodies can be moved through the proper conditions by this invisible and inexplicable force, and the ball as mentioned without visible contact, may there not be other invisible forces which may, when coming in contact with proper conditions, operate in a manner mysterious and inexplicable by us? I am unable to explain the phenomena combining intelligence and force which I hav witnessed, which are not a matter of fraud, but a matter of fact. It would be useless for me to state to those with preconceived and fixed opinions what I hav witnessed in this direction, when it is considered that the report of the investigations into the matter by Zoellner and other scientists are taken by such as naught. There is no foundation in proof or fact that the intellectual part of man is not perpetuated after the death of the body. Concerning this Colonel Ingersoll neither affirms or denies. This is consistent. If there is such a thing as spirit, it must be matter, and that matter,

SCIENCE AND THE REFORMATION.

Notes and Clippings.

W. J. ALEXANDER, professor of logic and rhetoric, has been expelled from the faculty of the state University at Columbia, South Carolina, because he is a Unitarian.

A PHILADELPHIA grand jury arraigns the Sunday law of Pennsylvania as a nuisance, "an obsolete law which may hav been right and advisable in a small town in 1794, but which is now out of place in the new Philadelphia of 1891."

AN enterprising Yankee has bought the whipping-post and pillory of the Wilmington, Del., commissioners. These instruments of punishment hav done service in the Newcastle jail yard since the days of witchcraft. The "cat," a leather whip with nine leather thongs to it, was thrown in with the other traps. The present owner will remove the relics to Chicago, and exhibit them during the Fair.

THE ministry of education of Russia has addressed a circular to all school directors and superintendents ordering them to discourage, and if possible, to prevent Christian students engaging Jewish scholars to repeat with them their lessons preparing for the approaching annual examinations. Nóvoyè Vrémya and Grashdanin consider this a wise and beneficial measure. "It will preclude friendship springing up between the Jews and Christians at the schools and colleges. We hav the bitter experience to see such undesirable friendship lasting beyond the college days among the members of scholarly professions and working its pernicious influence on society."

IT is a curious fact, says the Philadelphia Record, that the Camden preachers are a prolific source of revenue to nearly every hackdriver in Philadelphia. A formal agreement exists between the two classes, which provides that all marriage fees shall be equally divided between the man who marries the couple and the man who drives them to the preacher's residence. In this manner a sharp competition has developed, and the most popular preacher is the one who numbers the largest following of enterprising hackdrivers. As a general thing the gentry who do the driving can tell a couple who intend to get married a block away.

IN discussing the dangers of paternalism in the May Arena, E. P. Powell adverts to the fact that the most outrageous assumption of unwarranted authority has occurred from that service of which we hav been most reasonably proud, the post-office. Our public carriers hav notified us, that if our social and theological views do not accord with the views of the man whom we select to be responsible for an honest mail service, our mails are closed against us. There is already a censorship of literature. Shall we hav also in due time, queries Mr. Powell, a censorship of the press and of the pulpit? This has been the invariable tendency of centralized authority.

A SINGLE glance at the plan of San Francisco, says the Sun, shows that the breeze raised there by Brother Wanamaker's purchase of a Presbyterian church for post-office site represents about such a purchase as that of St. Mark's Episcopal church in New York would hav been for similar purposes. The good people of the congregation would naturally wish to move up town, and with a million of government loot within reach, it is rather too exacting to demand that the saints should keep their hands off it. The transaction is no impeachment of their morals. Whether it is or not of Wanamaker's must be left to his friends to decide. He may be acquitted of pious roguery on the plea that maybe he is a fool. But is he?

A MOVEMENT is on foot in Washington to open the Smithsonian Institute, the National Museum, the Congressional Library, and the Corcoran Art Gallery on Sunday. The Washington Post has been publishing the views of different leading men upon the question. "The diversity of these views and the manner in which they hav been expressed," says the Post, "show that people are thinking seriously on this subject and their publication naturally results in more light being offered by those who were not originally approached on the subject. Even among clergymen there is no uniform opinion, as some favor the opening at least on an afternoon, while others are opposed to any kind of opening."

EUROPE already knows that it is going to interfere in this mad revival of the Dark Ages, the outrage on Jews in Russia—but how, when, and under what form of pretext are as yet wholly in the air. This spectacle of all Russia suddenly beginning a colossal ghost dance is so weird and inexplicable that the amazed onlookers find themselvs without plans of action for the emergency, but that they will act, and, nay, be enforced into action, seems clear enough. After the battle of the Bourses, which the Rothschilds, Bleichroders, and Oppenheims hav been obscurely waging these past few months, will come other kinds of battles, unless indeed some of the madmen underneath this grand hurly-burly of bedlam succeed in killing the lunatic who is enthroned on top of it. Doubtless, too, England will be pushed into the forefront of Europe's forcible protest. English blood is beginning to simmer over this Russian horror. It will reach the boiling-point in good time.

MR. TAINE, says the World, does not often concern himself with inconsequent matters, and perhaps in a sense he has not done so in his North American Review article on "Napoleon's Views of Religion." And yet it seems anomalous to devote a critical essay to the religious views of a man who never in all his life permitted religious or any other views to influence his conduct or to stand for a moment in the way of his selfish purposes. Napoleon himself said: "I am nothing. In Egypt I was a Mussulman; here I shall be a Catholic for the good of the people. I do not believe in religions." No essay of Mr. Taine's can more completely present the case than its subject did in these few brief sentences. Nothing can add to its completeness as a statement, or its vividness as a piece of moral and intellectual portraiture. And yet Napoleon had views on religion, and they were of consequence because they helped to make history. He regarded religion as an instrument to be used for the accomplishment of his purposes, with the same ready indifference with which he used and sacrificed human lives for the like end.

The Sunday Opening of the Exposition.

DEAR READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: It is a long time since I hav had a chat with you, or as Artemus Ward would phrase it, since you hav been blessed with an article from my "fascinatin pen." But I hav not been idle. I hav been in hot pursuit of some ministers, and their deluded lackeys. For a long time I hav been training my guns on the holy vermin on the walls of Zion, and that is the reason you hav not heard from me.

I hav been holding some discussions here in which the ministers and their pious henchmen thought proper to take a hand. An account of them I thought might interest the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. And although I may not be able to giv a detailed account of them, I may giv some interesting points in regard to them.

A minister proposed the Sunday closing of the Columbian Exposition as a subject for debate before the Naples Lyceum, and seeing my opportunity I was quick to second his motion and bring the subject before the Lyceum.

Being chosen chief disputant, for once I was fairly yoked with a minister, and I am egotistical enough to say that I inwardly laughed with delight to think how I would make him hook and kick and turn the yoke and bellow and paw dirt and stick his horn in the ground.

The debate came off Monday evening, May the 11th, and the resolution was stated as follows, viz., "Resolved, That the Columbian Exposition should be closed on Sunday." I shall giv the argument against Sunday closing as it was presented before the Lyceum, with such additions and alterations as will make it acceptable to the general reader. And it is only fair to state that I wandered from the resolution just to giv old theology a black eye and a right-hander under the fifth rib.

OPENING ARGUMENT.

MR. CHAIRMAN: When a man sits down on Sunday and writes thirty or forty pages, it is unreasonable to expect anything like finished composition. I did not attend church; I did not read the Bible; I did not pray on that day, and I did not feel the least mite guilty—only for overtaxing myself. I do not allow any minister to lead me by the nose, and so, about sundown, I went into the garden and spread some manure, just to put a little life into my deadened limbs. I did not injure anyone, and I did not feel guilty about that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want you to remember that the church has met with the most bitter opposition some of the grandest improvements and discoveries which hav ever been presented to the world, and that some of the men who hav conferred the greatest blessings upon mankind hav been put to death by ecclesiastics. I shall speak plain truth, and if anyone is shocked it will be because the truth shocks them.

I hav had many a hard-fought battle with Christianity, and if life and health are spared me I expect to fight many another battle. Because Christianity never did, and never will, mind its own business. Not content with the full exercise of its own rights, it seeks to trample down the rights of others. It learns nothing by experience, and dreads nothing so much as the tree of knowledge. It was conceived in ignorance and brought forth in folly, and yet it believes itself to be the embodiment of wisdom, and for that reason it will be overbearing and tyrannical in the future as in the past.

For two thousand years Christians hav been trying to do something for God, but that two thousand years seems to hav been entirely too short to teach them that they never did and never can help him. God is conditionless and does not need their help, even though they could render him assistance. The most barbarous and tyrannical acts ever recorded on the pages of history hav been perpetrated by Christians in order to do something for God and help him along. The greater the ignorance of men the more they run after the Gods and try to help them.

When Christians are told about the ignorance and brutality of the people, when they are referred to the condition of society when the Christian religion was at the zenith of its power, they reply, oh, that was in an ignorant age, when men were degraded and civilization was at a low ebb. Be it known to you, Mr. Chairman, Christianity was responsible for that very condition of things, and will certainly lead us back to the same condition again unless checks and bounds are set to it. It has always been a dangerous element and always will be as long as men put their trust in a cruel and vindictiv God and not in human reason.

The whole story is told when it is stated that when Christianity had the greatest power morals were at the lowest ebb, and men the most degraded and brutal. As near as I remember, Professor Draper says, "It is unfortunate for Christianity that as it became powerful learning declined, and at the revival of letters Christianity lost power."

The difficulty is, Christians believe in a God who has given his will to man. This God is perfect, consequently his will is perfect. Yet this "will" tells some of the most obscene and beastly nasty stories ever impressed with printer's type. It relates some of the most inhuman and diabolical acts ever perpetrated by man, and these acts were performed by the command of God. This "will" commands the indiscriminate murder of men, women, and helpless children, and the giving over of young girls to a brutalized soldiery.

If Christians could only learn that such commands were given by tyrannical old military chieftains, and that God never had anything to do with the old book they venerate, they would be wiser than they are to-day.

The most heartless and beastly transactions ever recorded of men hav been performed by those whom Christians claimed to be the favorits of God. Who says they were favorits of God? These favorits themselvs. And when they claimed that they were acting under the command of God, they knew that it gave them great power over the people they wished to control, and that God had no more to do with their claim than he had with Nero or any other tyrant.

Ministers to-day claim that they are acting under the sanction of God, and at the same time are governed by an old book written by ignorant men in barbarous times, when the people were ignorant enough to believe that men could play thimblerigs with the planets, and that walls of solid masonry could be blown down with rams' horns, and that men could find comfortable quarters in the bellies of big fishes.

Men whose minds are laboring under such hallucinations can never be trusted. They are tied back to the ignorance of three thousand years ago, and yet believe themselvs to be the profoundest men in the world. Their counsels are dangerous. They are laboring under a species of insanity which leads them into all manner of absurdities. So far as they hav received instruction from their religion, they are no wiser than they were a hundred years ago.

Men who hav been under instruction in a Christian church for forty years, who were as ignorant as horse blocks in the beginning, are as ignorant as horse-blocks to-day—men who cannot yoke two sentences together so as to make sense—come to me to instruct me in the way of my duty. They claim that they hav received light from on high, and can see with a "spiritual" eye, while I see only with a "natural" eye. That God's marvelous light has been shed upon them, while I am in nature's darkness, and so they kindly offer to take me by the hand and conduct me along the path of duty, so that I will not sin against the church or the minister, and will show some kind of reverence for the consummate fools whom the church has produced. And this is what the church does for men. It transforms them into egotistical asses who delight in nothing so much as their own braying. And what has all this to do with the Sunday closing of the Exposition?

It has a great deal to do. An impartial history of Christianity shows that it has always been opposed to human progress. That those who hav been the most under its influence hav been the most arrogant and ignorant. That the countries in which it has exerted the greatest power are the most backward and superstitious. That the advice of the church could never be safely followed. And that to take her advice now in the case of the closing of the Exposition on Sunday would prove as suicidal as to take the advice of a man in regard to business transactions who had squandered a fortune.

Only a short time ago I saw a little Christian advice which was given in a little Christian paper. It was a caution, which had great need of being cautioned. Thusly: "Beware of pretended science which contradicts the Bible." And that is just where Christians get stranded—in rejecting everything which does not harmonize with the Bible, and in trying to warp the Bible so as to make it harmonize with well-established facts. What kind of science would it be which would harmonize with the account of creation as recorded in the book of Genesis? And with the old flood story, and the Jonah story, and with Joshua's great cup and ball feats with the planets, and with Elisha's ascent without a balloon, and with Samson's wonderful jawbone exploits, and the story of old Samuel and lots of other dead men who jumped out of their graves and galloped around the country. And then there is the story of all the waters of Egypt being turned into blood by a lot of Egyptian magicians, and three children dancing a double rigadoon in a fiery furnace without raising a sweat.

Well, I would like to see some scientific works arranged so as to harmonize with the Christian's belief. I should think to read them understandingly one would needs stand on his head.

And then to think that men with minds thus befooled and bewildered should assume to tell men of sense what to do and how to conduct themselvs, and try to make the world believe that they giv tone and moral bent to society. Men who believe in such nonsensical drivel had better set themselvs right before attempting to instruct others. Until they do so they will be like sheep in the mire, the more they struggle to attract attention the deeper they will sink.

Who are the men who are so anxious for Sunday closing of the Exposition? They belong to the same class of men who figured so conspicuously during the Dark Ages, when all institutions of learning were suppressed—when ninety-nine out of every hundred could neither read nor write. When the priest had more to do in the family than the husband and father, and was present at every marriage and birth and at every death. When the priest instead of a doctor was called when people were sick. When consecrated wafers and holy water, instead of proper medicin, were dealt out when folks were sick. When the patient was taken to some shrine cure, or rubbed with holy oil, or looked upon or touched some old rag which had been worn or touched by some old saint. If such remedies failed to restore the patient, it was conceded by all good Christians that it was the will of God that the patient should die.

Young men of sense, I appeal to you, is it safe to trust to the counsels of men who hav brought about such results?

Epidemics broke out in Christian cities reeking with filth, and swept thousands to untimely graves. Human life was shortened down to an average of twenty-six years. Through the efforts of scientists, whom Christians denounced as men doing the work of the devil, as many liv to the age of seventy now as lived to the age of forty then. That was a time when the church not only controled the people but the state. And that is where Christianity will land us every time if we are not on our guard.

The closing of the Exposition on Sunday is a step in that direction. It is a measure concocted by the clergy, and is to be rushed through in their interest. For they well know that when the sanctity of Sunday is gone, their holy jig is up.

The clergy hav been noted for opposing every reform and improvement. When the power of steam was applied to the propelling of boats, Christians sent up their cry of indignation, and put forth the most strenuous opposition, and declared it was thwarting the will of God. They claimed that God had given the winds to waft the vessels up and down the rivers and over the trackless ocean, and that men ought to be satisfied with what God had given them. And when a boiler explosion occurred, they said these stew-pots of hell excited the wrath of God, and that he caused the boilers to explode as a token of disapproval.

So the church denounced the art of printing, and the Copernican theory of the solar system, and the telescope and imprisoned the inventor, and for years would not allow a book to be printed until it was examined and approved by some Holy John Wanamaker of that period.

Even so grand a project as the discovery of America, which has conferred such incalculable benefit upon the world, was opposed by the church and condemned at the council of Salamanca. The fanning-mill was in like manner condemned, and church-members would not eat bread at the sacramental table which had been made from wheat run through the fanning-mill. They called it the devil's rattle-box, and said it blew chaff into God's face. And thus I might go on and spend a whole evening in showing how Christians hav opposed improvements and reforms and persecuted and murdered reformers.

In view of such facts, is it not about time to say to the dominating spirit of the church, "Thus far and no farther?" If there are no bonds or checks to be put upon the overbearing spirit of the church and the clergy there will be a full union of the church and the state, and we shall soon be going backward like a crawfish to the bestiality of the Dark Ages.

To-day the church claims to be the advocate of every reform. But how long has it been since the good preacher stopped preaching an everlasting hell and infant damnation? Who are the men who hav broken the spinal column of superstition, and who hav driven the church into the practice of a little decency, and taught the people that they hav rights which they may exercise in defiance of the clergy? Such men as Bruno, whom the Christians burnt at the stake; such men as Dr. Priestly, who escaped from his house when it was in flames—set on fire by Christian fanatics; such men as Voltaire, Diderot, Gibbon, Paine, and others whom the church and clergy hav cursed a thousand times over.

Who exposed the horrid doctrin of infant damnation and an endless hell, and made the people understand that none but a brutal God would issue such decrees? Such men as Hosea Ballou, Abner Kneeland, and Theodore Parker, whom the church has denounced as Infidels.

Has the world suffered to any great extent because infants are now believed to be too innocent to be damned? Hav we retrograded in morals because the inhuman doctrin of endless punishment is no longer taught or believed?

Has the church been right in these matters? Then why allow a few clerics to close the Exposition on Sunday and to trample down our rights?

Their kingdom is not of this world; let them attend to their prayer and keep on the right side of their God.

Is it not a fact that the minds of men hav been lifted up and imbued with a spirit of independence just in proportion as the clergy has lost influence over the people? If we should cut loose from all superstitious notions, would not man be the better, and would God fare any worse? God cannot suffer, while man is subject to many ills in life. If we should turn our attention more to the happiness and welfare of man, and not spend so much time with the Gods, who do not need our help, and can take care of themselvs, would not the world be better for it?

Let us try the experiment at the Exposition and throw open the doors on Sunday, and make everybody happy by doing all the good we can, and if we find out that it makes God mad then we will close up the doors every Sunday, and put the Lord's seal upon them when we hav another Exposition.

CLOSING ARGUMENT.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The reverend gentleman has tried to prove that Sunday rest is a physical necessity. And he has wearily quoted from what he claims to be high medical authority to prove that his claim is well founded. Why did he not quote ecclesiastical authority? He could hav got a perfect surfeit from such men as Talmage, the two Wesleys, the two Sams; in short, he could not hav run amiss among such men as Anthony Comstock, soap-boiler Colgate, and Holy John Wanamaker. And just as many doctors as are under the influence of the church would giv just such testimony as the clerics might demand. But the facts are that as Sunday is generally kept, it is a physical damage instead of a physical necessity. The voice of nature is worth more in this case than the testimony of all the doctors and preachers in the world.

In the first place, if God ever appointed a day as a rest-day or as holy time, he ought to observe that day himself, which according to Christian testimony he does not. For Christians declare that the planets could not be held in their orderly courses if God should withdraw his sustaining energy for a moment of time. There could not be one pulsation of the heart, neither would the rains descend nor vegetation grow, without God's sustaining help. So that God must be exerting his all-sustaining energy every moment of time, and therefore busy on Sunday as on every other day.

And then again, if God had had special regard for a particular day, he would hav endowed animals with instincts which would hav caused them to conduct themselvs differently on that day from what they do on other days. But the cattle graze, the birds sing and bill and coo and build their nests, and the lambs gambol, on that day, as they do on any other day.

That is not all. It is not for the physical benefit of man to rest—that is, to do nothing (for that is the Christian idea of it)—one day in seven.

Let a man cease from labor of any kind for three months and then attempt to do a day's work, physical or mental, and he will find himself disqualified for any great exertion.

When I was attending school there was usually a vacation of four to six weeks during the season of haying and harvesting. There were many farmer's sons who worked on the farm during the vacation. Nothing was more frequent than to hear them tell how much they suffered when they first commenced work. They said it took about a week to work up their muscles so as to do an ordinary day's work. And I hav passed through that bitter experience more than once myself. And I hav heard Professor Robinson, who had a large experience in teaching, say that the first week after vacation was about wasted, that it usually took about that length of time "to work the boys into the harness and bring them down to solid work."

Over fifty years I hav been engaged as a mechanic, and during that time I hav given employment to many other mechanics, and I hav heard more complaints from men on Monday than on any other day in the week. There is scarcely a mechanic who has worked with other mechanics who has not heard of "blue Monday."

Among all animals, man included, there is a natural season of rest and a season of exercise, and those seasons are night and day. After a good night's rest and sleep, such as nature requires, a man is as well prepared for a day's work as he ever can be. During the night, the natural time for rest and sleep, the muscles do not relax. But if the rest is continued longer than nature requires the muscles do relax, and one is incapacitated for laborious exercise in a corresponding ratio. There is no more need of resting one day in seven than there is in eating one day in seven or sleeping one day in seven. The idea of Sunday rest is a clerical trick and has no foundation in nature or reason. All this pretended sympathy put up by the clergy for the rest of the workingman is a mere sham, and has a pound of hypocrisy in it for every grain of real sympathy. There is no man or animal that will liv one day less on account of not resting on Sunday, unless they are overworked the other six days in the week. I hav said more upon this Sunday rest question, perhaps, than I ought, but I was anxious to strip the shuck from this old worm-eaten chestnut and let the people know how the ministers hav imposed upon them.

The honorable gentleman is pleased to refer to my character and influence. So far as my character is concerned I hav only to say, my record is before the people, and by that I am willing to abide. That record is probably beyond the reach of any man but myself. I may injure myself, but it is quite late in the day for anyone to injure me.

If I had a lawyer's license (the gentleman referred to is a lawyer) and belonged to the church, and would espouse the dirtiest and slimiest causes, and declare the right to be the wrong and the wrong to be the right for money, and indorse all the filth and abominations of the Bible, I might be a man of character in the gentleman's estimation.

There is a good man who belongs to the church and livs in this vicinity who goes every year to some dealer in agricultural implements and bargains for a mowing-machine on trial. After cutting his hay it is returned to the dealer as not satisfactory. For years, as I am informed, this good man has cut his hay with machines on trial. He is a man of character.

There are thieves and perjurers and adulterers in the church, but they are regarded as men of character by all good Christians as long as they believe in the old hocus-pocus hallucination. I am inclined to think that the gentleman would hav quite a job on hand to find any man who will say that I hav willfully wronged him. JOHN PECK.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

Is the Bible of Divine Origin?

There can be but one way to answer this question, and that is to "search the scriptures" and find, if we can, in its pages from Genesis to Revelation the footprints of divinity. A magnificent temple, fashioned after the most beautiful style of architecture, shows the skill of the architect, and a miserable hovel displays the ignorance or incompetency or poverty of its builder. The wonderful poems of Byron and the plays of Shakspere show the master-hand of their creators, and the songs of Moore and of Burns display the inspirations of their authors. Let us take up the Hebrew Bible and see its authors' claims to divinity. If it was inspired by Jehovah then the power of Jehovah must be written on every page, and the truth of its contents be manifest to every observing mind.

In Genesis we learn that God made the world in one day, and then he made the sun to rule the day and the moon to rule the night, and the idea plainly conveyed here is that the earth was the great center of creation, and that the "firmament" with its sun and moon and stars were created for the earth for "signs and for seasons." Can any intelligent being believe this absurd story of the creation? Does any man of even ordinary intelligence believe that the world was made in a day? Does not this story of the earth's creation display the ignorance of the savage, rather than the wisdom of a God?

Let us leave out the absurd story of the creation and fall of man, and pass to the fable of the flood. Here God, the author of the Bible, is supposed to hav wiped from the face of the earth, with a great flood, every living creature save and except Noah and his immediate family, and one pair of every living creature of the earth. Now, laying aside the folly of a God seeking to destroy the works of his own hand that he had made for his own pleasure, can we believe that Noah did as the Bible says he did, carry with him into the ark two of every beast, bird, reptil, and insect that inhabited the earth? Did he send to Australia and get a pair of kangaroos, or to America for a pair of grizzly bears and a pair of buffaloes, etc.? Did he send to the Arctic circle for a pair of walruses, or to India for a pair of tigers, or to Africa for a pair of elephants or hippopotamuses or boa constrictors, or to Canada for a couple of pole-cats? Does any man, with brains enough to fill a thimble, believe such a story?

As a fiction it does not approach the most airy romances of Munchausen for probability. Where does the divine show itself in the story of the flood? Echo answers, where?

Now let us pass the delectable stories of Abraham and Lot and Jacob and Judah, and go down into Egypt and see Jehovah warring against Pharaoh in his efforts to emancipate his children from the bondage of the Egyptians. Here he hardened Pharaoh's heart that he might show his (God's) power in Egypt. How did he manifest his power? If the Bible is true he exhibited the characteristics of a devil rather than of a God. He brought upon Egypt his locusts and frogs, his lice and murrain, his darkness and pestilence and death, punishing an innocent populace for the sins of their rulers. Could a being so wickedly unjust and so wantonly cruel claim the divine attributes of a God? In Ex. xii, 35, 36, he, through his servant Moses, ordered his people to "spoil the Egyptians" by the most wanton and abject deception. Do we find in this the characteristics of a God? Do we find in his abetting deception and theft that which commands our adoration? Can we arrive at any other conclusion than that this whole story is a myth, born of superstition and ignorance?

Then let us leave these revolting fables and come down to the book of Leviticus. Here he appears as a lawgiver and gives the most minute directions as to "burnt offerings," once "sin offerings," telling the priests how they shall dispose of the hide and feet and head and "inwards" of the bullocks and she-goats that he commanded the Jews to offer as a propitiation for their evil deeds. Now, what sane man of this day supposes for one moment that an intelligent God would require such offerings at the hands of his people. Are not rather the thoughts of the savage and the hand of the crafty priesthood apparent in these entire pages? Why should a God command amid the "thunders of Sinai" that "the kid should not be seethed in the milk of its mother?" Let an intelligent lawyer read Num. v, 12-31, and say whether a fourth-rate police court lawyer would advocate such nonsensical legislation as is therein contained. And yet we must believe that all this horrible, criminal bosh was inspired by a divine being, and what is worse, we must believe it or be damned. I turn from such revolting thoughts and allow the theological dog to enjoy his vomit.

Let us pass along through the books of Judges and Kings, and avoiding the horrible pictures there of the moral depravity of these Bible heroes (?), such as Samson and Saul and David and Solomon, who were the "chosen of God" where the friendship of this supposed deity is manifested for the murderer, the polygamist, and the adulterer, where our children are pointed to David as "a man after God's own heart," when his record for blood and crime is not surpassed by Nero's, let us close these pages reeking and festering with crime and debauchery, and let us take up the New Testament, and let me ask the candid and thinking man if in the whole story of Christ, from the conception to the cross, there is a single ray of reason or the slightest foundation for its truth. Why the necessity of such a plan of salvation? Why the remotest cause for such a birth and such a death? Go through the pages of the four gospels and find in the life or teachings of Jesus one single act worthy of a God, one single word that showed him to be in advance of his day and generation. By their own stories they make him out to be susceptible of wrath; and his conduct in driving the merchants and moneychangers from the temple with a scourge; his cursing the fig-tree because it bore no fruit out of season—all these showed him to be human and only human. His conduct in the garden of Gethsemane and his cries upon the cross exhibited the human. He upon whose death depended the salvation of millions of lost souls (?), when he stood face to face with death and cried, "Father, if it be thy will, remove this cup from me," showed that he sought to avoid work he had left heaven to perform (?). Thousands of men with no pretensions of divinity hav met death to save a single life, but here a son of God, and an equal of God himself, wept all night in a garden, and cried in his despair upon the cross, because he had to die that millions of immortal souls might liv. Does this show his divinity? Does this story show the inspiration of a divine author? I appeal to the intelligence of the human race, has not the day for these false claims passed, and ought not the Bible to be laid aside with the myths and fables of the Dark Ages? If we say it is God's word, we but make God a teacher of falsehoods, we but make him the source and fountain-head of evil, and then he is no longer God.

If there is a God, and if we are to find him out, the student and the scientist will reveal him. The minds that grasp the mighty problem of the future will eventually solve the mysteries of life and perhaps of death; the canting priest and the hidebound theologian, with his back turned to the future and his face fixed upon the setting sun of superstition, can never solve the question of the existence of a God.

Bury the horrid doctrins of blood atonement; blot out the foul creeds of the Christian church; tear down your altars built to your bloody Jehovah, and let us instead build colleges and schools to train and improve the mind; let us endow hospitals and homes for the sick and the poor, and with a love for our fallen brothers, and an earnest desire to improve and better our race, the mysteries that filled our fathers with fear and superstition will vanish, and a millennium dawn upon the world such as no lover of humanity ever dreamed of in the past.

Funeral Customs.

Tyranny of custom keeps multitudes in slavery, and mystical superstitions make them cowards. Probably every community of the different human races has some peculiar funeral customs. Some savage tribes place food and weapons of battle with the corpse in a grave. Some Christian folks will sit up all night in a kind of silent, smothered terror, while their dearest of earthly kin lies dead in an adjoining room. Others will call in their friends at such time, and with candles, ale, and cakes keep cheery and wakeful. Each follows the prevailing local custom; and should either depart materially from it the neighbors would be shocked.

Death is the termination of life. It is the universal destroyer. It makes no distinction on account of wealth or creed. It is the great leveler of all distinctions. But, though it is the inevitable end of everyone, by the law of life no one while in fairly good health realizes the fact; for this law of nature says to us, "Liv as though you were never to die." The croaking priest, however, tries to reverse this happy law, and cries, "Fear God, and liv as though each day might be your last."

To every conscious person, of whatever creed, death is an unwelcome visitor. We resist it as long as possible. Very likely the highly-cultured Christian dreads its approach more than does the savage; for his enjoyments in life are greater and his faith in a future happy hunting ground perhaps less firm.

In Christian countries, on the death of a person it is the custom for the relativs or those in charge to employ some one of the dozen or more different kinds of priests to officiate at the funeral and tell them about two other worlds—one of endless joy and one of endless torment—and to figure out the chances of the deceased. Formerly the benefit of a doubt was not allowed the corpse, but latterly the ruling is generally reversed.

Then the priest-doctor, if at all orthodox, will proceed to diagnose the living ones present, and inform them that their chances for the world of torment are sure unless they take and pay for at once his peculiar concoctions. He will encourage the exhausted mourners by referring to their frailty, and telling them that their lives are held in the hand of God by a single thread and that he may let go any minute! He will startle the more robust, in trying to make them realize their own approaching death, by rehearsing some of his terrible judgments on man, and calculating the danger of their being struck by his lightning before another morning.

Probably the same priest visited the deceased while sick, and comforted him with the soothing inspired words, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hand of the living God," and then asked him, as he lay exhausted from pain and fever, if he was prepared to meet this fearful God. These are the spiritual comforts usually indulged in on such occasions.

The priest may know very little of the geography of this world, or how it came to pass that its surface is corrugated—thereby presenting to our vision such a variety of beautiful landscape—seas and mountains and vales. But he fancies he knows all about the lovely gardens and golden streams in his world of joy, and the sulphur lakes and fiery streams in his world of torment.

He may never hav had an introduction to an earthly king or even to a president; but he is familiar with the potentate of the skies, communes and feasts with him daily, receives his instructions and credentials, and claims to be his embassador. He is familiar, also, with the great warm-hearted ruler of his world of torment—knows all about his cunning devices to ensnare souls, gain votes, and enlarge his census.

Like the man who dreamed that he loaned a sum of money to a neighbor, and who told the dream so many times that he came at last to think it was a fact and sued the neighbor; so the priest, through various repetitions from early childhood, comes to believe his imaginations to be realities.

As the embassador of an earthly monarch, with his credentials and salary in his pocket, feels himself to be a part of the running gear of a great power, so the priest, with his titles and fatlings fancies himself to be a necessary part of the machinery that runs the universe.

Now, this guide priest to his two other worlds, when allowed in the sickroom often increases the fear and fever of the patient with his solemn nostrums. He is worse than useless there. And he can do no good at a funeral. Whether man is immortal he knows no more than anyone else; though he can tell more that he doesn't know than anyone else can. But custom almost compels his presence on such occasions; and according to custom, also, he brings forward his two other worlds and their rival rulers, and consoles the bereaved mourners with the pious hope that the deceased has (or will hav at some time or other) escaped the one and entered the other. The priest has only added to the gloom and doubt.

Ordinarily, the dying hav relativs and friends. Let them meet at the bier, and each one hav some kind word to say, some pleasant reminiscence to relate, or some good deed performed by the departed one to mention. And should the bereaved family be in but moderate circumstances, with the doctor's and undertaker's bill in prospect, let the friends present inaugurate a new and better custom by taking up a collection on the spot.

Certainly a priest would be entirely out of place at my funeral; and I earnestly desire my relations and friends to manage affairs on that occasion without his dreary, depressing tones. L. G. REED

Another Challenge to Mediums.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Several months ago I published a "Challenge to Mediums" in THE TRUTH SEEKER offering to deposit $100 with you to put the so called slate-writing manifestations to a test, I agreeing to comply with the usual conditions, which challenge has never been accepted (for obvious reasons). I now propose to test the genuineness of the alleged spirit materialization, and in the following manner:

It is claimed that when a person is scattered into fragments by a dynamite or other explosion, his spirit remains intact, and goes on its way rejoicing as though nothing had happened. If this is really the case, it of course cannot injure a genuin spirit to subject it to the much milder ordeal of firing a few harmless bullets at it, or running its body through in a playful sort of way with a sword or bayonet. A materialized spirit that could be harmed in such simple fashion would not be very immortal. In view of which I propose the following: I will deposit $100 with THE TRUTH SEEKER on the announcement in this or any other public journal by any medium that he or she will allow me or any other person I may select to fire a bullet at such an alleged materialized spirit within short range. As a guarantee of good faith on the part of the medium I only stipulate that he or she deposit the traveling expenses with said company, if either myself or my substitute are required to leave our respectiv places of residence, these expenses to be returned with the $100 to the medium if my challenge is accepted as proposed.

But I will accept as a genuin spirit-manifestation even the following perfectly harmless test devoid of anything of a violent character. If I be permitted during a séance to grasp the hand of an alleged materialized spirit with my own perfectly bare hands, I agreeing to do nothing but merely hold the hand or hands of the "spirit," and also not to do anything to disturb the sitting or cause it to be disturbed, conforming strictly to all the usual rules; if, then, this "spirit" can vanish from my sight and that of the other members of the circle without a violent struggle on the part of the "spirit," and without being assisted by any of the sitters to become released from my grasp, I shall regard the form I held as a real, genuin spirit, and the medium entitled to the money deposited with THE TRUTH SEEKER.

These proposed tests are given with the sanction of the Brotherhood of Moralists, which organization has been charged with opposing the investigation of these alleged spirit phenomena.

This offer is good for either the slate-writing or materialization test. If all three are to be made, I will deposit $150 with THE TRUTH SEEKER as a forfeit. Tests to be made either at, or within one hundred miles of, my place of residence, Marengo, Ill., sixty miles northwest of Chicago. If required to leave town, the manifestations to take place within five days after my arrival at the place where the sittings are to be held. If held at Marengo, they may be continued for a month. Spiritualist papers please copy.

"Homeless For a Week."

Under the above heading I noticed an article by Edwards Rousseau in THE TRUTH SEEKER for May 23 1, wherein an effort is made to prescribe a remedy for poverty, and a panacea for shiftlessness. The hero of the tale is an individual bearing the real or mythical name of Henry Billings, who sought to better his condition by emigrating from some unknown part of New Jersey to the commercial metropolis; and who not having the means to support himself until he could obtain work, was obliged to beg. We are not informed of the cause of his being out of employment, whether discharged for cause or without cause; nor are we told whether he took a recommendation from his former employer or ran off to keep from paying his debts. For all the information the record gives he may hav been a criminal fleeing from justice, whose theft or other crime had not yet been discovered. Nevertheless, we are told that when such a man goes from his nativ place to a large city to hunt work among strangers, that social system is rotten and barbarous which permits him to remain for ever so short a period unemployed. And, as though this kind of social guardianship were not enough, it is further asserted that the United States government should, under pains and penalties of otherwise being denominated a curse, adopt a system of federal paternalism over the poor and confiscating repression of the rich, which would provide, as Mr. Rousseau says, not only "an equal right to the use of a share or section of land, but to any, every and all parts of it," to every man who wants it.

It seems to me that if the government should recognize the equal rights of all men to all of the land, those who were able to assert and maintain their rights would get and keep all of the land to the exclusion of others, without paying anything for them, and that the only benefit derived would be an intolerable tax which none but the rich can afford to pay, and which would therefore result in greater accumulations of landed property in the hands of the rich. Rich landlords could hold their possessions and pay taxes on them longer than labor could afford to starve. Labor would be compelled to pay the high tax in addition to a reasonable percentage of profit, or rent, to landlords.

As to Mr. Billings, his penniless condition is admitted. If the land, or opportunities, were free, how could he be expected to maintain himself while raising a crop for the market? Mr. Rousseau says he could hav gone to market-gardening. How could he build his fences, hire the ground plowed, buy his gardening implements and seed? Was not the offer of the "pitiful pittance of $8 a week" as wages infinitly preferable to these "natural opportunities" which we hear so much about? A few days ago I talked with two strong, healthy young men who had come to Kansas from Switzerland about a year ago. They said they could earn only about $1 per week in that country, while here they could earn four or five times as much. They were glad to get a sum considerably less than Mr. Billings's "pitiful pittance."

I admit that the laborer's condition in this country, aside from the aggravation which he often puts upon it by intemperance, carelessness, and insubordination, is not as good as it might be; but it is far better than it is in any other country, and the poor of other countries show their appreciation of this fact by emigrating to the United States in increased numbers every year. Employment and wages depend, to a great extent, upon the law of supply and demand; and the regulation of these two factors, and the maintenance of a proper equilibrium between them, depend almost entirely upon the proper diversification of our industries. In Kansas, we need flax and linen factories worse than we need the single tax. Nothing but reduced railroad freights has saved the West from bankruptcy; but if you will come west with your factories, we will agree to ease up on the railroads and giv Eastern farmers a chance. If Mr. Billings had access to the "natural opportunities," I suppose he could find work in mines, factories, and stone quarries, but who would want to help to make a market for his products unless the government guarantees to consumers the sacred right of exclusiv possession of property whereon and wherein to use those articles of consumption? Do "natural opportunities" include houses, furniture, etc., free gratis to the 'squatter?" If not, what will wage earners gain by the change?

Why Does Not the Bible God Destroy the Bible Devil?

In the New Testament we read, in substance, that through the medium of the so called son of God—"he by whom the worlds were made," as St. John puts it—the devil was to be cast out, and an end put to sin.

But if the Bible record is true, God created all things; therefore, if God destroys the devil, whether by the agency of Jesus Christ, his son, or otherwise, he would be destroying a part of his own creation, else the devil is nothing, but simply a myth. If God did not create the devil (a thing), then the Bible story is false. We must logically conclude that either the devil is self existing, or else, as above noted, he is a myth, a non-existent, of no more reality than a jack-o'-lantern, therefore can hav no power to tempt, draw, or force mankind into sinful thoughts, words, and deeds.

If the Bible God is truly an omnipresent being, as the Christians claim, and if he also has a personal identity that is everywhere present throughout the boundless and unthinkable extent of space, then he is in size as unbounded, unthinkable, and unmeasureable as space itself.

Now, I would simply state that, since if God can not possibly step outside of space, then all things inside of space must be inside of God's identical, all-pervading being or personality, therefore the devil, as a personal being, having identity, must surely be within God, the same as all other identical things are, or else he is nowhere; for he cannot be placed outside of space, nor of God, since it is impossible that there can be any outside of space.

Furthermore, let me state, if God created this earth (small though it is compared to millions of suns and planets) out of nothing, as Christian theologians declare, then he must hav created all other material worlds out of nothing, and all other things as well, even the devil not excepted.

Surely, then, the devil is nothing; the Bible is nothing; all things, made of nothing, are surely nothing (the same as ice, made of water, is water still, chemically considered), or the devil, either as an identical or imaginary being, is just as much a part and parcel of God, located inside of God, the omnipresent being, as the lungs, heart, blood, bones, etc., are inside of, and so are parts of, man's personal being. If the so-called infallible Bible word of God is true, then the above reasoning, being based on Bible teaching, must be true also. But it is only to be considered true, I am sure, by Bible believers, or by willfully blind, unreasonable men and women. According to such theological wishywashy ideas, it is not possible for God to destroy the devil, only as he destroys a part of himself, or of his internal organization.

In all which ideas the author of this communication disbelieves. All thinking minds, who reason logically, believe there are eternal, uncreated forces of nature, combining two or more of certain pure, invisible gases into various chemically compound matter, both fluid and solid. That such is the only actual creator in existence; thus setting aside such a being as a great omnipresent, personal God; accepting nature as being perfect in all its manifest and unchangeable laws of action. Therefore, as pure nature is omnipresent, almighty, and good, we will consent to drop out one o and call nature God; thus making the old saying true, good is God and God (nature) is good.

Mistakes of Ingersoll.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Colonel Ingersoll, in his late eulogy on Shakspere, makes more mistakes in a single paragraph about Bacon than he can point out in the longest chapter of the five books of Moses. The most unfortunate of these is a false quotation from Bacon's "Essay on Love," and a consequently erroneous inference, as follows:

"Love is ever a matter of comedy and tragedy; it worketh mischief like a siren or a fury." We know that the author of "Romeo and Juliet" never wrote that.

What Bacon did write is this:

As to the stage, love is ever matter of comedies, and now and then of tragedies; but in life it doth much mischief, sometimes like a Siren sometimes like a Fury.

Are not the plays of Shakspere forcible illustrations of the truth of this sentiment?

W. H. BURR.

Washington, D C. May 28, 1891.

Subduing the Catholic Church in Italy.

The Italian laws for the suppression of religious guilds and fraternities, and for the abolition of chaplains in hospitals, asylums, and prisons, began to go into effect in February last. The result is extraordinary. Until a few Sundays ago, there were five thousand three hundred masses celebrated in Rome every Sunday. The number is now reduced to eight hundred. One hundred and fifty two churches are to be closed at once, and their altars demolished. The pictures and statues, except such as the state thinks proper to reserve for public galleries, are to be sold at public auction. In the rest of Italy they will be destroyed, and not even remote villages will be exempt from this stern decree.

Steps are also being taken to prevent officers and soldiers from attending mass Sundays, military duties being imposed on them during church hours.

All sacred names are being erased from the school books, and sacred emblems are removed from the school rooms. The laws have created the utmost bitterness among the clergy. The pope is resolved to spare no efforts to assist emigration to America and Africa. An enormous number of ecclesiastics, who have been receiving salaries from religious institutions, are now without a means of support.

The Germans and Prohibition.

As an American citizen of German birth I beg leave to state the following on this subject.

It is an undeniable fact that the majority of the Germans in the United States are anti-prohibitionists. This is not to be wondered at, if one takes into consideration the views prevailing or being entertained in Germany as to spirituous or alcoholic beverages. Those views best appear from some well-known German sayings.

They read:

Wer niemals einen Rausch gehabt,
Der ist kein braver Mann.

Translated:

Who never was tipsy,
Is not a brave man.

Wer nicht liebt Weib, Wein, und Gesang,
Der bleibt ein Narr sein Lebelang.

Translated:

Who loves not woman, wine, and song,
Remains a fool his whole life long.

Das Wasser gibt dem Ochsen Kraft,
Dem Menschen Bier und Rebensaft;
D'rum, Brueder, trinket Bier und Wein:
Wer wollte denn ein Rindvieh sein!

Translated:

Water give the ox strength, you know,
Beer and grape juice to man do so;
Therefore, brethren, drink beer and wine;
We don't want to be beasts bovine.

(The German text renders this kind of a rhyme necessary.)

Whatever may be said of those sayings, one thing is sure and certain, namely: the Germans of this country will never learn to see what harm it can do to an Anglo-American stomach if a German naturalized citizen drinks a glass of wine or beer; or what good it can do to a German American stomach if a native American citizen eats a dish of Boston baked beans. In other words, they believe that eating and drinking are every man's own business; he is entitled to attend to himself, both by reason and by the fundamental principles of this free country. Avoidance of drunkenness they consider as a matter of self-respect. Prohibition is plainly the silliest thing in the world. JOHN GEORGE HERTWIG.

Johann Guttzeit, speaker of the Magdeburg, Prussia, Ethical Society, has been sentenced to four weeks' imprisonment for blasphemy.

For telling a minister of the gospel "what is the truth" Mr Stengele, of Altona, Holstein, Germany, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

The agitation in favor of the pansy badge has been taken up by the German Freethinkers of this country, and the Freidenker devotes quite a space to the advocacy of that emblem.

A large Freethought society which has for some months existed in the city of Mons, well organized and in financial respects well off, has joined the Belgian Freethought Federation.

Secular funerals are getting to be very common in Spain The latest one that has come to our notice is that of D Antonio Fernandes, of Meres, on which occasion Senor Cenfuegos delivered an excellent address on "Liberty of Conscience."

A statue to Garibaldi was unveiled at Nice, France, on Saturday, June 7th. The French ministers of state, Garibaldi's family, and over one hundred and fifty deputations from France and Italy witnessed the ceremony. No religious mummeries marred the unveiling of the statue of the famous patriot and Freethinker.

The Freethought press in Europe universally condemns the treatment of D Vaelkel. We notice especially Fritänkaren and Las Dominicales both of which publish a translation of our biographical sketch which appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 14th. Our German, Belgian, French, and Dutch exchanges voice the same sentiment.

According to the educational report of 1884 only 1 466 913 of the 15 000 000 children of the Russian empire attend schools. In 60 governments there is only one school for secondary instruction to every 18 000 boys and 22 000 girls. Only 63 per cent of the boys of an age to attend a public high school can be accommodated, and for girls the number of such schools is even more insignificant.

A large increase of cloisters for monks and nuns is reported from Austria; there being about four thousand at the present time. This reminds us of the ex nun Barbara Uiryh, who died lately. She entered a cloister at the age of twenty-four years; an investigating committee found her when she was fifty-one imprisoned in a cell, an idiot, made so by the inhuman treatment that she had been subjected to. She was removed to an asylum for the insane in Krakau Austrian Poland. Twenty-one years' cell-imprisonment and twenty-two years in a lunatic asylum, such are the blessed rewards that the Roman Catholic church gives to her female devotees.

The city of Gefle, Sweden, has not had much peace of late. Knut Wicksell, a Freethinker, republican, and well-known scientific writer, has treated the inhabitants to a dose of republicanism in his lecture, "The Republic," and Mr. Lennstrand was there the three Sundays previous and lectured for good audiences. The lecture on May 4th in Boulongerskogan was listened to by over five thousand people.

In Austria the trouble continues between Freethinkers and bigoted officials in high offices. The common law of Austria which came into force Jan. 1, 1812, according to which a non-Christian stands outside the protection of the law, and a marriage with such an individual is null and void, is yet for all practical purposes the ruling one. The revised constitution of May 25 1868, guarantees all citizens equal protection and rights irrespectiv of their religious or non-religious belief, but as the criminal law has not been revised too, justice can be had by those only who can afford a long trial. Poor Austria!

The Logic of Protestantism.

From the Catholic Review.

It is really surprising with what tenacity the old Protestant tradition keeps its hold on he minds even of many intelligent, educated men. Evidences of its falsity are constantly multiplying around them. They hav only to open their eyes and look about them to be flooded with the light of truth; but unfortunately they deliberately shut their eyes and refuse to receive the light. They do not like to giv up their position and acknowledge that they are wrong. They cling to their prejudices; they will not read—they will not inquire, or if they do they read and inquire with their clouded spectacles on. They see, or ought to see, that Protestantism is all going to pieces. The plow of disintegration is cutting deep furrows through every Protestant sect. Their platforms of doctrin are all breaking up. The spirit of individualism, which is really the controling spirit of Protestantism, is asserting itself more and more, and it would seem as if any intelligent man with a grain of logic in his composition must see that it is only a question of time for Protestantism to develop into Infidelity and Agnosticism.

FRIDAY evening, June 12 h, at the Manhattan Liberal Club Mr John R Charlesworth will review the "Life and Career of Charles Bradlaugh." Mr. Charlesworth is a great admirer of the late Secularist member of Parliament, and his eulogy will be a tender and fitting tribute to a noble man.

CHAS WATTS will lecture for Friendship Liberal League Philadelphia, Sunday June 21st, in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood streets, 2 30 P M, subject: "The Land, the People, and the Coming Struggle;" 7.30 P M., subject: "Religion Without Theology." The Liberal public are cordially invited to hear these lectures.

THAT very disagreeable and somewhat dangerous disease the "grip," which prevailed here a few weeks ago is now having fun with the Londoners. Saladin, of the Agnostic Journal is down with it, and Mrs Bradlaugh-Bonner, heir and executrix of the late C Bradlaugh, is confined to her home by the same misery. They call it "influenza" over there. We extend to our distinguished contemporary and contemporaess the assurance of our pitying sympathy. The grip is a meaner enemy than the devil.

THE Freethinker of London announces that Mrs. Besant will soon lecture upon "Freethought in America" As Mrs. Besant consorted entirely with Theosophists the few weeks she was in this country, finding time to pay but a few minutes' visit each to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator offices, and as the Theosophists here are about as strongly opposed to Freethought as the preachers, it would seem that, able, intelligent, and eloquent as the lady is, she is hardly prepared to enlighten the English upon the subject chosen. She could tell much more about Theosophy in America. But we trust her lecture will be reported, so that the American Freethinkers whom she did not see may know what she thinks about them.

THE Radical Club of this city has moved to new quarters, No. 37 Clinton place. The rooms are open every day and evening. All interested are cordially invited to call at the club rooms, and make themselves known to its members and officers. The dues are fifty cents per month. Among the officers of the club are Messrs Foote, Wakeman, and Chamberlain, well known to TRUTH SEEKER readers. Justus Ebert is the secretary, 34 City Hall place.

Communications.

Letters to Workingmen.

I hav endeavored to show that the government idea is a superstition—a relic of the God idea. Government is an order of nature rather than intelligence. All gregarious animals tend toward government. It is a mode sometimes best adapted to preserve and perpetuate individual life. It is in no wise dependent upon intelligent reason; in fact, the less reason the more perfect the organization. No government of man ever approached the perfection of organization and harmony of action of the bee or ant. Here we hav a state which may be truly called an organism; individuality is lost in the community, dependence and subserviency the only rule of life. The state improves, and the individual degenerates. It must be so; evolution never stops. It begins with the individual cell. Cells aggregate to form a higher individual; but when a being arrives at complete organization—that is to say, all its organs subservient to a central will—this will is indicativ of the highest individual; and with the birth of reason strives at independence. Environments may be such that to preserve life—which is ever the rule of nature—communism supersedes individualism, in which case life may be easier, but independence is impossible. The course of evolution, then, is toward the fittest commune, which necessitates absolute dependence and subserviency. Life is a struggle for existence, and is entered into and persistently carried out without any aim or conscious motiv, and progression ensues, it may be toward perfection, degeneration, or extinction, depending entirely upon the condition of itself as adapted to its environments. There is no aid extended; the fittest—that is, the best adapted to its environments—succeeds. There is no economy. Mr. Darwin shows that there is more degeneration than progression toward higher types. I want to disabuse your mind of the idea of any intelligence in nature, apart from brain organization, that shapes or guides evolution. Thus we see that governmentalism is the result of nature attended with ignorance and superstition. As I hav said, with the birth of reason a new struggle ensues, the independence of the individual—that is to say, individualism; and this struggle is increasing with increasing intelligence. When we hav ceased to worship nature as a god, but investigate as a student her various facts; when we study, not to copy, but improve, we shall be able to bring about the sovereignty of the individual, instead of the sovereignty of the state, which is purely a myth, whether it be called state or lord, for the holder of such sovereignty is not necessarily superior in wisdom or strength.

Pollock, in defining government, says, "In every form of government we must come at last to some power which is absolute, to which all other powers of the state are subject and which itself is subject to none." This is identical with the queen-bee or sovereign ant. The sovereignty of the state must imply the slavery of the individual. Herbert Spencer predicts a form of government which he calls "negativly regulativ," in contradiction to the present form, which he styles "positivly regulativ." To illustrate, he says, "If a man has land, and I either cultivate for him, partially or wholly, or dictate any or all of his modes of cultivation, my action is positivly regulativ; but if, leaving him absolutely unhelped and unregulated in his farming, I simply prevent him from taking his neighbor's crops, or from making approach-roads over his neighbor's land, or from depositing rubbish upon it, my action is negativly regulativ." A government that leaves the citizen unhelped and unregulated, whose function is simply to protect him in his rights and defend him from invasion, would hav my hearty approval; but my reading convinces me that such a government never did and never can exist.

The foundation principle of all government is class interests. Politics, by which all governments "liv and move and hav their being," excludes the possibility of this negativ form. Nature itself is against the idea, as I hav sought to show. Man is essentially selfish, and all his actions are in self-interest, and when "dressed in a little brief authority" his nature will be unchanged, and he will hav then, as now, "an eye to business." Hence all governments must, of necessity, be "positivly regulativ," and regulated in such a manner as to discriminate in favor of certain classes. My definition of government is, that it is a denial of the right to act in accordance with one's judgment; a force that compels one to act on the whim of another, and that other, perhaps, a stranger in a far-off state; a power that says, Not thine but my will be done; an institution that draws its inspiration, not from the living present, but from the dead past, that builds its predicate, not upon facts and environments of individual cases, but upon precedents established by dead men's actions. And yet my worst indictment is that all this is done without the consent, and against the approval, of a large majority of its victims. "All governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." A splendid text for an after-dinner speech from "Our Chauncey." But before you let me suggest that a few facts be taken into consideration. In the first place, one-half the governed are disfranchised on account of sex, and more than one-half the balance disqualified, while a large part of the remainder refrain from exercising their right of franchise. So we see that if, by voting, the people gave their consent to be governed, the fact that only a small portion of the population exercises that privilege destroys the truth of the saying. But when we look into "the ways that are dark and the tricks that are vain," the schemes, intrigue, and deviltry of politicians, it seems to me no sane man can hold to the theory that government derives its power, just or unjust, from the consent of the governed. The fact is, our eyes hav been dazzled by the glittering generalities, and our ears delighted by the proverbial philosophy, of politicians; we hav caught up and worshiped the sayings of "great men," never asking ourself if there be as much truth as rhetoric in the saying. When "great men" round out a sentence, we repeat it, parrot-like, without questioning its truth or thinking that "great men" are sometimes mistaken. When will the world realize that one little truth is worth more than all the assertions of all the men that ever lived? Friends, we hav been fed on chaff too much; let us insist upon varying the monotony with an occasional grain of truth. As the priest appeals to your duty in behalf of morality, to love God and support his ministers, the politician will appeal to your patriotism, your love of country, to support them. The priest would save your soul; the politician would save your society. But again I would ask you, before you "pull off your coat and roll up your sleeves," to consider a few facts. Ask yourself if it is really your country, your friends, and your fireside, these men propose to save, or is it merely institutions which, while claiming to subserve these things, in reality do the contrary, distract the country, injure society, alienate your friends, and rob you of the comforts of your home. We are deceived. The siren of government sings of protection.

> Fling your ready cap in air,

> Trust her not, she's fooling thee.

Her protection is such as the fox afforded the chicken—he protected her from the hawk to eat her himself. It may be a little pleasanter, as Mr. Pentecost would say, to be robbed by a gentleman in livery, an agent of government, than by a "road agent." It may be more respectable to hav our goods sold by a sheriff than purloined by a common thief, but after all it is a distinction without a difference. I ask you to look into this government idea. Is it indeed the benefit they claim it to be? What is its protection worth, and do we need protection? Read Darwin's essay on protection in the animal and vegetable kingdom—how it degrades and enervates the race. Individual independence is what we want—a fair field and no favor. Giv us freedom to protect ourselvs. Better let the incapables go to the wall than breed a race of incapables. But there is no danger of the weak suffering. Human sympathy is born of independence. In the absence of a higher power there will be no God's poor nor government's poor. With equality of opportunities there will be no poor but nature's poor—the incapables and unfortunates. In the absence of a supreme will human equality will be recognized.

"A fellow feeling will make us wondrous kind." In the absence of all organized force sympathy, love, and justice will reign.

> O Liberty, thou goddess heavenly bright,
> Profuse of bliss and pregnant with delight,
> Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign,
> And smiling plenty leads thy wanton train.
> Eased of her load subjection grows more light,
> And poverty looks cheerful in the sight;
> Thou mak'st the gloomy face of nature gay,
> Givest beauty to the sun and pleasure to the day.

Buffalo, N. Y. A. L. Ballou.

Judge Daily's Medium-Smasher.

A DREAM THAT WAS NOT ALL A DREAM.

Judge Dailey, ex-surrogate, an exasperated Spiritualist, has presented a bill at Albany, N. Y., and again at Springfield, Ill., that provides that "every person, who for profit or gain, or in anticipation thereof, for the purpose of representing what is commonly known as spirit manifestations, shall personate the spirit of a deceased person, or shall by means of any device, trick, or contrivance present anything to represent the spirit of a deceased person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be subject to a fine of not less than $100 nor exceeding $300, or imprisonment not exceeding ninety days, or both such a fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court."

I had a dream; and as saith John Bunyan, "I saw in my dream and behold" I was at a materializing séance of a first-class medium. When the performance was well along, and dozens of men, women, and children had appeared and been recognized by their friends, the superserviceable and preternaturally sharp amateur detectiv opens his dark lantern and jumps at a female form that stands near him. He grabs it around the neck, but it rapidly dissolves under his touch, beginning at the feet—as if sinking through the floor, though no aperture appears in the carpet under the full glare of his lantern.

Of course there is a hubbub, and the faithful seize the intruder and try to drag him away. But he holds on manfully until nothing is left in his grasp but a piece of thoroughly materialized veil—the rest of the apparition having evaporated.

Thorough scientist as he is, he feels that he and science hav had a victory. The veil is his proof of fraud; the female form having eluded his grasp "through some occult hand which he is certain to discover before long."

Having got into peaceable company, and having brought quite a force of disguised detectivs with him, who show their shields, he is not chased into the street or arrested, but is allowed to proceed to arrest the medium. This lady, who is of a very nervous, sensitiv organization, is found in a state of profound coma—sitting perfectly rigid in her chair. Her friends are alarmed, and try to awaken her, but in vain. The brutal scientist, being of Comstockian fiber and gall, is not to be fooled. He and his posse take possession of the premises. After sousing the medium well with water, and applying hartshorn to her nostrils, in a way that would asphyxiate a person in the normal condition, and still unable to dispel the coma, the law-abiding Christian saviors of society are yet equal to the occasion. They summon an ambulance, and take the lady, still seated and now bound in her chair, to a police station, where the eminent boy-doctors in charge make still further efforts to persuade her soul to take regular possession of its mortal tenement, or quit entirely.

An hour after all their efforts hav failed, the lady, whose relativs hav been denied access to her, rouses from the catalepsy and screams as she beholds her strange surroundings. Becoming somewhat pacified after a while, the circumstances are explained to her and her "confession" demanded. Of course she has nothing to confess but her sense of the outrage perpetrated.

Still the learned and patriotic gentlemen who hav the job in hand are not to be beaten. They are as wise as Dogberry. They hale her to the court in due time, and a jury, who look as wise as owls, being on hand, the case is opened. The lady has an able lawyer, but when he asks them if they are open to conviction as to the possibility of spirit return, the owls unanimously declare that they are not. So the case goes by default.

The judge then reads to them Judge Dailey's bill as above, which, according to the dream, has been passed. He instructs the jury that if the prisoner is proved to hav undertaken for pay "to present anything to represent the spirit of a deceased person," and the police hav in their possession such "thing" or any portion of it, the prisoner is guilty. "Of course," says this "Daniel come to judgment," "that bit of curious lace (which, if the case were important, should be analyzed by chemists) does not look much like a person. But as it is all that the plaintiffs hav to show, and Christianity—the palladium of our liberties—must be preserved, verdict should be rendered against the prisoner."

Such a verdict the owls, of course, bring in with cheerful alacrity, and without leaving their seats.

The medium dies in prison, as a result of the shock experienced when the female form is seized and tries to return too hastily to her those emanations from her body of which the materialized form was largely composed.

But again I dreamed, and the scene was quite different; and I must premise that, while the first dream seems quite natural, the second will appear to cover events of vast improbability.

I was in the great Roman Catholic cathedral on Fifth avenue, New York. The archbishop was celebrating high mass, and presenting the consecrated wafer to his priests. A multitude was in the cathedral, and tables were piled high with coins taken as admission fees. Suddenly about fifty policemen, who had been in disguise, display their uniforms and advance toward the altar, marshaled by some well-known Spiritualists. They stop the proceedings and arrest the archbishop and all the bishops and priests, showing an order of arrest for "one Corrigan, a well-known medium, and his associates, for, by means of device, trick, or contrivance, presenting something to represent the spirit of a deceased person."

The great array of police paralyzes the multitude; and the prisoners are taken to the lock-up without any attempt at rescue.

Again there is the court scene. The archbishops, bishops, and priests bluff the game in full canonicals. But, strange to say, though before the same judge, their effort is vain. For once a New York judge (in a dream, mind you), is thoroughly consistent. He goes through nearly the same routine, except that he asks the archbishop if he claims that the wafer, after being blessed by him, "really constitutes a portion of the spiritual body of the late Jesus Christ?"

Corrigan solemnly affirms that such is his belief.

The judge says again: "This wafer does not look like a person; but it is all that the plaintiffs hav to show; and even justice must be done." He offered, however, to hav the wafer analyzed by chemists—in view of the distinguished position and functions of the accused.

The offer being waived, the jury was instructed as before. The accused were condemned to fine and imprisonment. And just as I had exclaimed, "Jersey justice, for once in New York!" I awoke.

SAMUEL LEAVITT.

Unnecessary Special Legislation.

From the New York Sun.

Here is the text of a bill now before the Illinois legislature which has passed the state senate and is pending in the house:

Section 1. Every person who for profit or gain or in anticipation thereof for the purpose of presenting what is commonly known as spirit materialization, shall personate the spirit of a deceased person, or who shall by trick, device, or mechanical contrivance present anything to represent the spirit of a deceased person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be subject to a fine of not less than $100, nor more than $300, or confined in the county jail not less than three months nor more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 2. This act shall not be deemed to apply to any portion of a scene or play in any theatrical presentation.

It will be observed that the purpose of this bill is to prevent or punish fraudulent practices by Spiritualist mediums. That such practices are carried on by such persons for gain there is abundant evidence.

But there is in Illinois, as in every other state of the Union, a statute which provides that the obtaining of money by false pretenses shall be regarded as a criminal offense, and shall be punished accordingly. Under the law swindling mediums are liable to arrest, prosecution, and conviction, the same as other swindlers who obtain money by false pretenses. All that is needed under the law for the conviction of any offender against it is the evidence of guilt.

This Illinois bill, if enacted, would be special legislation of an unnecessary kind.

The Cause in Washington.

SUNDAY LAWS.

The following newspaper clippings are of interest:

Centralia is endeavoring to enforce an ordinance for the closing on Sunday of all business houses except drug stores, livery stables, undertakers' shops, and hotels. The newsstands, which were prohibited from keeping open under the ordinance, carried their stock to a neighboring drug store, where placards were hung out informing the public that the Oregonian and other papers could be had there. The ordinance does not limit the drug stores to the sale of any particular line of goods and therein lies its fatal defect.—Morning Oregonian.

I found the ordinance passed by the city council was almost a copy of the old territorial law.

The following is from the Centralia daily News, Friday, May 15th:

A SECULARIST GIVS HIS VIEW OF THE CASE.

At the lecture last night in the Turn Verein hall the place was well filled. Mr. C. B. Reynolds, secretary of the Washington Secular Union, was the speaker, and was eagerly listened to by all present, being heartily applauded throughout. The first part of his lecture was devoted to showing that Sunday, the first day of the week, is not the day set apart by the Bible as a day of rest. On a Secular standpoint he said: "We are told there are many legal precedents—decisions of courts of several states—favoring Sunday laws. So there are precedents for the rack, the thumbscrew, the dungeon, the fagot, and the stake."

Speaking of a day of rest being necessary for the good of mankind, he said: "Workingmen need to sleep at night. Shall we hav a civil law decreeing under a penalty of fine and imprisonment what time all shall go to sleep? Shall we hav the act of the council compelling all persons to eat between the hours of 12 and 1? If the people of the United States do not know enough to rest on Sunday, or any other day when they need rest, it is certain they much more require law to send them to bed at night."

The tenor of his remarks can be judged from the following: "The rank hypocrisy of the advocates of a civil Sunday law is at once apparent if it is suggested that a law be passed to insure all a day of rest every Wednesday. Every Sunday-keeping fanatic indignantly protests, 'Oh, that would be a violation of my religious rights!' No. They want a law to compel everyone, whether he believes it right or not, to keep Sunday as they do."

To sum up, he said: "So far from being opposed to Sunday-keeping, we are zealous defenders of its observance. It is the grand, good old solar holiday of all pagan times, and it should be devoted to rest, recreation, and amusement, and for those who so choose for worship. But all are entitled to full freedom, to perfect liberty, to spend its hours as they please, always providing that in the enjoyment of its liberties no one shall encroach on the similar rights of others."

Very great interest was aroused by the lecture. Much of anxiety was manifested to ascertain "who sent for Mr. Reynolds." In answer to a letter of inquiry published in Friday's paper the following full and very satisfactory reply appeared in the issue of Saturday:

IN RE GEORGE B. SMILEY.

Editor Centralia News: To answer the question who it was that got Mr. C. B. Reynolds here to giv a lecture on the Sunday law question, I will state that it was citizens of this city who did so and paid the expenses too; people that wanted to know why Sunday or the Sabbath day, as the reverends call it, is not the Sabbath day the God of the Bible tells us to observe; people that wanted to hear once in a while common sense and not the old worn-out arguments of the theologians on questions that affect every citizen while on earth; people that want to hav the glorious Constitution of the United States of North America upheld as it is and not trampled down or changed by any church or denomination or any combinations; people that know when to rest and need no guardian, no police club, and no law to tell them when to do so. I am yours, GEORGE B. GRUNDY.

Episcopalian, Baptist, and Methodist parsons rushed into print announcing sermons on the subject on Sunday. Episcopalian: "Our Country, the Cost of God's Service so as to Endure." Baptist: "The Blessings of the Sabbath as a Day of Rest and Worship." Methodist: "Sabbath Sanctity; or, Should Secular Labor be Performed on Sunday or the Lord's Day? If Not, Why Not?" But so far there hav been no arrests under the city ordinance.

The Washington Secular Union will send two hundred copies of the pamphlet, "Facts in Regard to Sunday Laws," for gratuitous distribution there the moment they arrive from the printers.

BUCKLEY, PIERCE CO., WASH.

I hav just learned that the church fanatics hav started to enforce the same old territorial law at this place. Mr. Coke Ewing, of the Buckley Banner, one of the most respected and influential men in the county, will hold them in check. He is well known to be always and forever for "equal rights, liberty for all, license for none."

There is evidently great need of the distribution of the "Sunday Law" pamphlet throughout the state.

GLAD TIDINGS.—THE RIGHT KIND OF ACTION.

Mr. J. F. Miller, of Lynden, has sent $10 to the field lecture fund, so that those places in the state needing lectures or help in forming local Unions can be supplied, even if few in number and hard times prevailing.

Our esteemed treasurer (the lady officer of our board of directors), ever to the front in every good, benevolent, worthy work, has paid in $50 to the field lecture fund. One hundred such genuin philanthropic, independent, Liberal women in our state would make victory for our cause very easy of attainment.

WALLA WALLA LIBERTY CLUB.

The originators of the Washington Secular Union are still marching in the advance column.

I am in receipt of advices from Dr. A. W. Calder, the efficient secretary of the Walla Walla Liberal Club, notifying me that the Club has passed resolutions (carried unanimously) that every member of the Club in good standing shall be made member in good standing of the state organization, the dues to be paid from the funds of the Club; also that every member shall select one Liberal paper and one year's subscription shall be paid by the Club from its general fund, so as to help circulation of Liberal papers, and keep all members posted on the progress of the work.

All local Unions of the state are earnestly entreated to follow this most admirable lead.

RELIGIOUS EXERCISES IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

There will always be trouble, and a number of places throughout the state where this iniquity and gross violation of every principle of right, justice, and the constitution will be perpetrated, until we take a test case through to the supreme court.

That noble old veteran in the ranks of genuin Infidels, Peter Selde, Sr., of Davenport, Lincoln county, has sent in a list of contributors ($40, himself heading the list with $10). Money to be paid as soon as a case is commenced in court.

TAXING CHURCH PROPERTY.

No church of value over $5 000 will escape paying taxes on its excess. The exemption is a villany, and contrary alike to the letter and the spirit of the constitution of the state.

There is a general cry of hard times throughout the state, and of course this makes it dreadfully hard on the secretary, but the work is onward and there is no discharge in this war. C. B. REYNOLDS,
Secretary Washington Secular Union.

Solomon an Infidel.

"I said in mine heart concerning the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselvs are beasts.

"For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other: yea, they hav all one breath; so that a man hath no preëminence above a beast, for all is vanity.

"All go unto one place; all are of the dust; and all turn to dust again.

"Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

"For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope; for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

"For the living know they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither hav they any more a reward, for the memory of them is forgotten.

"Also their love and their hatred and their envy are now perished, neither hav they a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun."

If Solomon, the wisest man that had ever lived up to his day, had uttered the foregoing statements in the days of Anaxagoras, he would hav been condemned to death by the prevailing church and finally banished in exile during his natural life for heresy.

Had Solomon uttered these words during the days of Copernicus, his bones would hav been dug up though he were dead and buried, and burnt, and the ashes of them would hav been scattered to the four winds of heaven, and anathemas pronounced against them by the Christian church.

Had the great preacher given vent to such thoughts during the days of Giordano Bruno he would hav shared the same fate as that illustrious philosopher. He would hav been hunted from place to place and from country to country, and then if he turned on them with invectiv he would hav been burnt to the stake to advance the cause of Christianity.

Again, if Solomon had dared to giv vent to such heretical ideas during the days of Michael Servetus, he would hav been burnt to death by the orders of John Calvin, of Geneva, over a slow oak fire that he might hav more time to repent of his heresy.

If such reasonable ideas were promulgated to-day the utterer would be ostracised, denied even the privilege of the secular press. Children would be taught in Sabbath-school to shun such a man and point the finger of scorn at him as being a dangerous man, a teacher of heretical doctrin, a man to be avoided. The only reason he would not hav to suffer the fate of his predecessors is that we liv in a better day. Men are beginning to think. Science and religion hav met. The contest is no longer in doubt. The fact is, Solomon was a man of thought, a reasoner, a man of Liberal views. In short, he was what would be called to-day an Infidel.

Newark Valley, N. Y. E. W. COUNCILMAN.

Colonel Ingersoll's Views.

St. Paul Special to Philadelphia Press.

Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll to-day talked in characteristic style about several matters of general interest.

As regards the Briggs controversy, Colonel Ingersoll said:

"Heresy is religious growth. Religion is like a palm tree—grows at the top. The dead leaves are all orthodox, while the new ones and the buds are all heretics. The pews are becoming civilized, and the pulpit must keep up with the procession—the church must advance or die. Dr. Briggs has taken one short step in advance, and before long will take another. The Presbyterian creed is dying and others will be made. Calvinism is barbarism. On every hand are the signs of the decay of orthodoxy. The evangelical churches are denying that they ever believed in hell. Dr. Parkhurst's address reminds me of the reports of my own lectures."

Colonel Ingersoll greatly sympathizes with the agriculturists, as can be seen by the following remarks:

"I do not blame the farmers for trying to better their condition. They hav certainly had a hard time, and they feel that they hav been oppressed by the bankers, railroads, merchants, and patent-medicin makers, to say nothing of ministers and lawyers. Everything seems to be against them. They hav to fight frosts and floods and drouth and all sorts of worms and bugs and speculators and cyclones and all the birds of the air.

"Everybody and everything takes toll from the farmers. No wonder that they want to do something. I do not think the planks in the Cincinnati platform can be fastened together and held in place. The farmers ought to know that resolutions passed by political conventions raise neither corn nor wheat, neither can they affect prices. I do not believe that the government can make money by law any more than it can make good crops by law. The government can't support the people. The people hav got to support the government. The government is a perpetual pauper.

"I ask this one question: If the government can make money why should it collect taxes? Why not make what it needs and stop bothering the people?

"Still I am glad the farmers are discussing these questions. They will find out what the government can and cannot do."

The colonel said regarding Ignatius Donnelly and his Baconian theory: "I know that Mr. Donnelly enjoys the reputation of being a man of decided ability, and he is regarded by many as a great writer. He is known to me through his Baconian theory, and in that, of course, I hav no confidence. He is nearly as ingenious as absurd. He has devoted much time and curious learning, and at least succeeded in convincing himself that Shakspere claimed that which he did not write, but to me the theory is without the slightest foundation."

POINTING to another world will never stop vice among us; shedding light over this world alone can help us.—Whitman.

Damaging Admissions.

Three weeks ago we printed an editorial upon "The Unsubstantial Basis of Christianity," in which we said, "Destroy the evidence of the gospels and you destroy the whole Christian scheme. This has indeed been done, not by Infidels alone, but by Christians; and yet so fatuous is the blind faith of the people, so deep their ignorance of this thing, and so powerful the business interests of the leaders in the church, that few know it, and still fewer comprehend its far-reaching meaning."

The Christian Advocate of June 4th contains an editorial on "What We Supposed All Intelligent People Knew," being admissions on the part of the editor that the Bible is in parts an errant, human work, a "cyclopedia of Jewish history, manners, life, government, philosophy, and religion." The writer seems surprised that everybody does not know these things, and yet we will wager a small sum that aside from a few of the more scholarly of the ministers there is not one per cent of the membership of the Methodist church that knows or ever thinks of the things Dr. Buckley "supposed all intelligent people knew." Ninety per cent of the ministers may be safely included in this estimate.

Dr. Buckley begins his admissions with this:

"That there are no original manuscripts in the world, those having worn out or been destroyed or lost in the earlier ages; that the translators were in the habit of adding words n the English version to make the sense clear, and that these are generally but not always placed in italics; that the manuscripts from which the translations are made differ among themselvs upon certain points; that there are various passages upon the meaning of which scholars hav differed."

While by no means going so far as truth and adherence to ascertained facts demand, a thoughtful assimilation of the admissions will cause reasoning Christians to wonder how they can be sure of the truth of their creeds. For instance, the Christian when opening his Bible is confronted with this on the title-page: "Translated out of the original tongues." But if there are no original manuscripts, how can this statement be substantiated? So far as the world knows, there never were any "original manuscripts." The oldest Old Testament manuscript belongs to A.D. 1106; the oldest New Testament fragment was not in existence prior to the fourth century, A.C., if even then. They are all copies of copies, changed, mutilated, added to, and made to fit the views of the translator. Yet upon them, and knowing these things, the church makes us depend for "eternal life!" But how shall one know what words the translators hav added? which manuscripts are God's word? and what is the real meaning of the passages upon which the scholars differ? And still further, what becomes of the doctrin of plenary inspiration in view of these facts?

Dr. Buckley goes on:

"The Old Testament belongs to a dispensation preliminary, incomplete, and in some instances faulty, owing to concessions to the weakness and ignorance of man; that the government of the Hebrews was neither a democracy, autocracy, nor an ordinary monarchy, but a theocracy, in the history of which the laws and wars, defeats and victories, conquests, migrations, captivities, lapses from the true faith, science, geography, botany, agriculture, weapons, implements, hygienic practices, natural phenomena, miracles, prophecy, and practical religion are mingled together, making the Bible not merely a book of religion, or of any other one thing, but a cyclopedia of Jewish history, manners, life, government, philosophy, and religion."

If these things be true, of what use is the Old Testament as a guide to heaven? Is Genesis a scrap of a cyclopedia or an account of God's handiwork? Genesis is the most important book of the whole Bible. Upon it depends the very existence of God, and without it Christ's atonement is a superfluity. If man did not fall, he need not rise. Without Eden Calvary was a useless sacrifice.

Again:

"Moses did not write the account of his death and burial; some books in the Old Testament are merely to preserve the general maxims and state of morals; other books, like Esther, to giv an account of a crisis in Jewish history; Ecclesiastes, to show the folly of human philosophy and of human life as experienced by a voluptuary."

And again the query, If these things be so, of what use as a religious work is the Old Testament? When does Moses's authorship of the Pentateuch end, and the unknown's begin?

"The Bible itself teaches us that some portions are literal and some figurativ, and sets us upon using our best judgment to ascertain which.

"The canon of the scriptures, by which is meant the authoritativ decision of what books should be held inspired, was decided by men of authority in the church; some Christians hav doubted whether some of the books should hav been included, as Luther doubted whether the General Epistle of James belonged there; but the weight of judgment, Roman, Greek, and Protestant, accept these, while the Roman Catholics include the Apocrypha as authoritativ, and the Protestants do not accept it."

What a muddle this will leave the average Christian in! Supposing his judgment as to which portions are literal and which figurativ should be wrong? Will he go to hell? But if each can decide for himself which portions to follow, and all arriving finally at the same destination, then the creeds and preachers and churches are useless. Giv every man a Bible and let him work out his own salvation.

Again, what an absurd way of settling the authenticity of books, or which books were inspired and which not, by leaving it to men in authority in the church! These men differed on nearly all the books, and then voted on the matter, the majority ruling! On this point Keeler says:

"There is one curious fact to which I cannot refrain from calling attention. No Christian historian, whether Mosheim, Milman, Schaff, or any other, has ever perceived, apparently, the grotesque absurdity of an assembly attempting to decide by vote a fact in the past. Men vote on questions which hav yet to be decided, and thus make them facts—as whether this man or that man shall be president, or this law or that shall be in force—but not on those which are already decided. That Christian councils ever seriously discussed 'Did Christ hav two natures or one after incarnation?" is of itself almost anomalous. But to say nothing of that—to attempt to decide it by a vote is like trying to decide by a vote whether or not he was crucified. If he had two natures he had two, and the fact could not be made to depend on a vote taken five hundred years afterward. Yet all the "great Christian historians" discuss such things with the utmost naivete, and never for a moment perceive their absurdity. This is only one instance in many which might be cited, wherein these gentlemen almost forfeit the patience of intelligent skeptics. They devote time in all seriousness to simple nonsense, and overlook the facts lying all about them which completely overwhelm the Christian theology with defeat."

But the Epistle of James and the Apocrypha are by no means the only books of doubtful authenticity, as is pointed out in the editorial referred to. In the Old Testament the authors of the following books are unknown or disputed: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, First and Second Samuel, First and Second Kings, First and Second Chronicles, Esther, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Daniel, Obadiah, Jonah, Habakkuk, Haggai—twenty-six from thirty-nine books. In the New Testament, besides the Epistle of James, the books which hav no known authors are the most important of all: Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Acts, the Epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, First and Second Timothy, Titus, Hebrews, Second Peter, Second and Third John, and Jude; and Revelation is more than doubtful. By this it will be seen that Mr. Buckley knows almost as little as some of his parishioners, or that he conceals a great deal that he knows. "We supposed all intelligent" ministers knew these things, as anybody fortunate enough to hav a library of modern theological books might know. John Wesley, however, neither expressed nor implied them, and Clarke's Commentary is silent thereon—which may account for his ignorance of what we supposed all intelligent people knew.

But the admissions already made are quite sufficient, if the Methodists can comprehend their significance, to instil a good deal of doubt in the minds of the faithful—and who remain faithful because they believe every word in the Bible to come directly from God.

The Catholic Church on the Sunday Question.

The Catholic Review concludes an editorial on the opening of the Metropolitan Museum on Sundays with these words:

"As has been pointed out again and again in these pages, and as steadily ignored by the Catholic press, the Sunday question is an evidence of that struggle which is going on almost unnoticed between Christian and non-Christian. It is not a question of rational amusement for the multitude on Sundays, but whether the Sunday shall not be abolished altogether. We are therefore in favor of diminishing rather than increasing the liberties now permitted on Sunday. It is a war measure, and its adoption will secure the support of every sincere Christian. In the presence of an unscrupulous, popular, and well-armed foe we are not disposed to accept their taunts as arguments, or to be moved to hasty action by their sneers. If leisure for the study of art, literature, music, for the development of skill in rowing, for communion with nature is necessary to the workman, let him get it through the passing of the eight-hour law, which is destined to giv him enough time during the week for diversion of every kind. The Sunday should remain the day of rest and prayer, and as long as the followers of Christ remain the majority in this land their observance of the Sunday should find plain expression in the laws of the state. In any case, the position of American Christians at this moment with regard to the Sunday must comfort and stimulate the followers of Ingersoll."

That the "followers of Ingersoll" find encouragement in the gain made in the Sunday controversy by the opening of the Museum goes without saying, especially as some of them played a not unimportant part in achieving the victory. The opening, too, has a broader significance, as the Review sees. It means that the public is losing its respect for a "holy" day, and for the narrow bigots who would impose their limitations upon it. It also tends to destroy superstition, and for that all should be grateful. It indicates, too, that religion is gradually giving place to humanitarianism; solicitude for another world being replaced by care for this. These are hopeful signs. Christianity has too long stood in the pathway of progress. It is now being gradually pushed aside. The destruction of the reverence for Sunday, as a period of time someway made different from other time, is a most energetic push. By a general consensus one day in seven has been made a rest-day, and bigots hav seized it as their exclusiv property. To regain it, even in part, is a benefit to the world.

It is, however, a matter of significance that the Catholic Review, a church organ commended by the pope, and the archbishops of New York and Brooklyn, should distinctly assume the position of the God-in-the-Constitution party that the Christians should hav a plain expression of their "Sabbath" views in the laws of the state. That means that the Catholics on minor as well as major points demand a union of church and state, and will join hands with the Presbyterians and others to obtain it. But there is some consolation in the fact that the Catholic laity are the most persistent of all Sunday lawbreakers. They do it viciously and not for principle, but they will be hard to restrain. And if the church cared for the moral welfare of its dupes as much as for the power and profit of her priests she would seek to lead them into moral ways instead of seeking to diminish the liberties of the day.

The Illinois Law Against Mediums.

From the pen of Mr. Samuel Leavitt, well known to all frequenters of the Manhattan Liberal Club, we this week print a dream in which he sees the enforcement of the proposed law in Illinois imprisoning materializing mediums. The bill has already been enacted in the senate. Following Mr. Levitt's article is an editorial from the Sun of this city, quoting the bill, and objecting to its enactment. We advise all Spiritualists in Illinois to write to the members of their House protesting against its enactment.

The bill is the product of the great brain of a Chicago "Spiritualist" journalist. Its purpose, as he explains it, is "to eliminate the fraud element in Spiritualistic séances." Visitors to the World's Fair are the objects of his special solicitude. "I hav," he pompously proclaims to a reporter, "absolutely correct information that those who practice frauds of this character everywhere are preparing to invade Chicago during the session of the World's Fair. Our present laws are insufficient to protect the public from their impositions or to punish the perpetrators. We hav exposed their methods repeatedly, and hav had them indicted and tried for obtaining money under false pretenses, but they manage to slip through the meshes of the law. This was notably true in the case of Mrs. Sawyer and the Bangs sisters." In his own sheet he says "there is little doubt but that it will pass the House and become a law. The only danger is that in the stress of business so near the close of the session it may get crowded out; but this is hardly probable."

The bill is absolutely vicious and dangerous because, as the Sun points out, it is special legislation, and that sort of lawmaking is a great deal more dangerous to the public welfare than all the deception practiced by the mediums. The public can easily protect itself from "fraudulent manifestations" by remaining away from séances; but once admit the principle that the legislature can make laws to punish only certain individuals and the door is opened for a nice little inquisition where the instruments of torture are handled by those who hav personal grudges to satisfy. The law might as well be directed against slate-writing mediums as against those who produce, or pretend to produce, materialized spirit forms, or against clairvoyants. That it does not, is due to the fact that the author of the bill makes a specialty only of exposing "materializing" mediums, among whom he has few friends, while among the others his cronies, male and female, are numerous. The bill is an attempt to use the Illinois legislature to advertise a so-called Spiritualist, but really Christian, sheet, and it ought to be killed.

And, as Mr. Leavitt hints, where is the sense in imprisoning mediums and allowing priests and ministers to go free? They do not pretend to produce spirits, it is true, but they do pretend, at least the former, to hav communication with, or control over, another world, and do "for profit or gain" assume to direct its affairs. A priest who receives a dollar for saying masses to get a soul out of purgatory, is just as much of a swindler as the biggest "fake" of a medium in the country. Ministers, too, pray for the repose of souls and do not hesitate to accept donations from the friends of the dead. When they hold out the hope that their prayers may avail, they, too, are swindlers, so far as anybody knows to the contrary. Why not, then, let every religious tub stand on its own bottom, supported without coercion or hindrance from the state by those who desire to part with their money in that way?

There is one clause in this proposed law that will probably puzzle the courts. The law is against personating or representing a spirit. Inasmuch as the bill assumes that spirits never return to earth, who shall say what is an impersonation or representation of them? How can any court declare anything to be a representation of a thing when no human being knows what that thing is like?

Prentice Mulford.

Everyone who has read a little pamphlet published by THE TRUTH SEEKER called the "Ichabod Crane Papers" will experience a feeling of regret to learn that the writer, though till now unknown to them, is dead. Prentice Mulford was a peculiar man, and probably had experienced as many phases of life as is given to one person to know. He was born in Sag Harbor in 1834. His father was a hotelkeeper there. After leaving school Mulford ran the hotel for three years. In 1856 he shipped before the mast in the clipper ship Wizard bound for China, via San Francisco. He left the ship at the latter place, and after staying there for a while shipped as cook in a whaling schooner. He began writing for the Union Democrat in California in 1860. He was a candidate for the legislature in 1864, but was defeated. He was then employed on the Golden Era in San Francisco for a year, and afterward on the Californian. In 1868 he was employed on the Dramatic Chronicle, and finally on the San Francisco Chronicle. When he left San Francisco he took a trip to Europe, tramping through the French provinces on foot. As correspondent of American papers he lived in Vienna during its great exposition, and in Paris on similar business. He was correspondent for a San Francisco paper during our Centennial, and afterward spent ten years as one of the editors of the Daily Graphic.

While in London he married a beautiful English girl, who afterward was divorced from him. In San Francisco he convinced himself that Spiritualism was true, though he always denied the "immortality" of the soul. After his separation from his wife he became for a while a Theosophist, then a follower of the Fletchers who in Boston founded a club for the study of metaphysics, but principally the ethics of Spiritualism. This was a duplicate of a club that Mrs. Fletcher had founded five years before in London under the name of the "White Cross Club." There was an outer and an inner circle. To the latter, only Spiritualists were admitted. Mulford became secretary of the club. He is also said to hav been chosen by the spirits as the mediumistic assistant of the inner circle. The spirits made it known that it was their intention to establish through the club a literature which should become widespread. The material for the first twelve months' publication was dictated to Mulford by a woman medium, and he had the manuscripts in his possession for three or four months before the society, of which he was secretary, decided to publish them. They were issued under the name of the White Cross Library. The publication was begun in Boston. Since then he has had regular classes to which he has taught the principles inculcated in his magazine, but has always refused to admit that he was a Spiritualist, Theosophist, or Occultist. He wrote the truth of the science of life as it came to him, without divulging the source to his most intimate friends. He worked, he said, for the conservation of force in man, whether spiritual or mental. In the spiritual realm he declared he could be called a seeker only. In many ways he imitated the Buddhist ascetics, spending hours in solitary meditation, and for many years he shunned association with people. He rented a small house on the Palisades by the Hudson river, and passed weeks alone there, coming to the city only to bring his manuscript to sell, for he made his living entirely with his pen. In 1883 he built a hut on the shore of Staten Island and lived a recluse's life for two years, meditating and writing and communing with occult influences.

He was fond of boating, and would make long cruises in a little catboat or canoe on the waters around New York. And it was while making one of these cruises that he died, alone, and lay undiscovered for some days. On the last Monday in May he started in a canoe for Sag Harbor, where two of his sisters still liv. He was found lying in the canoe dead, in Sheepshead bay, on the following Saturday. The canoe was provided with a camping outfit and a banjo, and was well provisioned. He was to take the usual course through Great South bay. The boat when found was secured to the bank just back of the Manhattan Beach hotel. Mr. Mulford was lying face downward, and it is supposed he had been dead about two days. The canoe had been seen to enter the bay on Monday. The coroner says death was caused by apoplexy.

It was on his return from San Francisco that the writer became acquainted with him. He was seeking a position on the press, but could not obtain one, and to make the few dollars needed to support himself lectured every Sunday night at Trenor's Hall, and the writer took the dimes at the door. Moody and Sankey were then filling Madison Square Garden nightly with howling converts, and Mr. Mulford found amusement in attending. His experiences there and his thoughts thereon are found in the "Ichabod Crane Papers" which Mr. Bennett employed him to write. He possessed genuin humor, and all his earlier writings are permeated with subtil wit and sarcastic thoughtfulness. In the Ichabod Crane Papers he could allow this extended play, but sometimes his exuberant fancy went beyond even Mr. Bennett's contempt for religion. The "Mumbo Jumbo" sketch in the papers was first written with the Christian trinity as the characters, and the writer well remembers that Mr. Bennett was shocked at its irreverence when he laid it before him; for Mr. Mulford and the messenger then lived in the same family. But its fun was not lost, for Mulford modified it by substituting Mumbo Jumbo for Jehovah, and its sharp point is undulled. "God and Mumbo are the same," said Mulford when told of the editor's objections. To these papers he never put his name, because of the injury it might work him when he finally became a member of a daily journal staff, though he was a radical Infidel, and among his friends did not hesitate to avow it. And afterward, though he refused our solicitations to write some more of the same sort, alleging that he was a builder and not a destroyer, he never had any respect for the Christian mythology, nor faith in the church's claims.

If he had been asked how he would hav liked to hav death overtake him, he would perhaps hav described the end he met, "just in the happiest, sunniest hour of all the voyage, while eager winds were kissing every sail, to dash against the unseen rock, and in an instant hear the billows roar above the sunken ship." For he was happiest when alone in his little craft, and he set out in good health and spirits. He liked nature uncultivated and rugged, nature natural, and he despised the artificialities of the conventional. The end was painless, and though to his friends it is shocking to think of his dying alone in a boat, yet the dead feel no hurt. With nature he loved to liv, and with nature he would hav chosen to die. He had lived all lives, like a prince and like a pauper; studied all creeds, and rejected them all for a simple faith in a formless force which worked through law; had mingled with all conditions of men, and experienced the emotions of the reckless ones of the world and of the ascetic. His cup was full when, down by the sea, the end came.

EVERYBODY will recollect Talmage's famous explanation of the growth of vegetation before the sun was created, as related in Genesis; which explanation Colonel Ingersoll had so much fun with in his "Interviews on Talmage." And the Brooklyn antic has paralleled the sermon by another on the creation of our world, as described in the first chapter of Genesis, in which he has the work begun Monday morning, and man created Saturday afternoon! As a commentator Talmage is unequaled.

Now that Mr. St. John has obtained Holy John's permission to send the "Bible Abridged" through the mails he is doing great work in circulating that volume. This is the postal card he sends out to possible purchasers:

"HOLY BIBLE ABRIDGED

"A book of 160 pages containing choice selections from the Holy Bible, highly recommended by the Postmaster General and other high officials and also by leading clergymen. Sent postpaid to any part of the United States, on receipt of price, fifty cents. A liberal discount made to the trade.

"This is a splendid book to hav on the center-table.

"As sample of the contents of the book see Genesis, Chapters xvi, xix, xxx, xxxviii; Leviticus, Chap. xxi; Numbers, Chap. xxxi; Deut., Chap. xxiii, xxv; Judges, Chap xxi; II Samuel, Chap. xi, xii, xvi; Ezekiel, Chap. xv; I Cor., Chap. vii."

SOME time ago the New York Press announced an article by Colonel Ingersoll, "Why I Am an Agnostic." The Press advertised it widely, and the article was telegraphed to various cities, editors in which supposed it to be new. When it appeared, we compared it with the article of the same title which appeared in the North American Review, and found it to be about one-half of the same paper, every other paragraph being omitted. It was a dishonest trick, and the Press is now sued by the Review for infringing the copyright law. But the avidity with which the article was copied, and the eagerness of editors of large daily papers to pay telegraph cost to hav it sent to them, show that there is no more popular writer in the country than the champion of Agnosticism; and it is an interesting reflection that the publisher of the Review has no occasion to sue for infringing his copyright on any of his contributors' articles except Colonel Ingersoll's. The article appeared in the Review of December, 1889, and March, 1890.

Letters from Friends.

OSANDA, GA., May 27, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1, for which please send me the "Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations;" also the ANNUAL for 1891.

I like your paper better and better as I read it each week. I hav six children, and I am trying to train them up in the way they should go, and think, in the course of time, I will turn loose six Infidels in Georgia. I shall send for your Bible soon and then go to preaching. A. D. STRICKLAND.

DISCO, MICH., May 14, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $7.25 for my own renewal to your excellent paper and two new subscribers, one year each. For the twenty-five cents send me the ANNUAL for 1891. We hav not the benefit of Freethought lectures here, but your paper helps us out wonderfully, and Heston is a host in himself. The post-office authorities seem to be "holed," and all that remains in that line is to put the attorney-general up a tree. Let the hunt go on by all means.

Yours, etc., FRANCIS R. PAYNE.

EUREKA, UTAH, May 15, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: When are you to publish the next "Pictorial Text-Book?" I hav the first one you hav published, but I am anxious to purchase the next, as the one I possess afforded me pride, amusement, and instruction. As I am in Mormons' land, I loaned it to many, and it is still going round, greatly interesting every family. Too bad I am poor—I would like to purchase one for every family in the land.

Wishing for THE TRUTH SEEKER a great success, and admiring its talent, Yours respectfully, PAUL COEFFER.

CHEYENNE, WYO., May 27, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed check for $2, for which send us another copy of your "Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book." The work has been greatly admired here by all common-sense people who hav seen it, and with the help of another one and THE TRUTH SEEKER we hope to convert a sufficient number of the broad-gage, progressiv, enterprising citizens of the state of Wyoming to organize a Freethinker's society. Look out for us. You will see Wyoming foremost in the rank of Liberalism. RICHARDSON BROS.

DECATUR, ILL., May 26, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1 for the Pictorial Bible when ready. I am pleased to hear that it is the intention of Brother John Peck to assist in preparing the work. I wondered what had become of him, as I had not seen anything in THE TRUTH SEEKER from him of late. I wish he would publish in pamphlet form the articles that appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER recently, entitled "Christianity Before the Court" and "The India-Rubber God." Kind regards to Heston. You must continue the pictures.

Liberally yours, CHARLES RANDALL.

BRANDON, MINN., May 18, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I am behindtime with my remittance, as I was trying to get one or more new subscribers, but succeeded in getting none. We hav several men here that sympathize with Freethought, but who do not hav the moral stamina to face the world and let their ideas come forth—a set of religious cowards domineered over by at least seven or eight priests or parasites of as many denominations. At any rate I shall keep on and try to do my share to allow reason to rule instead of dogmas. Wishing you success in your grand work, I remain yours sincerely, GEO. S. MYRON.

BROOKVILLE, KAN., May 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 9th you published a Liberal funeral address, said to hav been delivered by me. This is not the case, however. The address was made by W. F. Adams, a teacher in the Brookville public school, at the funeral of the infant daughter of George and Carrie Wright. I only wish that I was capable of producing such an address. Mr. Adams is one of the brainiest young Liberals in our county. As a teacher he stands in the front rank, and as a man he is very highly respected in this vicinity. He spoke at the grave of little Alice at the earnest request of the bereaved parents. NEWTON MITCHELL.

DES MOINES, IA., May 25, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: On Sunday, May 17th, the Liberals of Des Moines had the pleasure of listening to two of Charles Watts's grand lectures. The subjects were, "Did Christ Arise from the Dead?" The hall was crowded on both occasions, and Mr. Watts was greeted by the largest audiences any Liberal lecturer ever had in Des Moines. We had a challenge to the clergy printed, and one sent to every minister in the city. Up to the present time none of them hav responded, and we do not think they will. These gentry are brave when they can hav everything their own way, but they recoil when an opponent demands of them to defend on the platform what they preach from the pulpit.

Yours for mental liberty, FRANKLIN STEINER.

TWIN MOUND, KAN., May 14, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send you $3.50. This will secure me a berth before the mast on board THE TRUTH SEEKER man of war. With our noted Editor as fighting captain, and her crew of intellectual officers, she is bound to make short work of Christianity's battered hulk. Our friend Heston has got his pen lighted between her gangway and her quarterdeck, and it is only a question of time till the fire of Freethought reaches her magazine and blows her and her three-headed God to that hell she has invented for others.

Mr. Editor, you hav got Holy John by the collar and throat. Hold on to him until you expose his hypocrisy to the world. Your repeated efforts to get a decision on the Holy Bugaboo deserve the approval and respect of every Liberal in the land. Your friend, ALEX. MCBRIDE.

FREDONIA, N. Y., May 28, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1.25—$1 to apply on THE TRUTH SEEKER, and twenty-five cents for the ANNUAL.

I hav tried to get up a club, but it appears that THE TRUTH SEEKER is a little too far in advance of any church-member, and others require spirit friends to accompany them. Your paper has got so firm a hold upon my reason, and all the while keeping abreast of the times with fresh and rare flowers of new truth budding and bursting into bloom, so much so that I am held spell-bound and made freer every day of my life; so much so I cannot break loose if I should try. I feel it a privilege to hav and to hold the desire to still contribute to keep the standard sheet THE TRUTH SEEKER waving in the breeze, wafting the precious seeds of truth over the barren soil of superstition until it shall yet be made to blossom as the rose. PLINY SMITH.

HAMBURG, IA., May 10, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: W. S. Bell, the Radical orator of Oakland, Cal., delivered three good lectures in this city May 1st, 2d, and 3d, on the following subjects: (1) "Liberty;" (2) "Evolution of Religious Ideas;" (3) "Popular Objections to Freethought Stated and Answered." Mr. Bell is a very witty speaker, and frequently convulsed the audience with laughter. He made some telling blows against orthodoxy. He has many warm friends in Hamburg. Charles Watts, of Toronto, Can., followed him on the 4th, 5th, and 6th. The topics were as follows: (1) "Unbelief: What Has It Done for Mankind?" (2) "The Bible Story of Creation;" (3) "Did Christ Rise from the Dead?" These lectures were grand. Ingersoll could not do much better. Mr. Watts is expected to return in the near future in time to dedicate the Fred W. Toedt Freethought Hall, a magnificent structure soon to be built. E. T. DALBEY.

CLARKSVILLE, IA., May 27, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I am pleased to inform you we hav had the great pleasure of listening to Mr. Charles Watts in this town. He delivered three lectures at this place on the 24th, 25th, and 26th of May. It has been quite an event for the people. The subjects were, "Secularism," "Unbelief," and "Christian Origin." To those who hav never had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Watts it would be difficult to describe his masterly manner and convincing logic in the delivery of these lectures. Our friends here thought the lectures were splendid. At the last lecture there were three ministers present, and although Mr. Watts gave them a cordial invitation to answer him or correct him they evidently did not think it prudent. I would advise all Liberals in this section never to miss the opportunity of securing Mr. Watts's services, for he is what may be called a holy terror to superstition, bigotry, and priestcraft. FREETHINKER.

NEW YORK, May 26, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: As regards advocating the nomination of Mr. R. G. Ingersoll for president, I would like to say that I would favor him personally, for he is an honest man, judging by his Freethought lectures. But our field for action is not directly political, but is preëminently one of education, agitation, and reform. We need strong men like Mr. Ingersoll to cast hot shot at the absurdities and untruthfulness of all religion, periodically and at frequent intervals, throughout the land.

Again, we do not need any president of the United States. It is a useless office, and the time has arrived for its abolition. The incumbent is a mere figure-head the same as Queen Victoria. Also the United States $enate (correct spelling) is unnecessary, and should hav its "rich men's club" pay its own expenses, not taxing the people.

No, the office of president would not benefit Mr. Ingersoll, nor could it advance Freethought issues. Let us urge him to still be the Grand Chief Lecturer and independent exponent of Liberalism! For his noble efforts in the cause of truth vs. religion humanity and an approving judgment daily bless him. E. J. KIMBALL.

CRAYON, O., May 25, 1891 (R.M. 291).

MR. EDITOR: Having been a continual patron and reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for a period of seven years, and also a constant worker in the dissemination of its principles among my fellow-men, and having not as yet voiced my sentiments and feelings upon this grand Religion of Humanity in its columns, I now embrace the opportunity to do so.

By the kindness of an associate who has been attending college, a few years since I came in the possession of some Freethought literature from THE TRUTH SEEKER. It so conformed with my reason and experience and so appeased the very longings of my nature that I accepted the principles therein as the most rational religion ever offered to man, and at a sacrifice of popularity I hav proclaimed them ever since. Until I find something more logical or consistently scientific, as long as I retain my mental equilibrium, my voice shall ever be heard reverberating the sentiments of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER.

Without an exception, Heston's cartoons are the most potent and effectual factors in this Freethought warfare that could be employed. This man Heston must possess a mountain of genius and education, so well and so truly does he portray his pictures. Never let them stop.

I go to church occasionally, and there I hear the false accusations and misrepresentations of the religious cranks concerning our modern savior, Colonel Ingersoll, and the doctrin of human Rationalism, and it so arouses my indignation and enthuses my ambition that I hav longed for the ability of the one that is assailed, when I would polish them off in a minute.

You mention in a recent number the different ways we can help THE TRUTH SEEKER. Among them is by sending sample copies to subscribers for distribution. Now, I am a subscriber and I do want to help THE TRUTH SEEKER and the cause of Liberalism. Please send me a few copies bearing the date of May 9th and 16th, and they will be disposed of to our good. I conclude by wishing that long may liv THE TRUTH SEEKER and its principles be perpetual and prevail, and that ultimate mental emancipation be ours to the extent of perfect liberty.

Without the grace of God, I am,

Fraternally yours, ELMER MCMILLER.

NEW BALTIMORE, O., June 1, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: From the tone of many of your correspondents your readers would conclude that most of your patrons were poor men and Anarchists. Nothing is said in favor of the rich man; all seem to be against him as though it was a crime to be rich, or as though no man could accumulate property unless he did so dishonestly or criminally.

Mr. Ballou says the poor man bears all the burdens. Let us inquire and ascertain. In this part of the United States the men of property make and keep up the roads and all other improvements; they build school-houses and educate the children of the poor as their own, and even go so far as to compel the poor man's children to go to school, in many instances furnishing them books. If necessary they throw around the poor the protecting arm of the law. The man of property pays nearly all the expenses of keeping up the government, unless it be the revenue derived from tobacco and intoxicating liquor. Without the man of capital the poor man would be without labor or money. And in many cases he gets more than his labor is worth, and the capitalist fails in his business. Yet there is a constant cry that capital is robbing labor, that the laborer is working at starvation prices, and strikes are instituted, and mostly by men who are earning from $2 to $8 per day, which would enable any person with an ordinary family to liv and lay up something for after-life by using ordinary economy and keeping sober.

There is the great trouble, intemperance. Many men (not all), especially miners, will work all the week, make from $20 to $30, then get on a spree, spend the whole or nearly the whole amount before Monday morning, and when they find their money gone they strike for higher wages. And every strike is decidedly against the laborer; it discourages capital, factories are discontinued and new ones are not built, the demand for labor is less than the supply, and the consequence is, the price of labor is reduced.

The only way to increase the value of labor is to make it valuable and profitable to the manufacturer. Then the business will be found profitable, other factories will start up, and create a demand for labor and the rise in wages.

Without the hated capitalist the poor man must starve; the best policy for the poor man is by frugality himself to become a capitalist. This country pays the highest wages of any country in the world, why then so much complaint? In China the laborer gets ten cents a day. S. M. BOWER.

INDUSTRY, KAN., May 25, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I read an article in week before last's TRUTH SEEKER stating how to increase the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER. That is just what I hav been doing ever since I hav been taking the paper, and I find it has accomplished a great deal of good. And if you hav any extra copies that you hav no particular use for, I would be pleased to receive them, and I shall circulate them where I think they will do the most good. Just as soon as I am through reading mine, I distribute it where it does the most good. My Liberal papers and books are always in demand. This book that I am now ordering from you is for a friend of mine that saw the advertisment in THE TRUTH SEEKER. And if we are fortunate enough here in Kansas to get a good crop of grain this year, I expect to be able to order $12 or $15 worth of books from you, as there are three other parties going in with me to order books in order to post themselvs on the Liberal question; and then, they say they are going to attend the religious revivals next winter, and if the preacher or church-members come to them to persuade them to get what the church calls religion, they can defend themselvs, and giv a reason why they don't believe it. And more than that, we are going to make a strong effort to secure you more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER. But at present it is almost impossible to send for books or get subscribers, as money is very scarce on account of poor crops for the last two or three years, and the people at present are very busy cultivating their crops. But I assure you that I am doing all I can for the Liberal cause according to my ability and finance. Everybody that sees THE TRUTH SEEKER is wonderfully amused at the pictures, except the church-members, as they think it is blasphemy in the first degree to illustrate "holy things" in their true light. But that's right. Tell Brother Heston to giv it to them in strong doses, as that is the only thing that will eradicate the old Bible superstition out of some people's minds.

It is too bad that the great majority of the people in this age of the world must be hypocrits, in order to please hypocritical church-members. In the first place, the more Liberal-minded people hav not the courage to express their honest opinion publicly; and as they are in business they are afraid to do so for fear they will offend some of their patrons who do pretend to believe in the Holy Queer, and lose their trade; and then they think it unpopular to be an unbeliever. And with my experience with the people I find it is so. Nearly everybody goes to church to see and to be seen and make a display of themselvs. Quite a number of church-members hav told me already, "Wise, believe what you please, but don't express your honest opinion publicly; for your being a poor young one-armed man hurts your reputation in the estimation of the people; for it is fashionable nowadays to be a hypocrit, and you might as well be a hypocrit and make pretensions in Christianity, as well as the rest of us." What do you think of such assertions as that?

Your true friend, J. B. WISE.

MARCELINE, MO., May 25, 291.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been here in Missouri nearly one year. I find quite a number of Liberals here—some who are outspoken, and many others who are shy, and afraid to speak their honest thought for fear of social and business boycott. And I will tell you what I notice by associating with both Liberals and Christians. I find existing among Christians a kind of narrow-mindedness, a selfish disposition, a kind of unnatural, unreasonable ghostology hovering over that household. I find the most strict and sincere among them to be the most unreasonable. When I take up my abode for the night with a man who asks a long, long blessing, and says a long evening and morning prayer, I do not miss the mark very far or often when I make up my mind to hav to pay such a man something near two prices for my staying with him.

And the children raised by such parents hav a longing gaze or pious look, a dulness about them, which no doubt hav been brought upon them by being taught the unreasonable story of the Bible. The mind of every child revolts against such absurdities until it has been crippled, biased, blunted, and twisted out of reason by such ghostly dreams until at last it has no power to resist the hypnotic influences of such a teaching, and it falls a victim. It is no longer the bright-eyed, smiling-faced child of nature. It becomes, as it were, nailed to the cross. Its brain has been deadened. It has become the child of superstition. Its soul has been poisoned by the cruel influences of the unreasonable and absurd. It has become non-progressiv in the world of thought. And if in spite of all such cruel teaching, the child retains a single germ of natural reason and it begins to bud, the parents, all the Christian neighbors, and the clergy, the great defenders of superstition, are ready as soon as it is discovered to crush and kill the last vestige of that bud of promis. They then shout and pray, and tell their God of what they hav done. They seem to think they hav gained a great victory. The most of them are no doubt in earnest, and I believe they are sincere and think they are doing right, for they were taught these doctrins when they were children.

And I want to tell you that that is why I fight such doctrins. They cause people to do wrong unconsciously, while they think they are doing right. It is wrong to teach a child that certain things are true, when we do not nor cannot know them to be true ourselvs. Now, as I said before, I find the most strict and sincere among the Christians to be the most unreasonable. Those who return thanks to the open space, and try to liv right up to the Bible, and fall on bended knees around the family altar with close-shut eyes, I say these faithful people hav (and it is probable that they hav unconsciously) been the most cruel and relentless toward me and all others who disbelieve their dogmas. And I hav often wondered (admitting that their doctrins be true) why when they pray they close their eyes, and if they can see God any plainer by closing them.

I also find another class who call themselvs Christians who are sociable, kind, and reasonable. They erect no family altars, do not return thanks at table, and only go to church at wide intervals. I find these to be very good people. But, as it seems to me, they hav advanced thus far toward Liberalism.

I believe the devout Catholic to be more reasonable on more subjects than the devout Protestant of some of their churches. Yet the Catholics imprison the minds of children while quite young, and they more seldom emerge from their incarceration than Protestant children. Any system that teaches as fact that which is beyond the limit of the senses, or that which no one does or can know, is in my judgment a system that does not deserve the respect of intelligent beings, and is liable to do much harm and impede the progress of humanity. I think a people who for the most of the time hav their minds directed above the clouds searching for Gods they never find, do not themselvs nor their fellow-man justice here.

About fifteen years ago I learned legerdemain or magic. I hav for the most of the time for nearly fifteen years been traveling, giving entertainments. My exhibition consists of combination music of five instruments, legerdemain, automatic performance, comic and sentimental songs, and what I hav believed and still believe to be instructiv lectures, given not in high-polished language, but, I think, to the point. After, and sometimes before, working my deceptiv illusions, I would very candidly inform my audience that such tricks were deceptiv and were not just what they appear to be—that the effects produced were due to clever mechanism, dextrous manipulation, etc. When I find people who attribute such a performance to the supernatural, and believe that those who play such tricks hav pawned their souls to the devil to get his power to cast a mist over people's eyes, as they call it—I say, when I find such people as I hav mentioned, people who would not attend such places for fear that their presence there would tear their God from his throne, I go to them and expose to them the secret of some trick which they hav heard some one speak of when they were young; and in so doing I hav severed a section of that horrible band of superstition, and hav cast it from the brain forever. There are thousands of such people as I hav spoken of even to this day.

My lecture now has become almost a downright Liberal lecture. I fight superstition, false teaching, and fraud. I hav a combat with nearly every preacher I meet. After talking to them for a whole day, and some of them for a day and a night, they almost all acknowledge that they do not know any more of God, devil, heaven, and hell than what I claim to know myself. I then tell them they ought to be ashamed to teach that God is the author of such a book as the Bible, and that a merciful God would forever damn to an endless hell some of his people he has created because they cannot believe that Jesus Christ rose from the dead three days after he was crucified and then ascended up to heaven. That is what I tell them. I tell them to be honest and preach to the people what they acknowledge to me. But they will not do that, you know. They go to the pulpit and preach as positiv fact that which they hav acknowledged to me that they did not know, but only had that strong faith to believe. I think I hav a perfect right to accuse such gospel trip-hammers of downright falsehood. They some of them tell me they do not know these things to be facts, but they hav faith to believe they are facts, and they feel it a duty to preach them as facts, for, they say, "if they prove in the end to be facts, were it not better that we preached them as facts?" Then right in the face of that reasoning they tell me all who do not hear the gospel of Christ preached, people who hav not the opportunity to read the Christian Bible, will be saved anyway. "They know nothing of Christ, therefore they cannot disbelieve in him." Yet they say we Liberals who believe Christ was no more than any good and great reformer, simply a good man in his time, will suffer endless punishment. I tell you, I hate such a doctrin as that with every fiber of my being. And then do not the preachers get themselvs in close quarters if, after they preach Christ to the people that know him not, any should disbelieve and reject him? For then, according to their teaching, these poor hapless beings will be subject to eternal torment, and will not the preachers who enlighten them be the cause of all this? Would it not hav been better, and would it not be better now, not to enlighten people on that subject if it really will cause anyone to suffer throughout an endless eternity? Would that I had the oratorical power equal to that of a ton of dynamite, and the voice of thunder, so I could giv some people such a shaking up as to cause them to investigate and seek a reason for belief in things, instead of accepting by blind faith. C. A. GLENN.

SAVANNAH, GA., May 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Hell has broken loose in Georgia. I inclose herewith two clippings from the Savannah Morning News. One of them, headed "Thrifty Theories of Theology," criticises rather sharply the journeymen preachers who object to being shut out of what would be paying jobs by apprentices who are willing to work for nothing for the sake of practice. The other is a communication by R. M. Orme, and, while not absolutely blasphemous, is so heretical in tone that I am surprised that a newspaper in this Christian community should hav dared to publish it.

Savannah is one of the worst priest-ridden cities in the United States; and, strange to say, it is also one of the wickedest. Although exceeded in population by other counties in the state, the county in which it is situated annually furnishes more convicts to the state penitentiary than any other county, although the administration of the law is far from strict. This state of affairs exists in spite of the fact that there are in the city thirty-nine churches—one for each 1,100 inhabitants. As might be expected, there are more than 150 drinking-places. Not only crimes but lesser immorality flourish. I cannot pretend to say who or what is responsible.

About three months ago a new mayor was elected on a "reform" movement. Among his first official acts was an edict ordering the strict enforcement of an ordinance requiring, among other things, the closing of tippling-houses on Sunday. The rumsellers did not like being shut off from the best business day of the week, and insisted on the enforcement of the entire ordinance. As a consequence the sale of cigars, soda and mineral waters, and everything else except medicins at the drug-stores, was stopped, news-stands were closed, greengrocers and butchers were not allowed to go into their places of business to deliver articles previously purchased and left on ice until Sunday, newspaper offices were closed, and even the newsboys and bootblacks were chased off the street. The people stood it for three successiv Sundays; then they rose in their wrath, and demanded a modification of the ordinance so that it would apply to tippling-houses only. Their demand was at once complied with. A few saloon-keepers were arrested and fined for violating the Sunday law; but the spasm of virtue waned, and now it is as easy to get liquor on Sunday in Savannah as it is to pay for it.

There are, I suppose, some Infidels in Savannah, but I hav met very few. A large portion of the population are Roman Catholics, very few of whom become Liberals. As they are accustomed to having their thinking and praying done for them by the priests, they do not seem to think it necessary to investigate for themselvs. P. C. OGLESBY.

Editor Morning News: Your writer makes some pretensions of having read and studied the Bible. The Dr. Briggs trial interests him. He has also read every creed and belief, from paganism, Mosaism, Judaism, polytheism, Catholicism, Protestantism, down to Mormonism; and what are all those "isms" but the shadows of men's minds, in different parts of the world, produced, generated, and given mental vitality to according to the condition, education, environment, and brain capacity of the people? Why did polytheism die, the child of thought of enlightened Greece and Rome? Simply because the minds and education of the people had outgrown the thought of many gods—their loves, their jealousies, and the doings of their gods. That and nothing more.

As a gentleman told me the other day, objecting to my broad, liberal, and progressiv ideas: "The church of my fathers and their faith is good enough for me." "There we differ," I replied. "The faith of my fathers has nothing to do with my faith. Their faith was built upon their reason and education; and my faith is built upon my reason and my education. Thought and investigation never stand still." The doctors who physicked our fathers of fifty or one hundred years ago could not physic me to-day unless they were thoroughly up in all branches of medical science. So with the doctors of divinity fifty and a hundred years ago. My old great-grandfather preached Calvinism, pure and simple, over one hundred years ago; but I hav no idea of swallowing his theological medicin. His faith was not good enough for me, and I guess he has learned something by this time. Rev. Dr. Briggs has made an issue, and one that cannot be dodged, compromised, or ignored. It has got to be met; met with facts—historical facts. The people, the times, the surroundings, the influence, under which prophets, apostles, and bishops wrote and spoke are legitimate subjects for criticism and investigation. I simply dare to think outside of all churches, and other men do the same. In truth, they hav put me to thinking, reading, investigating, and research. "The History of the Christian Religion to the Year Two Hundred," is a book that will make any man think, and think as he never thought before.

If the Bible be an inspired book—every word, every line, every narrativ, every historical assertion made therein—then there must be or should be some divinely inspired men to interpret it. Human laws made by men are judged and explained and passed upon by men. If the apostles were inspired—and that is claimed for them—where is the man or the men who now walk the earth who can look his fellow-man in the face and say: "Behold, an inspired man of God speaks to you, hear him and believe." Work a miracle if you please, we would say; here is my cane, turn it into a snake and I will believe in your inspiration. Peter, James, John, and others of their day were something of thaumaturgists, and that was their clinching assertion or argument that they were inspired. Inspired men generally had wonderful powers, and miracles came easy to them.

But the church? exclaims the believer in the church as a divine institution. Well, what is the church but a body of reasoning, thinking, investigating men? What is a party but a set of men in a party convention to draw up a set of resolutions and say, this is the voice of the Democratic or Republican party? Why all these councils, synods, conventions, if what was delivered to the fathers was inspiration? Why talk in such assemblies about the spirit of the times, the intelligence of the people, the advancement of thought, the investigation of science, the revelation of geology, the study of ethnology, etc., which never entered the brain of the writer of many books in the Bible, and were not dreamed of by the fathers? The church once ruled science, and sat in judgment upon scientific books. Must the living thought and knowledge of to-day stand still and be knocked down by the bones of the dead past? If the church has not changed, hav not the people in a wonderful degree? The love of power is a mania with some men, and, like the miser, nothing but the hand of death will ever make them giv it up. The church loves authority and power, and hence the fight against any man who loves truth better than authority.

Should it ever be my privilege to see infallible men, men who never take cognizance of their reason, judgment, logic; who never consult facts, history, and are perfectly indifferent to all surroundings, just as Jesus was, then I may believe in some infallible church.

But with the Bible before me, knowing something of the history of the people who wrote the books, their peculiar ideas, their understanding of God, their peculiar belief in God and God's dealing with them for near two thousand years, and books covering a space of near two thousand years, I must not forget there was a good deal of human nature and human passion in all that was said and written.

I hav written this article, Mr. Editor, because this trial of Rev. Dr. Briggs means a change or a revolution in thought in a greater or less degree, just as the discussion relativ to the Westminster Catechism means a more modified form of Calvinistic teachings. The people might as well know the truth now as later. It is coming, and it had better come gently than like a torrent which will do great injury. France once leaped with a mighty leap from Catholicism to Atheism; but in time took in a taste of Protestantism, and was saved from her folly. R. M. O.

Western ministers of the gospel are somewhat agitated and interested by the recent strike, so to speak, in the Iowa presbytery caused by the introduction of theological students into pulpits which the veterans say the various congregations would hav to employ graduated journeymen expounders to fill if it were not for those enthusiastic aspirants who volunteer their services gratuitously just for the practice they may thus acquire. Possibly the students get all their services are really worth. But such a suggestion would be very unkind. Moreover, it is not the point.

Heretofore the impression has commonly prevailed among the laity that the good men of the gospel held the dissemination of the holy scriptures as the highest aim and sole purpose of the sacred calling to which they had consecrated their lives simply for the sake of the good they could do mankind.

Apparently that is an egregious error. These gentlemen place the ministry upon the ordinary plane of a mere profession for the purpose of making a living. Not only that, but the members of the craft clearly hav thrifty notions about the essentials of success, and deem it necessary to keep a close watch upon cut-rate competition. In fact, they appear more than usually impatient of any sort of invasion of their province, which has hitherto been considered an open field in which all comers were heartily welcome.

All that is now changed. Theory has been transmuted into practice of the most practical sort. Cold calculation would not incorrectly describe it. But is that likely to advance the cause of religion? That is the grave question which now presents itself. Are men trained in so thrifty a school of crafty calculation upon pecuniary gain more likely to diffuse pure Christianity than the old school of simple teaching of the gospel for the benefits it was supposed to confer upon their fellows? Really it does not seem reasonable.

Those veterans of the text and benediction offer no other objection to the young preachers than that they should keep quiet and let their hair grow, so to speak. In other words they should "go to Jericho and wait until their beards grow." How a great growth of whiskers would increase their piety or augment their talents is not stated. Meanwhile those young men are presumably to allow their religious fervor to gradually cool and their enthusiasm slowly ooze out of them from inaction while they waste the best years of youthful vigor in awaiting their turn at the evangelical till.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

I. Dunno and I. Knowit.

I. Dunno started on a memorable trip,
With a valiant companion, I. Knowit;
"Let us feel our way slowly," says slow I. Dunno;
I. Knowit says, "Let us just go it!"
And one would go fast and one would go slow,
In this trip of I. Knowit and slow I. Dunno.

I. Dunno picked his way, felt about with his cane,
And carefully tested the bridges;
I. Knowit rushed on, like a late express train,
Over mountains and rivers and ridges;
He looked back and cried, "Get a move on, old slow!"
"Oh, I'll go my own jog," said old slow I. Dunno.

I. Knowit got tangled and lost in the swamp,
And well-nigh submerged in the mire;
I. Dunno, he found out, in his leisurely romp,
That the ground was too soft, and went higher;
"I'll poke with my cane wherever I go,
And stub along easy," said slow I. Dunno.

I. Knowit crawled out all covered with mud,
And banged and battered with bruises,
Says he, "A fellow with fire in his blood
Can duff in wherever he chooses."
"'Tis better to go kinder mod'rate and slow,
And not get banged and battered," said slow I. Dunno.

I. Dunno traveled slow, but he got far ahead
Of the rapid onrusher, I. Knowit.
I. Dunno still said, "Let us carefully tread,"
I. Knowit still said, "Let us go it."
I. Knowit brought up in the swamp of Dontcare;
I. Dunno reached the beautiful land of Gothere.

Hattie M. Day's Arkansas Home.

I must be brief. Miss Day is a contributor to the Children's Corner. I was kindly invited by the Day family to visit them. I was not physically able to travel or visit, but had been so confined to my little room that I most gladly accepted the invitation, and am now (May 14 h) with them. I find them, when compared with most families, peaceable, harmonious, and happy. Just think of it. What is the world coming to? A whole family of Atheists, godless parents and children, happy without any aid from the Bible, the preachers, and their God. Yes, godless humanitarians, who try to make the most of this life without regard to any other Here I am most kindly treated; here I am treated with intellectual as well as physical hospitality; here I can talk freely and fully my thoughts and ideals, without watching and measuring my words.

Their home is in a narrow, irregular valley, extending north and south. It is bordered by low hills and ridges covered with small trees, shrubs, plants, and grass, and presents a varied, picturesque scene. Much of the land is rough and stony, covered with various shrubs, blackberry bushes, and wild strawberry vines. It is natural fruit land, and there is a large orchard twenty-five to fifty feet above the valley. The main house is built of hewed logs and plastered chinks, with a small board wing for a bed-room. The kitchen is a small log house a few feet away. There are several small, open log buildings for animals, hens, tools, and "traps." A cold, constant stream of water runs from a spring in the sidehill close to the house down a spout and falls down and runs through the milk-house, in which milk, cream, butter, and anything else, are kept cool by being set on stones and pebbles in the clear, constantly running water. Some way below, the same little brook runs under an out-building, and washes away and absorbs, or dissipates, all impurities. Farther down a few rods, this brook that runs along one side of the garden is much enlarged by the water from another spring, and runs partly through the cow-yard.

The house is gratefully and gracefully embowered by tall, spreading walnut trees, whose tops are so high that there is a pleasant blending of sunlight and shade. Here there is but little if any mud, and no impure air. The natural sanitary conditions are most excellent and desirable. These natural conditions and surroundings, with everything in the house and kitchen kept in the utmost neatness, make everything most palatable, delightful, and inspiring to all the lower and higher senses. Here, although more or less in physical pain, I am trying to enjoy myself as my checkered life is nearing its close. A godless humanitarian, I here, to a great extent, meet with congenial responses to my truth- and nature-loving "spirit" or organic impressibility. The Day family read and think much, and radiate their mental light and goodness far out upon dark error and superstition. They are isolated from, but seek and need congenial society. I shall soon return one hundred miles to my Kansas abode. so different in many respects. Bless the Day family and all who read this brief recital.

A Ready Answer.

When Lord Ellenborough was chief justice, a laboring bricklayer was one day called as a witness in an action. When he came up to be sworn, his lordship said to him:

"Really, witness, when you hav to appear before this court, it is your bounden duty to be more clean and decent in your appearance."

"Upon my life," replied the witness, "if your lordship comes to that, I'm thinking I'm every bit as well dressed as your lordship."

"How do you mean?" said the judge angrily.

"Why," said the laborer, "you come here in your working clothes, and I'm come in mine."

Correspondence.

JOPLIN, MO., May 20, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to the Children's Corner My papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for five years. I hav heard Mr. Jamieson lecture at the court house, and at a school-house in Hox Diggens. The court house is in Joplin. I go to school, and I study reading, writing, geography, arithmetic, and grammar I hav two sisters and one brother. My brother is named after Mr. Ingersoll. My oldest sister goes to Sunday-school and to church I guess she goes to learn how to sing Her name is Mary. My little sister's name is Mina. She is four years old. She says she believes what papa believes. My oldest sister tries to make her believe there is a God. and she will say, "I am a little Infidel." I am nine years old. I hav seen no children that write to the Corner from this place. I thought I might be the first one to write, and hope this letter will not go to the waste basket.

Your little Freethinker friend,

LENA F. WOOD.

OSCEOLA, IA., May 29, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I will write a letter for the Corner for the second time. Our school was out to-day. We did not hav any piece to speak. I like to read the Children's Corner I received a Freethinker's Magazine last week. I hope this letter will not reach the waste-basket. My sister sent for those flower seeds that were advertised in THE TRUTH SEEKER We planted them, and they are all growing nicely. The paper is very nice; the name of it is the Ladies' World. I liv in the country. I liv eight miles southwest of Osceola. I hav four brothers and five sisters. Two of my sisters are teachers, and two brothers are teachers. I hav one brother married, and one sister. I hav two nephews, and one little niece. I liv in a large square house. We hav the largest pond I ever saw; we hav fish in it. The front of our house faces the north. We hav a large orchard, and it stands north of the house, and also a very large barn that is east of the orchard; the pond is east of the barn in a grove of maple trees. It is very amusing to feed the fish. We can feed our fish out of our hand. We hav a large flock of geese, turkeys, and chickens. I liv one mile and a quarter from the school-house. We are going to hav new books next term; but I don't think it is the best policy for the teachers. Well, I guess I will come to a close. MYRTLE JONES.

CISNE, ILL., May 20. 1891.

TO THE YOUNG BOYS AND THEIR PARENTS: Little boys who read the Children's Corner in THE TRUTH SEEKER, if you want to join our temperance society as soon as you get old enough, now is your time to commence Never begin bad habits. Do not tamper with tobacco or liquor because you think it is smart, or because you think it would make you look large It is just the opposit, for our best physicians cry it down, and they surely know. Then, do not use it for your own sake, for your country's sake do not. Parents, keep your boys out of bad company; you may ask how you shall do this, and I am sure you will all agree with me that the best way is to keep them at home, or go with them. Do not giv your boys the whole rope too soon. You should hold on to one end as long as you can; the time will come soon enough when you will hav to let go. Always let them know that they are under your control until they are of age. Do not do this with main force, but do it with kindness. Gain their love and you will hav no trouble, for if a boy loves his parents he will not do anything that would bring disgrace upon them. Do not keep them under your eye and think it will spoil their happiness, for if taught from youth to stay with you they won't know but what they hav to, and they will be just as happy.

Young men who are in those terrible snares of tobacco and liquor, pull out of them. Come and go with us Freethinking temperance workers. If some old fogy tells you hat a chew of tobacco is good for the toothache, you hav no need to commence using it; there are other remedies for the toothache, and they won't cost any more in the long run. Do not take a drink of liquor of any kind because some old soft-head tells you it will be good for you; he is a little soft or he would not say such a thing.

Yours truly, E W. PRIDE,
President of the Freethinkers' Temperance Society.

ROCHESTER, MINN., June 1, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As this is my first letter for the Corner, I will try to make it as short as possible, because your space is valuable.

I am the only Liberal girl in this city that I know of. I am fourtsen years old and hav neither sister nor brother. Can't you pity me?

There are 5,000 inhabitants here and eleven churches. but no Liberal hall.

The Catholic church has a convent right beside it, and there are a great many children going to school—to be made nuns of, I suppose It seems to me the greater part of the inhabitants here are Catholics. There is also a Catholic hospital on the outskirts of the city in charge of the sisters and priests They call it a charitable institution, but everyone has to pay or stay away.

The second insane asylum is located about one mile east of the main part of the city, and there are about 1,100 patients.

Rochester is very slow in getting improvements, but we now hav the streets lighted by electricity, and our house is furnished with gas, and the gas is also lighted by electricity, which papa fitted up himself, with batteries, etc. He has also put electric bells into several houses around here.

Mamma and I expect to go down to camp meeting at Clinton, Ia., this August, and I hope I will meet some Liberal boys and girls there. Am glad to see so many children peeping into Liberalism a little, and I would be glad to correspond with some of the Cornerites about my age. Hope you will start up a children's paper; I will help it all I can.

Wishing you success in your noble efforts for the benefit of us all, I remain,

Your Liberal friend, HELENA M FOX.

[Welcome, Helena. Now that you hav come into the Corner, you hav a crowd of brothers and sisters. Our young people's paper is still in embryo, and we may hav to wait till our young folks grow up before we see the paper a living thing. Thanks for kind wishes.—ED. C. C]

The March Peeper.

Very early in the spring may be heard by those living in the country the "peep, peep, peep" of a little frog that is known as the "little peeper."

Then we know that the "pussy willows" are putting forth their soft mossy buds, that new life is starting in the forests, that the sap is moving in the trees, and the fresh young grass is stretching its tiny blades in the sod Few people hav ever met the queer creatures that announce in piping tones the advent of spring time, and yet they are very thick in the marshy meadows and along the muddy brooks. They are quick and activ in their movements, full of vigor, and handsome in their changing coats of white, green, black, and red. When night comes they giv an evening concert, and the listener seems to hear a thousand little peeps from as many delicate throats, all appearing to be doing their best to make themselvs heard. But if you should approach very near, presto! silence reigns. The music suddenly ceases, and a deep hush falls on the meadows and shallow pools, for they hav a fine sense of hearing Just as soon, however, as they think (or they must hav some sort of thinking powers) you are out of the way, they will again strike up their notes. They lay their eggs in the spring, attaching them to long grass, where the rays of the sun can reach them, and about August the little baby peepers begin to stir into activity and look about for flies and insects, which compose their food. Nothing is truer than that "the big fishes eat the little fishes," and the larger fresh-water creatures come down upon the "peepers" and devour them. If the turtles, snakes, and fish did not do this, the muddy places would swarm alive with big and little frogs.

In science the name of these puny creatures is Hylodes. S. H. W.

QUESTIONS.—By what signs do we realize the near approach of spring? Describe the "Maron peeper." Did you ever see one? When do the peepers giv concerts? What about their hearing? When do they lay their eggs? How are the eggs kept in a particular place? At what time are they hatched? What is the nature of their food? Do they themselvs furnish food? And to what class of creatures? If some of them were not destroyed what would be the consequence? What is the scientific name of the March peeper?

THE French Invasion of Ireland in '98.

Leaves of Unwritten History That Tell of a Heroic Endeavor and a Lost Opportunity to Throw Off England's Yoke.

By VALERIAN GRIBAYEDOFF.

With a map and numerous illustrations by well-known artists. Handsomely bound in silk cloth. Ink and gold side stamps. Price, $1.50.

The present volume is an effort to rescue from comparative oblivion one of the many extraordinary episodes of the great French revolutionary war . It points a moral that amidst republican institutions like ours, will not fail to receive appreciation. It shows, on one hand, the elevating influence of newly acquired ambition, . . . and on the other the debasing effects of Religious and Political intolerance both on the tyrant and the victim. Contains a heretofore unpublished letter of Thomas Paine to the French Directory.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

The New Thought (Chicago) says: "It is the best thing of the kind we ever saw. . . . To state the whole thing in the language of another, the first book shows what a heaven is coming on this earth after it shall have passed through the necessary discipline, and the other books show what a hell of a time we have to get there."

The Chesaning Argus (Chesaning, Mich.) says: "It is one grand sublime poem . . . a perfect history in blank verse of the social and religious struggles of our earth, and would be good reading for those who have been interested in 'Looking Backward.'" Describing Book 6, it says: "This chapter will be found especially interesting to ladies."

The Phrenological Journal (New York) regards it as equal to the great epics of a hundred years ago or more.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," says: "I have read it with much interest. I am in entire sympathy with its spirit of boundless faith in human development."

Rev. R. Heber Newton says it is one of the significant indications of the signs of the times.

The Nationalist, of Boston, considers its style as equal to Milton's, and says it "engages the reader's attention with the first line and keeps it engrossed until the final word."

Brick Pomeroy's Advance Thought (N. Y.) says: "It contains much to benefit humanity."

ALL inquiry is commonly denounced as skepticism, and skepticism is identified with unbelief. But it is simply impossible that our faith can be anything but credulity if it is not preceded by inquiry. If there are reasons for faith, our faith must be reasonable. This result is inevitable, not merely as to religion, but to all things that depend on reasoning.—John Hunt.

THE prevalent characteristic of popular theology in England at this time may be said to be a tendency to eliminate from Christianity, with thoughtless dexterity, every miraculous element which does not quite accord with current opinion, and yet to ignore the fact that, in so doing, ecclesiastic Christianity has practically been abandoned altogether. This tendency is fostered with profoundly illogical zeal by many distinguished men within the church itself, who endeavor to arrest for a moment the pursuing wolves of doubt and unbelief which press upon the church, by practically throwing them, scrap by scrap, all those doctrins which alone constitute the claims of Christianity to be regarded as a divine revelation at all. The moral Christianity which they hope to preserve, noble though it be, has not one feature left to distinguish it as a miraculously-communicated religion.—Supernatural Religion.

THE TROUBLES OF A THANKFUL MAN.

Notes and Clippings.

In a sermon two weeks ago a Newton, Ia., minister stated that but five per cent of the men under thirty years of age in the United States are church-members, and of these one-half only are activ workers.

The ashes of Mme. Blavatsky are to be placed in a magnificent urn of gold and guarded by the British section of the Theosophical Society. An effort will be made by the Washington Theosophists to hav the urn stored in the national capital. So says the World.

"Papa," asked a little boy the other day, apparently fresh from a theological controversy with some young playmates, "papa, was Christ a Jew?" "Yes." "Was he really and truly a Jew?" "Yes," was the answer. There was a long pause, and then came the comment, "Well, I always thought God was a Presbyterian."

It must be gratifying to any patriotic citizen, says the Sun, that so many as six ministers hav preferred to be expelled from the Reformed Presbyterian church rather than promis to refrain from voting at political elections, and that their action is commended by a large number of the younger members of that church. A church interferes in politics when it prohibits any activ participation in civil government as much as when it attempts to control that participation, and is equally in opposition to the best interests of the people. It is singular that a sect of Presbyterians should be among the last to continue to insist upon such an anti-social obligation, for in the past Presbyterians hav been activ in overturning as well as in maintaining the government of nations.

The Rev. Dr. Burrell, preaching in the Collegiate church in this city, protests vigorously against what he terms "the higher biblical criticism," which he claims is minimizing divinely revealed scriptural truth. "If," he says, "the Bible contains errors, pray who will tell us where the truth ends and where the error begins? If the higher critics are right, the time has come for us to fly back to Rome." Let Mr. Burrell go back to Rome, if he will; the enlightened preachers will fly ahead to still greater heresy.

"Father" Hauptman, a Brooklyn priest, died last week. The most interesting thing now recalled about him is that a little over a year ago his housekeeper died and he ordered a splendid marble image of her to be erected and on the same plot of ground in St. John's Cemetery, L. I., he placed a statue of himself facing her. When Bishop Loughlin heard of this he was much incensed, and ordered the priest to take down his own monument. The obituaries now call him eccentric because of this monument building.

The Missionary Review dolefully relates that "all the six hundred nativ newspapers in India, except half a dozen, may be set down as inimical to Christianity. Organizations, modeled after the Christian Tract Societies, hav been established, and are in activ operation. The Freethought Depot in Madras issues a list of one hundred and twenty-four separate works, including thirty-four publications of Mr. Bradlaugh, nineteen of Mrs. Besant, sixteen of Colonel Ingersoll, and others of Paine, Voltaire, and other well-known Infidels."

The report of the head of the Royal Hospital for Consumptivs at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, says of Koch's remedy: "I firmly believe that Koch's discovery will soon emerge from the temporary disfavor into which, from a singular train of circumstances, it has fallen; that it has therapeutic properties as valuable as they are unique, and that it only requires to be employed with due caution under certain easily ascertained conditions to receive the recognition it deserves as an invaluable and essential part of the treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis."

The Hebrew Journal, of this city, makes some interesting remarks on the heresy trials in various Christian denominations. Its editor has come to the conclusion that "the present ferment of heresy indicates how strong is the drifting away from those ideas which, by being imposed upon Judaism, made what is known as Christianity," and also "indicates a continuance of the movement toward a reversion to Judaism, which has been going on ever since the Humanists paved the way for the Reformation." We take leave to say, comments the Sun, that we feel very sure that these striking remarks of the editor of the Hebrew Journal would not be confirmed by the Rev. Prof. Briggs, or the Rev. Heber Newton, or any of the other Protestant clergymen who hav recently been charged with heresy. The remarks, moreover, are not such as we ourselvs can uphold, and are not in accordance with our knowledge of the theological debates now in progress. The Sun probably knows, as does everybody else, that these heretics are not drifting back to Judaism, but going ahead to Liberalism.

The more the Presbyterians discuss the question of revising their Confession of Faith, the more they appear to hesitate about reaching a conclusion. At the recent session of the general assembly at Detroit the expected discussion of the subject was postponed by the adoption of a resolution to refer the report of the committee on revision to the presbyteries for revision. The idea of changing a creed which has been supposed to be "true as gospel" for centuries, is a delicate matter, and it is not surprising that the clergy are disposed to delay the work as long as possible. Radical changes would result in seriously shaking the faith of the laity in the authority of the church, and to simply temper the language so as to allow a more liberal construction, which seems to be the policy of the more conservativ, looks too much like cowardice. It is not likely that the changes that are finally adopted will meet the wishes of the more advanced thinkers in the church. The discussion which the question of revision has called forth, has aroused thought and investigation, and the longer this is continued the less probability of agreement. The truth is, a large proportion of the Presbyterians, laity as well as clergy, hav outgrown their creed, and will never indorse a mere verbal revision.—Sunday Gazetteer.

The Sunday Opening of the Exposition.—Concluded.

Here is a display of the old Christian tactics. They burst out of a Christian as naturally as rottenness bursts out of a peach. They were applied to Voltaire and Paine and are applied to Ingersoll and thousands of others to-day. When the argument cannot be assailed they assail the man who offers it. It is the manifestation of the same spirit which burnt Bruno, whipped women, and banished Roger Williams. It is an old Christian trick when an argument cannot be met, to traduce the character of him who offers it.

The gentleman says my influence is nothing compared with what it might hav been if I had pursued a different course. The gentleman bears evidence that it is even now too great for his purpose and for the purpose of Christianity. If the gentleman's assertion were true I would not likely hav been engaged in this discussion. It seems like a truth too hard for Christians to learn, that blasting a man's character does not annihilate the truth which he utters. If the gentleman should succeed in reducing me to a mere cipher the fact of gravitation would still remain. He says he is glad that his boy is not here to hear my argument. If he had been here would he hav heard an untruth? It is unfortunate for his boy that he was not born earlier. Judging from the spirit of his father, if he had been born two or three centuries ago, he might hav been an ornament in the church, and manipulated the rack and the thumbscrew and flourished the ripping-knife.

He says "we are indebted to Christianity for our civilization." Did the opposition of Christianity to the Copernical theory, and to the discovery of America, and to the art of printing and the use of steam, hav a tendency to build up civilization? Preachers hav just left off preaching the doctrin of a burning hell and infant damnation. Did such savagery tend to civilize the people?

Again, he says, "No good man will put himself in opposition to the majority; that the yielding to the majority is the American idea, and that the majority is generally right." The Boston mob was a great majority. Mr. Garrison was a very small minority. Which was right, the mob or Garrison? Did the mob represent the American idea? All the men in America would hav no right to reduce the humblest individual to a state of slavery, nor would the one be justified in yielding to the majority. Nor would it be the American idea. He says, "Sunday observance is the law of the state, and every good man will obey the law." When the Fugitiv Slave law was passed which imposed a fine and imprisonment for harboring or feeding a slave, Gerrit Smith said, "When a law forbids an act which an angel from heaven would stoop to perform, I shall obey the demand of humanity and take the penalty of the law." Was Gerrit Smith right or the Fugitiv Slave law? He further says that "Infidels hav no influence." Jefferson, Paine, and Lincoln were Infidels, and were known to hav been men of some little influence.

If time were allowed me I would make the honorable gentleman's Methodist exhortation look so small that the instruments of the microscopist would be needed to dissect it.

Would it be possible to prove that one hour or one day is more sacred than another? Will it not be a blessing to men when they learn that all time is too sacred to do wrong, and no time too sacred to do good?

Is the Columbian Exposition calculated to confer a blessing upon men, where will be exhibited the knowledge and the skill of all civilized nations of the world? Then tell me why that blessing will not be as great on Sunday as any other day?

How does it happen that the clerics are so much more interested in Sunday closing than anyone else? Is it not obvious that they are more influenced by selfishness than sanctity? Does past history prove that they as a class hav been more moral than other men? Is it not a fact that when they ruled supreme the world saw its darkest day?

Having shown where the teaching of the clergy has led us in the past, and where it will lead us in the future, if followed, let us get at the gist of the matter, and show that this idea of a holy Sabbath is entirely farcical—that there is positivly no authority for it, and that it is founded in superstition. And the reverend gentleman admits as much; for he says he will not argue the origin of Sunday, but claims that it is here, and has come to stay, and that it is recognized by the nation and the government. And how did it come to be recognized by the government? Was there any constitutional provision made for it? The truth is, it was forced upon the people by a designing priesthood. Sunday has come to stay just as long as ministers stultify themselvs by telling their ignorant dupes that it is God's appointed day when they know there is no truth in the assertion. When the reverend gentleman asserts that Sunday is recognized by the government, he unwittingly admits that there is a union of church and state. And every time he refers to it as a holy day, he admits that he is willing to deceive the people, by representing to them as true that which he knows to be false. It is not generally known that each day in the week derived its name from some class of worshipers, and principally from the old planet-worshipers whom Christians regard as heathen. We hav only to call to mind the old sun-worshipers to know the origin of Sunday. And if we put another "o" into Monday, it becomes Moonday, and that is the name by which it was originally called by those who connected certain religious ceremonies with that planet. Tuesday derived its name from Tuisco, the god of war and combats, and was associated with the planet Mars. Wednesday derived its name from the worshipers of the god Woden, and was called by them Wodensday. The name of Thursday comes from the worshipers of the god Thor, who consecrated that day to his worship. Friday gets its name from the Scandinavian god Frigga, represented by a nude female figure. This god or goddess was associated with the planet Venus.

One has only to think of the close similarity between Saturn and Saturday to understand that this day was set apart for the worship of the god Saturn. Thus we find that every day in the week is holy time. "In six days God created the heaven and the earth." Now, I want some Christian well up in theological lore to tell me on which day God commenced to work, when none of these days had received a name, but were known as the first day, second day, and so on. If he commenced on Sunday, and worked all day, away goes the Christian Sunday. For if God worked on that day it cannot be wicked for us to follow his example. If he did not commence his work on that day, then away goes the sanctity of the Jewish Sabbath.

Now, the Jewish Sabbath is binding upon us to-day, or it is not. If it is not binding upon us, then let Christians show some scripture authority for swapping off the Jewish Sabbath for the Christian Sunday. If the Jewish Sabbath is still binding, then the penalty for the violation must be binding also—namely, the stoning to death of the one who is guilty of the violation.

Sunday was not observed as holy time for more than three hundred years after the birth of Christ. Consequently it could not hav been set apart by him or any of his apostles. Then how did that day come to be observed as a sacred day? I will tell you. It was set apart by Constantine the Great, on his own responsibility, without warrant from Christ or anybody else. And the edict does not prohibit the working on Sunday by either man or beast, but givs the privilege of sowing and gathering the crops.

And who was this Constantine—bloody Constantine, as he has been called by some? Let Gibbon, the historian, answer. "Constantine had a father-in-law whom he compelled to hang himself; he had a brother-in-law whom he ordered to be strangled; he had a nephew, twelve or thirteen years old, whose throat he ordered to be cut; he had a son whom he beheaded; he had a wife whom he ordered to be suffocated in a bath, and so, after having made a clear house," he donned the imperial purple, mounted the throne of the Cæsars; made Christianity a state religion; and mingled heathen rites and ceremonies with Christianity, in order to attract the pagans to his standard, and thereby obtain a greater following.

Now I hav given the authority, and all the authority there is, for regarding Sunday as a sacred day. Am I bound by an edict of this blood-red murderer, any more than I am by an edict of Nero, or any other bloody tyrant whose conduct has been a disgrace to humankind?

Now let us examin the scriptures, the court of last resort for Christians, and see what light they throw upon this knotty question.

"One man that is strong believeth that he may eat all things; one that is weak eateth herbs. Let him that eateth despise not him that eateth not."

The plain meaning of this passage is, if it hav any meaning at all, that one man is not to dictate to another, or judge another who differs from him.

"One man esteemeth one day above another; another man esteemeth all days alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

That is to say, if one man believes it is right to observe one day in a week, then he must keep it. If another man has no regard for one day more than another, he is just as innocent as a man who keeps a day as sacred.

"The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath."

Here it is clearly set forth that the Sabbath was made for our use, and that we may use it to our own best advantage.

It would seem like a fair inference that when this passage of scripture was written there was one day regarded above the others, but this passage of scripture clearly implies that we are not compelled to pay any attention to it.

"Let no man judge you in respect to a holy day or Sabbath day, or new moon, or feasts, which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is Christ, he taking them out of the way."

From this passage we are led to infer that there were holy days besides Sabbath days, but we are not to be judged on account of either a holy day or a Sabbath day.

Now I hav quoted these passages of scripture which a Christian is bound to accept as evidence, and instead of upholding these holy Sunday ranters, they fly squarely into their teeth, and say plainly to every man, Throw up your heels, be jolly, on that day as you would on any other day; dance jigs or pray, as you like; you are not obliged to ask or answer any questions in regard to the matter.

Now, I hav proved conclusivly that this pretended sanctity of the Christian Sunday has no foundation either in scripture, in history, or in fact. Therefore it is safe to assert that the sanctity of the Christian Sunday has not been and cannot be proved.

Having proved that Christianity has been opposed to every reform and important discovery, that it has retarded the progress of civilization, that its advice has always proved disastrous when it has been followed, and that its advice is wickedly wrong in regard to closing the Exposition on Sunday, let us consider some other matters.

There are thousands of working men and women in the city of Chicago, who are compelled to work by the hour, and every hour in the week, to support themselvs and families. They hav no time to visit the Exposition except Sundays. Now, if "the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath," by what right are these toiling thousands excluded?

There are other thousands in the country who are able to spend but little time—six or eight days perhaps, and even that will be a great sacrifice for them—and how cruel and ungenerous it would be to rob them of one-seventh of their time.

And then there are Jews who will attend the Exposition, who sacredly regard the Jewish Sabbath. They do not like to violate the sanctity of their day any more than Christians do theirs. And if they are deprived of the privilege of attending on Sunday they will be robbed of two days in the week.

At the Centennial at Philadelphia there were representativs from almost every civilized nation on the globe. These people observe different days of the week as sacred time, and they will be allowed only four days in the week if the Exposition is closed on Sunday.

Why can there not be a little liberality and humanity and decency mixed in with Christianity? Now, I am liberal enough and I hav a heart big enough to say to the Jew, Keep your Saturday; to the Mohammedan, Keep your Friday; to the Persian, Keep your Thursday; to the Christian, Keep your Sunday—but don't be boorish. Be as charitable to others as you would like to hav them be to you. Nobody wants to compel Christians to attend the Exposition on Sunday if contrary to their will. Let them attend church, or pray, or read the Bible, or spend the time as they like. But if they do not like to be forced to attend the Exposition on Sunday, in the name of all that is decent, let them not force others to stay away.

O Christians, as long as you are allowed the fullest exercise of your rights, don't be little enough and mean enough to say to others, "You must do as I say."

Let the Exposition be open every day alike. Let the Jew observe his day if he likes, and the Mohammedan and the Persian.

Is not this fair for all? And would anybody but a bigoted Christian object to such an equitable rule?

If anybody attempted to compel Christians to attend the Exposition in case it should be opened on Sunday, the case would be different. But they will be free to attend or not, as they may elect. And for them to compel others to stay away, would be an act of usurpation, and could be construed in no other light.

The reverend gentleman thinks that if the Exposition should be opened on Sunday, all the desperadoes and disreputable characters would assemble there from all four quarters of the globe, and revelry and riot would be the order of the day.

Very few would travel a thousand miles or more or less just to hav hav a spree in Chicago; sprees can be had at much less expense. And if the Exposition is open on Sunday there is where they will go, for that is what they go for. But if it is closed—having nowhere else to go, for they will not attend church—they will spend the day at the saloons, and dives, and gambling-houses, and the very evils which the reverend gentleman seems so anxious to prevent would certainly take place.

If the Exposition is open on Sunday the churches might as well be closed. This the sticklers for Sunday closing understand. The priests and ministers are anticipating a big time if they can only succeed in closing the Exposition on Sunday. They know if their measure does not carry, Snorting Mike and Exhorting Sam and Praying Jack and "Shoutin' Joe" would get left. And here is all the real honesty there is in this great hue and cry about Sunday closing. And if ministers were as honest as "men of their cloth" ought to be they would candidly admit as much.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other consideration which demands our attention. The citizens of Chicago hav taxed themselvs heavily to make the Exposition a success. If it is closed on Sunday it will cut off a great part of the revenue to which they are justly entitled, which would be a great injustice to them.

Perhaps the reverend and honorable gentlemen will say that my language has been harsh and unwarranted. But I hav only followed the example set by my Christian brothers. I think my language has been fully as guarded and much more truthful than the language which they hav used in regard to Voltaire, Paine, Abner Kneeland, Ingersoll, and all whom they are pleased to call Infidels. "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" is the Bible rule which Christians ought not to repudiate.

Moreover, when they go among those whom they call heathens to convert them, they take any course which they think best calculated to break up their faith in the old religions. I am growing old, and my time is so short that you need not wonder, Mr. Chairman, at my anxiety to break down the old Christian superstition, and that with a bold hand and noble daring I smash the Christians' idols and demolish their imaginary God.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I thank you for the close attention which you hav paid to my rambling remarks. It must be admitted that my language has not been the best that might hav been chosen; for the time to prepare has been short. But I trust it has been sufficiently clear to convey my idea, and to establish beyond controversy the four following points, viz.:

1. That those men who hav exerted the greatest influence in the church hav been the most cruel, oppressiv, and tyrannical men who ever cursed the earth.

2. That the counsels of the church hav proved detrimental to human interests and never could be safely trusted; and the counsel in regard to closing the Exposition on Sunday is of the same character now as in the past, and if followed will be a meddlesome interference with and tyrannical usurpation of the right of others, and should not be tolerated.

3. That there is no authority for the observance of Sunday, either scriptural or historical; and that it was not so observed for more than three hundred years after the birth of Christ, and could not therefore hav been so set apart by him or any of his apostles.

4. That the closing of the Columbian Exposition will be done in the interest of the church, and will publish to the civilized nations of the world the superstition, illiberality, and bigotry of the American people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these points hav not been controverted, neither can they be. They occupy this triumphal ground unassailed and unassailable.

Naples, N. Y. JOHN PECK.

The Name America.

It has long seemed to me a strange thing, the assertion that the two new continents were named after the given, or first, name of Hemerigo Vespucci, a thing inconsistent with the customs of that time. The more the question is investigated the more probable it becomes that Vespucci got his name Americus from the already well-known name of the New World. For, agreeably to the custom of that time, his name was Latinized after he became known, into Americus Vespuccius, just as was that of his great contemporary Colon into Columbus. And had there been any attempt to honor the latter by naming any region after him, can we conceive of its being done by such a name as Christophera?

When we read the narrativs of voyages and discoveries made in that age, we find that the soldiers and sailors promptly named every place just as they do now, not waiting until some bookmaker was pleased to do it, and that the names so given rapidly spread among all people. In our time of books and papers we are apt to think that news was slow in spreading at that comparativly illiterate period. But important news spreads with amazing speed among non-reading populations. When we read the old books telling of the discovery of Mexico and Peru, we learn how the men, as they sailed along, gave names to points and whole regions that hav remained to this day. "How like Spain is this coast," said a soldier as they were sailing around Yucatan. "It is a New Spain," said the others; and for over a century it was called New Spain. "What country is that?" they asked an Indian as they came to an island near Mexico. "Culoa," said the Indian, pointing to the coast. Confounding it with a small point the sailors named it Ulloa, and it being St. John's day, San Juan de Ulloa became the fixed name. So the name of a part of the city of Tenoctitlan was, by mistake, given to the city, and finally to the whole country. Of that city, Tlateluco was, and meant, "Residence of the People;" Mexico, "Residence of the Nobility." These are examples of how the country was named and how soon. At that very time Brazil, and many other parts, were named. We must bear in mind that, from 1460 up to 1520, voyages of discovery were many. That Columbus and Vespucci both died ignorant of the fact that a new continent had been found; both believing that they had discovered China by a new route. See Vol. 2 of Humboldt's "Cosmos." Another fact is that Spain and Portugal were both making a great to do over the discoveries under their flags made just at that time, 1492–8, while less notice was taken of discoveries prior to that, but everything was done to lessen their importance. Just a few years before Columbus set out the first time, Martin Behem had been living in the Azores. He had been down to the straits of Magellan and had touched on Brazil before Columbus set out on his first voyage. He made a globe, still to be seen at Nuremburg, and showed the course of his journey. By the year 1500 the number of people coasting about Brazil, in the Caribbean sea, Gulf of Mexico, and north of there, was something marvelous. Is it credible that no general name was given to that vast stretch of country, among all the thousands of Dutch sailors and Flemings who were so familiar with it? Things well known to the great mass of seafaring men were, years afterward, made to burst upon the world as discoveries. Truly they were discoveries to those who never before heard of them. Thus it happened about Australia and the surrounding region. After the Dutch got possession of the Moluccas, Australia seemed to break upon the world as a new discovery. Yet it was known long before. Columbus died 1506, Vespucci 1512, both never suspecting the new continent, yet does anyone believe there were not men living who knew it was a new continent? The learning of the world must not be measured by their ignorance. What Cabot discovered about 1498 was new to Englishmen, but not to Icelanders. Much was known to the Dutch sailors and Flemings that no other people suspected at that time.

Martin Behaim (or Behem) had been at Brazil before 1492. Pinzon and Cabral were there in 1499, Vespucci in 1501. Some of them were coasting around Brazil and Venezuela a long time. Vespucci was at the island called by the nativs Itamaraca, now Maraca. Nativ names of that sound are very numerous all through that region. Everything has Merica or Marica to it. Thus Maricabo, Cundinamarca, Maracho, Mericabo, Amaribo, Mericata, Amarantibo, etc. The story goes that some sailors stationed on the coast in sight of a smoking mountain of very striking appearance, asked the nativs its name, and the reply was a sound like "Tamerique," or "Amerique," when spelled in Spanish, and meaning "Great Smoky Mountain." This name became so familiar among the sailors that the country was referred to by it, and the name, as a general one, was carried far and near in all conversations and verbal accounts.

After Vespucci gained some fame and was honored by the Latinizing of his name, a Dutch printer issued a map of Ptolemy, in which he placed the New World under the name Terra di Americci. This was done in 1507, and it was the first appearance of the name of the country in any print. No notice then was taken of it. Vespucci died in 1512 without dreaming that his name had been given to the country, without even suspecting he had discovered more than a part of Asia. A great lawsuit arose in 1508, between the fiscal agents of Spain and the heirs of Columbus, to take from the latter the privileges granted by the crown to the admiral, Columbus. It lasted till 1528. All sorts of reports were got up to belittle the discovery by Columbus. All the maps with the name America were introduced and circulated. Yet Vespucci, who lived till 1512, was never introduced as a witness, and no word was then ever uttered about the wrongful use of his name. Las Casas began a history the year the suit ended. He did not finish it till 1559, when he was near ninety years of age. In the first parts of his work he never utters one word of reproach against Vespucci. But in the last years of his writing he begins to accuse and bitterly reproach his memory. He says, "Foreign writers called the country America. If Vespucci did not intentionally giv currency to the belief that he originally discovered the country, it looks like it." Now, the first word of reproach against Vespucci was in a distant land by one Schoner, a German geographer, in 1533. The report arose just as it might to-day. Hearing the country, or part of it, constantly spoken of in familiar talk as America, when they came to honor the name of Vespucci by Latinizing it, how natural it was to call him Americus Vespuccius. Then, later, after all the great actors of that decade of discoveries were in their graves or dotage, a stranger, seeing the name applied to a vast new region, then becoming known for the first time as a new world, not Asia, assumes that the country was named after the man instead of the man after the country. The slight resemblance of the real name, given name, of Vespucci, to wit, Hemerigo, tends to giv currency to this blunder. Vespucci was never accused in his life of doing this, from the fact that no one ever dreamed then that, among half a dozen names given to the supposed Asiatic coast, such as New Spain, New Gallicia, Brazil, Mexico, and Amerique, the last one had been preposterously so called after the given name of a very private citizen. A monarch might thus be honored. Witness Maryland and Carolina, or Alberta, or Alaska, after Prince Alaska. But the naming of a country after a private and rather obscure citizen, and that, too, after his first name, was a thing unheard of. And when we see that the name, or part of it, is so common among the nativ names all around that coast, from Cundinamarca to Maricaybo and Itamerica, we need be at no loss for its origin. The syllables "meri" are as frequent there as the "itl," "etl," were among the Aztecs north and west.

"HOLT."

Theological Proof that Paine Did Not Recant.

No doubt you will laugh at the idea of getting proof out of a theological dictionary that Paine did not recant, yet here it is: "Unpardonable sin is the denial of the truths of the gospel, with an open and malicious rejection of it. The reason why this sin is never forgiven is not because of any want of sufficiency in the blood of Christ, nor in the pardoning mercy of God, but because those who commit it, never repent of it, but continue obstinate and malignant until death" (Buck's Theological Dictionary, p. 422, art. Sin).

Then, if Mr. Buck, D.D., was right, neither Paine or any other disbeliever ever recanted. It seems that Mr. Buck knew something of the pleasure that disbelievers obtained from their source of reasoning, for he says they "never repent of it." And my experience leads me to believe that they hav nothing to repent of either. They hav more joy and more pleasure in the world than those who believe in the hell theories. With them there is no selfish heaven to gain and no hell to shun. Their time and thought can be devoted to this world for the benefit of man. Why should they repent?

Colonel Ingersoll's Wit.

The Helena Independent's report of stories with which he introduced an after-dinner speech in Montana.

It is said that contentment is the greatest possible wealth, and I suppose that next to absolute contentment, and nearly exactly the same thing, is perfect self-satisfaction. [Laughter.] I think I hav found it here. [Laughter and applause.] It is said that an old minister in Kentucky, endeavoring to impress upon his hearers the beauty of the heaven they were about to go to, provided they joined his church [laughter], after exhausting all the superlativs of which he was master, wound up by saying: "Brethren and sisters, in short, it's a regular old Kentucky place." [Laughter.] I suppose you are expecting in another world simply another Montana.

A few years ago a fellow from Massachusetts was down in South Carolina, and as he walked along the street, after he had been there some time, there was an old fellow nailing a sign upon his house, "For Sail," and this Massachusetts fellow looked at the old man and said: "That isn't the way to spell sale." And the old fellow, with a great deal of contempt, turned to him and said:

"How long hav you lived in Charleston?'

"Well," he says, "I hav been here about a year."

"Well, young man," said the Charlestonian, "I was born here. I guess I know how to spell sale." [Loud laughter and applause.] There is nothing so beautiful as confidence in the place where you reside. [Laughter.]

They tell a story of Mrs. Jones, of Chicago, who visited Rome, and while there was shown some of the great marble masterpieces of the world, among others the Apollo Belvedere. They pointed it out to her as being the most perfect form of man that had ever been conceived by the brain of an artist; and the old woman walked all around it, looked at it from every point of view, and she says:

"That's the Apollo Belvedere, is it?"

"Yes."

"Well, giv me Jones." [Loud laughter and applause.]

I HAV seen heretics of the poorer sort,
Expectant of the rack from day to day,
To whom the fire was welcome, lying chained
In breathless dungeons, over steaming sewers,
Fed with rank bread that crawl'd upon the tongue
And putrid water every drop a worm,
Until they died of rotted limbs; and then
Cast on the dunghill naked, and become
Hideously alive again from head to heel,
Made even the carrion nosing mongrel vomit
With hate and horror. —Tennyson.

A Timely Suggestion.

We venture to publish the following extract from the letter of one of our old and valued stand-by's, as his idea seems to us an excellent one:

SACRAMENTO, CAL., June 2, 1891.

. . . I desire to see all Freethought lecturers in the field hav some little support from the Freethinking public, and I believe that the American Secular Union is the proper head for the dispensing of such help.

Now is the time to issue a call for such aid from all friends of the cause of Liberalism. Let us hav a general donation from all, especially from those that are able to giv.

I believe in making a grand effort to raise a fund for publishing and circulating Freethought literature through the hands of lecturers in the field. If the Union will call for donations and start a yearly guarantee list, I will pledge $50 per year as long as I am able to pay that amount.

Now, Miss Craddock, talk it up with the directors and proceed to business at once, and oblige a solid Freethinker.

R. BUTTERFIELD.

Dear friends, shall we not act upon the above sensible suggestion? The American Secular Union ought indeed to be the head center of Liberal work in the United States. Lecturers, newspapers, individual workers, ought to see the business wisdom—not to speak of the higher motivs of brotherhood—of coöperating with a society like the American Secular Union, upon whose broad platform all Liberals, of whatever ism, can find a footing. A bundle of fagots piled up with care and system in one fireplace will warm a roomful of people, where the same fagots lighted separately and carried about in the hands of individuals, lead at best a fitful, flickering life, warming only the individual hands which carry them.

Fellow-Liberals, which do you think is the better for the good of a shivering community: the isolated, flickering torch in the hands, or the huge bundle of fagots blazing away merrily on the hearthstone?

Let us hav subscriptions, as Mr. Butterfield suggests, to aid in circulating Liberal literature. We cannot print and pay postage without money. Send it along in large or small amounts.

IDA C. CRADDOCK,
Corr. Sec. American Secular Union.

Our London Letter.

Dr. Momerie's impeachment and condemnation of the tenets of the Church of England and the dogmas of Christianity were of so decided a nature that it is difficult to understand why he calls himself a Christian. A man who divests himself of all the belief still held orthodox cannot be very far removed from pure Atheism, notwithstanding he still claims to believe in a deity whom he cannot comprehend. Much that he said in his recent lecture may well be indorsed by the Secular party, and has been stated by them times out of number, from the platform and in their published works. If the doctor speaks with authority it is welcome news that the church is in imminent peril, and that it is in measurable distance of dissolution. He confesses the church has long ago lost all control over cultured people, and the laity is going up hill just as fast as the clergy is coming down. It has not only lost control over what he calls the cultured classes, but over all those of any class who possess any independent thinking power, and what influence it still possesses is only over the shop-keeping interests, who hav no thought of anything outside their own shops. Dr. Momerie's remark that "priests were the gentlemen who originally undertook to square the Gods for a consideration," excited the risible faculties of the audience, and showed his hearers were not very greatly shocked at what is clearly an Atheistic sentiment, and one, I fancy, that has been already used by Colonel Ingersoll. He went on to say that the doctrin of the atonement was immoral to the core, and a survival of the greatest abuses of earliest times. The doctrin of predestination was also a delusion, the doctrin of the trinity a blundering misconception of the original text, and the vulgar theory of the crucifixion was a contradiction of terms, and therefore a jargon and nonsense. The idea of hell was monstrous, and the Bible was full of contradictions. If Dr. Momerie has not thoroughly read up the Atheist's position, and has arrived at his conclusions without such assistance, his testimony is so much the more valuable.

A charge such as this coming from the midst of the orthodox will no doubt hav a considerable effect, more so than from an avowed Atheist, and each year will find the contributions to the various societies organized for the purpose of fleecing the faithful sheep a constantly diminishing quantity. The results of the May meetings are more and more disheartening to those most interested in them, and doleful faces are constantly met among the clergy. Special attractions are announced, but the interest in ecclesiastical matters is dwindling. The clergy are not bringing religious questions so much to the front; but the great card is now the anxiety displayed for the morality and secular well-being of the people. But these matters were not taken up until the laity had fully considered them, and so the church has again lost its chance of leadership. The Wesleyans are very greatly shocked at betting on horse-races, and think steps should be taken to put it down. Stock-exchange gambling is not condemned because so many brokers are men of keen religious sentiment and subscribe to the churches. One enterprising Wesleyan suggested that a Christian daily paper should be started, in which no gambling intelligence should be admitted, as he believed there was a very large constituency of readers who would prefer to read about Dr. Parker than the Alhambra ballet. What the ballet had to do with horse-racing he did not explain, but his brilliant idea was not accepted, and so it fell through.

Madam Blavatsky's death has apparently caused some little confusion in the Theosophical camp, and it appears there is no one competent to step into her shoes. The system has made but little headway here, and it would not be surprising if it speedily became extinct. The few crazy enthusiasts who form its members are quite likely to devote themselvs to some other equally absurd fad as readily as they flocked to this one.

Miss Phœbe Couzins.

When Mrs. Potter Palmer and others connived to depose the regularly elected secretary of the women managers of the World's Fair, the writer was not a whit surprised, having some knowledge of the lady in St. Louis, where Miss Phœbe Couzins had served with ability as United States marshal. Knowing something of her theological opinions, I was astonished to find her secretary of a board which opened its daily meetings with prayer and think that I expressed that surprise in THE TRUTH SEEKER. From what I had been led to believe of the brainy, brilliant secretary, I concluded she would not tolerate such conduct long without a protest. If my memory does not deceive me, I think Miss Couzins did protest, and made enemies of several of the "mothers in Israel," who profess to love their neighbors as themselvs.

That unpleasant denouement might hav eventually passed over, had she been willing to let an opportunity slip of scoring the Rev. Bishop Vincent, who, I believe, runs the Chautauqua circles.

Director-General Davis (otherwise Royal George), whose religious profession is Methodism and machine politics, is, as is usual with all of his class, particularly sensitiv against anyone who might venture a word against the right of the theologians to run things to suit themselvs. And, by writing the following article, I am satisfied George Davis determined to seal her doom. It is well worth perusal, especially as it is practically the basis and reason for the attempt at dismissing the author.

E. A. STEVENS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 31.—Editor of the Evening Post: I hav read with great interest the report in your paper to-day on the lectures of the Institute of Sacred Literature and beg the medium of your columns to correct a slight misapprehension of the Rev. Bishop Vincent to the status of woman in sacred lore.

It is extremely necessary if these gentlemen are to instruct the newly fledged student, or aspirant for sacerdotal honors in the right path of religious training, that the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, be taught to them, and that the teacher of divinity separate his prejudices from the facts of sacred history, and, in the noon-day of the nineteenth century, discontinue the attempt to measure woman's capacity or the limits of her sphere, by a garbled dissertation on "God's woman." If the reverend gentleman will tell us just when and where and how the creator took him into his especial confidence and directed him to inform the latter day saints that Deborah and Huldah and Miriam were not "God's women," but that the Rachels and Ruths and Marys were, we shall be more certain that the mantle of sacred oratory has fallen upon the right shoulders, and that a bishopric means consecration to the master's work, and not a sleek and self-satisfied perversion of biblical lore to suit the narrow limits of a selfish aggrandizement.

Miriam, saith sacred history, was a prophetess, chosen by the Lord to lead the children of Israel out of darkness into day; but the reverend bishop says she was not "God's woman," and therefore Exodus is wrong and the instructor in the sacred college right.

The fourth chapter of the Judges tells us that Deborah was a judge and law-giver over Israel for forty years, "the years," saith the scripture, "wherein the land had rest and peace;" but Deborah, according to Rev. Mr. Vincent, was not "God's woman." She found the Israelitish nation in a sorry plight and deplorable condition. The judges taking bribes, perverting judgment and turning after filthy lucre; "the highways and byways unoccupied, and travelers walked through byways;" no one seemed to be safe anywhere, the nation harassed for over twenty years by a great and mighty legion of King Jabin's army under the command of a bushwhacking captain named Sisera. In that direful emergency Deborah comes to the front, takes command of Barak's army, stations herself on Mount Tabor and proves so skillful a general in war that not a man of Jabin's army is left to tell the tale save Sisera, who gets down from his chariot of iron and flees for refuge to Jael's tent, and has his brains knocked out with a tenpenny nail and a hammer in the hands of a female adjutant of Deborah's.

Thus Deborah cleans out the whole outfit of her country's spoilers and returns to the nation to bring order and peace out of the demoralized chaos into which man's ruling plunged it; and yet, saith the reverend instructor of the sacred college to the callow youths who sit at his feet for biblical training, Deborah was not "God's woman." "Far from it."

But Ruth, whose peculiar methods of capturing a husband, would entitle her in our day and generation to be sent to a training school for reformed morals, is especially marked for the delectation of this divinity school, while Rachel, who kept a sheep ranch amidst her father's herdsmen, drawing the water while the men lazily browsed on the hillside, is another maiden dear to the sacred heart of Brother Vincent, whose long and unctuous career has been especially ministered unto by the female contingent of waterhaulers in the fold of his churches.

The Marys complete the trio of "God's women" whom Brother Vincent portrays for the fond adoration of the sacred assemblage of students.

I know not to which Mary he refers, but either of them is not a good punctuation for the reflected light of masculin admiration. If she was the patient, serving Martha's twin sister, it was said she was not given to domestic ministration for the elders, and had she dwelt in Brother Vincent's circuit yellow-legged chickens and creamy biscuits would not hav boosted him to the summit of a bishopric in the year of our Lord 1890.

If the one from whom Christ cast the seven devils the alabaster box of ointment would hav served the same purpose in a sacred college in the nineteenth century—its price set aside for the heathen, and this specimen of "God's woman," whom man previously had invested with seven devils shown to the door!

But enough! If these reverend gentlemen pose as teachers in sacred colleges to-day let them not inaugurate the experiment, by direct perversion of truth, either in the Old Testament or the New.

If Paul taught marriage and motherhood, he also emphasized the sacredness of a life devoted to high aims and lofty purposes. "She that marries doeth well," saith that noble expounder of truth, "but she who doth not marry doeth better." "She who marries serves her husband, but she that doth not marry," said Paul, "serves the Lord."

If Jeremy Taylor could return to our shores to-day he would not only find "that marriage was the nursery of heaven," but also that it served as the gateway to hell, judging from the hideous and terrible revelations in our divorce courts, and no one influence has contributed more fully to bring about the lowering of a high standard of marriage and this demoralization than the dry rot which has been preached from reverend lips for years to the untrained and unformed minds of the youth, leading them to regard marriage, per se, under any and all circumstances, as preferable to a life of singleness, even though consecrated to the noblest aims.

The admission of women as lay delegates to the Methodist conference evidently does not agree with Brother Vincent's mental digestion, and if the sacred college is to emphasize biblical lore in punctuating women as leaders and judges and generals, lo! the green fields and pastures fair of a bishopric will swing open, perchance, and Frances Willard or the Widow Van Cott get a nibble at the rich grazing.

PHŒBE W. COUZINS, of St. Louis.

Who Bids?

A poor old lady who has seen better days, but has been reduced by sickness and misfortune, has left her precious old Bible with me to sell that she may purchase something to relieve her sufferings.

It is a singular book, the largest Bible I ever saw; was printed in 1765; is 16 inches long, 10 inches wide, and 4½ inches thick; contains many pictures, and is entitled "The Christian's Complete Family Bible." Though this book pretends to be written by inspiration of a supreme being to point out a way so plain that a man though a fool need not err therein, from one to six or more inches of every page is used to explain the text above. Though it professes to be the work of inspiration, every chapter proves it to be a fraud—the work of different men, to which, and its wrathful angry God, each writer gave a patch of his own character. It has done more harm than any other book ever written, having been the means of putting to death millions of people by excruciating torture; and by and by when all the people get their mental eyes open and free from the scales and beams of superstition, and hav learned to think enough to understand what they read, the great wonder of the world will be how such a vile book with all its anger, wrath, cruelty, and bloody crimes could ever hav been palmed off on rational beings, even by crafty priests, as the word of a God. Now, this book is for sale to the highest bidder, and here, my dear Christian brethren, you hav an opportunity to show your Christian love and benevolence to this poor sister. Now for a bid. Who speaks first. Brother Talmage, what say you? How much do you bid? I think the Apocrypha contains chapters you hav never read. Joseph Cook, how much do you bid? How much love hav you for this suffering sister? How much respect for your holy book when it takes its just place on the auction-block where it has in times past placed so many millions of human slaves? Send in your bids and at once prove your respect for your poor sister and your precious book. Brother Wanamaker, how much do you bid?

Vineland, N. J. JEREMIAH HACKER.

Thought as Affecting the Drink Habit.

Prepared for the Independent by the late Prentice Mulford, just before his death.

The habit of using artificial stimulants comes from exhaustion. Up to the age of twelve or thirteen we do not feel any need of a stimulant. Our exhaustion comes later on when we get wrapped up in our occupations, and acquire the bad habit of carrying the mind ahead of the body. A person, too, who livs among exhausted people, will, before they know it, take on their exhausted conditions of mind. A strong girl employed in a factory, with weaker girls around her who suffer from the hard work, will herself suffer, although she herself may be better able to bear the strain. This exhaustion, brought about by what we call civilization, leads to the use of stimulants. Exhaustion comes also from wasting your force by letting your mind run ahead of your body, to the place you are hurrying to, or the task you are going to perform. You are full of hurry and impatience, and attempt to crowd the doing of too many things in an hour or a day. The hurried, impatient mood runs its wire of disorderly thought and slovenly act straight through from one act to another, and leaves its traces and damage on all. Every impatient act, no matter how trivial, costs an unprofitable outlay of force or thought. Every impatient act is an act without a plan. Exhaustion, then, caused in this way—overwork, over-ambition, hurry, the waste of thought or mental force which weakens the body—leads men to the use of intoxicants. It is not necessary to speak of minor social causes, though it may be said that a man is mentally affected by the social atmosphere which he is in. Go among inebriates or drinking men and you will find that unseen agencies are at work leading you to alcoholic excess. If your associates are temperate and refined, you will be equally affected by their temperance and refinement.

I believe that the appetite for liquor can be controled through the exercise of a certain mental law within the reach of all; that is the law of silent demand. That is the power which one mind possesses of silently throwing its thought, or desire, or wish, or expectation, into another mind, and making such mind wish, desire, think, and act in accordance with the other's wish. The man who drinks will crave liquor the more if much in the society of those who drink. He will feel the craving less if much in the society of the temperate and self-controled. No word and argument, for or against the use of liquor, need be made, in these cases, to increase or lessen such craving. It comes of the silent action of mind upon mind.

If, in your own mind, you will say in thought that you do not expect a friend afflicted with this habit to giv way to it, he will, through the force of your mind acting on his own, be strengthened to resist the temptation. If you will, in mind, always positivly see him as temperate and self-governed, he will receive from you the force, in thought, of temperance and self-government. If several unite in so sending him this thought, and so seeing him in thought, they giv him a proportionally stronger force to resist the uncontrolable appetite, they are, then, really praying for him, and praying in the strongest way. The barkeeper is, in many cases, the most thoroughly self-controled man in the saloon. He may be always in the midst of liquor selling and drinking, but has no tendency to indulge to excess. No intemperate barkeeper can retain his position. His employer expects him to be temperate. The action of the employer's mind on the employee is one powerful agency in keeping him temperate. The employee feels the employer's thought. He has that part of the employer's mind which expects, and demands, that he shall keep sober, thrown into his own mind, and acts in accordance with such mind.

If we, in our minds, always see or image a man as a drunkard, we are sending him a current of thought which will aid the more to keep him intemperate. We are helping him to keep before him the image of himself as a drunkard. We must not in our mind say, "I wish he would control himself," and almost in the same thought say: "I expect, or I am afraid, he will get drunk the next chance he gets." In so doing we increase those chances.

But, it may be asked: "Is not the man a drunkard? Where is the use of saying he is temperate when he is not, or of seeing him in our minds as temperate when he is not?" The real man in this case is not a drunkard. The real man is what that man is in his highest aspiration or desire, and it matters not how low or degraded is the material condition of any human being, there remains still in that individual the desire to be something better, or the desire to rid himself of an appetite or habit which brings him pain. The real person is the spiritual man or woman. In him or her there is always the spark of aspiration; or, in other words, the desire for improvement, although it may be very feebly expressed. It is only the material part of man that is in the gutter. With him in our thought, we hav nothing to do. We refuse in mind to see him. We only see in mind that man out of the gutter, erect, clothed, self-controled, and in his right and highest mind. When we so see him we are sending him that kind of thought and presenting to him the ideal of himself as a true man.

No thought cuts deeper to the heart of an intemperate person than the feeling, on his part, that his friends do not, in their minds, trust him in the use of liquor. The feeling that the bottle is put out of sight because he enters the room, has made many a man rush from that room or place and drink to excess. This because a force or thought has entered into him, telling him that he is weak, untrustworthy, and relativly worthless. At present too many are handling this gigantic, unseen power of thought to keep the drunkard and criminal down, by always seeing him as a drunkard or criminal, and never forgetting that he has been one.

A man should never be spoken or thought of as a "reformed drunkard." To help keep him self-controled, we need to forget that he has ever been a drunkard. We hav nothing whatever in our minds to do with him as a drunkard. We need to bury the former drunkard; bury him so deep in forgetfulness that he can never be dug up again. Temperance lecturers create a morbid and unhealthy appetite in the hearer by talking drunkenness a whole evening. In the same way, the elaborate accounts of executions sometimes when read by the small boy induce him to hang and torture the cat in a spirit of imitation. Is a man made the less of an inebriate from knowing that he is in an "Inebriate's Home," or an institution called by any name to remind him continually of an old fault and an old self, which he needs to bury and forget? We hav in our minds nothing to do with the drunkard of yesterday. Bury him. Forget him. In our thought he is to-day a temperate, self-controled man. In our mind we expect and demand him so to be. In his own mind he must also hold himself as temperate and self-controled. We are then praying, and he is praying with us in concert, and in the right way.

If the family at the breakfast table are each in thought saying of the son, whose weakness lies in liquor: "I expect he'll go drinking again to-day. I fear he'll go tippling again with his companions," they are making him feel depressed, weak, untrustworthy, and, consequently, all the more liable to resort to drink for the sake of temporary stimulation. They should say in thought: "He is not going into any excess. He can govern himself. He will govern himself." These critics who may pride themselvs on being temperate as regards the use of liquor, may be themselvs very intemperate as regards control of temper or mood, or some other physical appetite. They do not know and cannot realize the terrible craving coming not only from a morbid appetite for stimulant, but from a body ignorantly and unconsciously exhausted of its vitality.

If yours is the uncontrolable appetite for liquor, say in your mind not only, "I will conquer this appetite," but "I hav conquered it. It is conquered." Then your real self or spirit has taken a positiv, decided hold in this matter. The material, the body, must follow in time. But when your spirit was saying, "It's no use. I can't conquer this appetite. It will ruin me in time," the material part of you was "led of the spirit" in the wrong direction. The material appetite may at times get the best of the spirit's aspirations. Yet every time you so fail you are taking a stronger hold to control yourself, providing in mind you always say, "I hav conquered. I am determined to conquer." The periods between your relapses will grow longer and longer. You will find the appetite gradually decreasing. The cure will be gradual but sure. All permanent cures must be gradual.

I may say that I used liquor immoderately for more than thirty years. I suffered thereby in mind, body, and purse. I became well acquainted with the torments that beset the victim of this excess. This uncontrolable appetite has been for several years cured and gotten rid of, by the means I hav just described. I suffer from no relapses, though I do not profess total abstinence. I do not believe in the hereditary theory, but I think people unconsciously cultivate conditions of mind through their associations, which amount to the same thing. If a person changes his condition of mind he will change the condition of his body as well. I can testify to the truth of this fact from my own personal experience; I am different from what I was ten years ago, and hav no desire to go into any excess whatever.

A Sample Catholic Institution.

The attorney for Miss Anna Amoe put a good deal of solid truth about church reformatory institutions into his speech in her defense in the circuit court of Troy, N. Y. Miss Amoe was committed to the "House of the Good Shepherd" by a Catholic magistrate, who neglected to file the commitment as required by law, and she sued the institution for damages for false imprisonment. It came out, also, during the trial that other girls had been sent to the place without legal form. Miss Amoe's lawyer said:

"Was Annie Amoe taken into that institution for sweet charity's sake? When the superior admitted on the stand that the reason why the commitments were signed by a magistrate was that the institution might charge the county of Renssalaer for the board of the persons committed, did it occur to the jury that that was for sweet charity's sake? They gave Annie Amoe a pair of slippers, underclothes, a dress, and a hat. What did they get from her? Twelve hours of hard labor and her board paid by the county; they obtained the servitude of a slave. What did she get in return? Barred doors, not even the right to look out of a window on God's bright day. When the mighty arm of the law interposed and demanded that she be brought into court they released her. They were afraid to go into court and answer to the demands of the court. Is this the work of the Good Shepherd? This penal institution, this state prison, this state factory—reforming fallen women by making convicts of them! It cannot be done. The institution knew that the commitment was false on its face. The institution knew that Annie Amoe was eighteen years old and upward. And they knew that she could not be committed unless under sixteen years old. Why did Mr. Ryan go before the police magistrate and secure a commitment reciting that Annie Amoe had been brought before him and duly committed, after ascertaining that she was apparently under sixteen years old? The paper was necessary that the institution might charge for her board. The institution had free labor and manufactured goods in competition with the products of the honest, industrious girls of the community, and besides this the institution was paid for the support of those employed within its walls. The jury should award substantial damages to teach the defendants that this is a free country, and no one can, without process of law, be deprived of personal liberty."

Otto Wettstein's View of the God Idea.

From the Moralist.

In concluding my prolog I would take occasion to observe that during my flights through the interminable vistas of space I hav failed to discover the least vestige of a "supreme grand master" supervising with providential care and wisdom the affairs of nature, or manifesting any concern for her works, and I am therefore forced to the conclusion that nature is all-sufficient in herself and that to add a creator to the universe complicates mysteries instead of lessening them. The worshiping of an intelligence outside of and superior to that which is immanent in nature, I therefore regard as the monster delusion of our race, conceived in ignorance and nurtured by a designing priesthood for the sole purpose of self-aggrandizement.

A Belief Not Likely to be Realized.

From the Catholic Union and Times.

The Infidel TRUTH SEEKER is having great fun these days anent the vagaries, contentions, and confusion that reign among the Protestant brethren. The organ of unbelief chuckles over the expected result, hoping doubtless that a large army of recruits will come to its anti-Christian ranks from the disrupted churches. We hav always contended that for the thoughtful logical mind there is nothing left in chaotic Protestantism but Infidel negation or the fixed authoritativ teaching of the Catholic church. And we believe that by far the larger portion of the Protestant wreckage will drift to the church.

Lectures and Meetings.

JUNE 19th, Mr. Thomas J. Sanford will speak at the Manhattan Liberal Club, 220 East 15th street, this city. His subject is "The People's Rent."

S. P. PUTNAM will lecture in Emerson Hall, 45 East Randolph street, Chicago, on Sunday afternoon and evening, June 28th. We hope every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER in that city will be in attendance.

W. F. JAMIESON is now making lecture engagements to begin October 1st, and, in order to save travel, he invites correspondence with Liberals in Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, and Missouri for lectures every evening and twice Sundays during October, November, December. Address Box 366, Des Moines, Ia.

THERE will be a free lecture under the auspices of the Newark Liberal League, at Paterson, on Sunday next, June 21st. Miss Ada Campbell, the celebrated Australian lecturess, will address the meeting. Subject, "The Australian Ballot." All Liberals in the vicinity are cordially invited, the object being the formation of a branch of the Liberal League in Paterson.

J. E. REMSBURG has now lectured in forty-five states, territories, and provinces, and in seven hundred different cities and towns, as follows: Kansas, 88; Illinois, 74; Ohio, 68; Texas, 63; Iowa, 61; Nebraska, 47; New York, 43; Missouri, 41; Indiana, 32; Pennsylvania, 31; Michigan, 25; Minnesota, 19; California, 18; Wisconsin, 14; North Dakota, 6; South Dakota, 6; Colorado, 6; Connecticut, 6; Ontario, 5; Oregon, 5; Florida, 4; Utah, 4; Washington, 4; Arkansas, 3; New Jersey, 3; Louisiana, 2; Alabama, 2; Tennessee, 2; Rhode Island, 2; Massachusetts, 2; Kentucky, 1; Maryland, 1; Virginia, 1; West Virginia, 1; North Carolina, 1; South Carolina, 1; Georgia, 1; Mississippi; Wyoming, 1; Idaho, 1; New Mexico, 1; Oklahoma, 1; Indian Territory, 1; Quebec, 1; British Columbia, 1. Mr. Remsburg has visited many of these places from two to six times, and to accomplish this work he has had to travel a distance of one hundred and fifty thousand miles. He has lectured to nearly half a million people, and numbers among his personal acquaintances over twenty thousand Freethinkers.

ATTEMPTS to harmonize the gospels and to prove the inspiration of writings which contain manifest errors and contradictions hav gone the way of Buckland's proof of a universal deluge, and of Hugh Miller's attempt to reconcile Noah's ark and the Genesis account of creation with the facts of geology and astronomy. Not an inch of ground that has been conquered by science has ever been re-conquered by theology.—S. Laing.

Communications.

Recent Gems from the Religious Press.

The Independent, in a spirit of prophecy which the subsequent action of the Union Seminary has proved to be brilliantly erroneous, says: "We are inclined to believe that the decision of the directors will be loyal acquiescence." Loyal to what? To the supreme court of the Presbyterian church, says the Independent.

Is it not a shameful fact that the domain of man's thought must hav a court to determin its scope, to rebuke its natural inquiries? Is it not like demanding of nature a reversal of its eternal law? As well may the general assembly of the Presbyterian church meet at Niagara falls and demand of the waters to cease falling as to issue their puny edict against the freedom of human thought. It will be swept aside with contemptuous scorn along with the old rotten luggage of the ages—Bibles, spooks, saviors, Gods, and the "make-up" of theatrical religion. The louder the yells against the inroads of liberated thought, the swifter will be its advance. Many, like Othello, will be left with their "occupation gone," but there are vast untrodden fields of human industry where clerical drones can prove themselvs of value to the world.

The Interior (Pres.) says:

The assembly put an end to conference with the Episcopalians with a view to organic unity.

Of course it did. How in the name of all that is wonderful can there ever be a complete unity of sects and opinions as to what is meant by the alleged revelation from God? If men were not blinded by the effects of early education and religious bigotry, they could see at once that the mere existence of a reasonable doubt as to the meaning of a single paragraph in the Bible forever divorces its author from any participation in the creation of a perfect universe. There is no halting doubt as to what nature teaches man; its lessons are always provable through the medium of existing facts.

We need no translators; she speaks a universal language. The only trouble is, men are heedless of loving admonitions, spoken through numberless analogies.

The poet Bryant beautifully expresses the idea: "To him who in the love of nature hol*ds communion* with her visible forms she speaks a various language." Men must turn from the old musty parchments of the past, and in the bright and glowing pages of the ever open book of nature find a chart and guide, unerring and complete, that shall lead them on to universal unity and brotherly love. The film that has obscured the eyes of humanity is lifting and will soon pass away, revealing to each one of us the unstinted prodigality of "the love of nature in her visible forms," and which conveys the lesson that to our brother man we owe the same measure of unselfish love.

The all-absorbing question of Dr. Briggs and the Presbyterian general assembly seems to be the leading topic of discussion in most of the religious weeklies of the past week. It is notable that there is but little variance in the measure of Dr. Briggs's condemnation, and a monotonous sameness in the eulogies of the action of the assembly as being for the good of the church.

Not a word as to the truthfulness of his higher criticism; it is enough that he has refused to swallow the whole Bible as it is, errors, immoralities, and absurdities all intact—that he is (in point of fact) kicked out of the church and with a vim and force that smacks of the headsman of former years. The Congregationalist says:

It was a most emphatic declaration of a great church against any and every question raised concerning the divine and final authority of the Bible as the word of God.

Just so! For once we hav a clean-cut piece of truth from a religious writer, for which we return thanks. If the discouraged reformer and seeker after truth would find the cause of the laggard advancement of justice and love for humanity, he will discover it in the intolerant and despotic edict of the Presbyterian general assembly. Not in all the histories of ancient despotism, not in all the slavery that has cursed the earth, do we find a more repulsiv, arrogant, and presumptuous assumption of the mental slavery of the people than is contained in the quoted paragraph above. Not a word will be heard, not a question considered, not a doubt entertained, but the fiat has gone forth that reason shall be throttled and superstition reign. We do not believe the rank and file of the supporters of the church will relish this despotic dominion over their thought, and a freeman's right to express it. We do not believe that they will calmly yield up their brains to the custody of the general assembly, and let the moderator dole it out to them, saturated with fiendish orthodoxy. This is America, and the year is 1891, but the assembly seems to labor under the delusion that this is the third century, and that we are living in Nice, and the old murderer Constantine is an absolute monarch over us.

The Examiner (Baptist) says:

The essential truths of Christianity hav nothing to fear from being examined and talked about. On the contrary, the better they are known the more they will commend themselvs to the minds of men. Baptists certainly hav no cause for fear over the revision of creeds and the recasting of articles.

This reminds us of an unfortunate man and his son who were confronted by a pack of wolves. On seeing them the father managed to falter out, "Don't be afraid, Johnny; they don't eat our meat." Nevertheless Johnny and his father were quickly disposed of by the devouring wolves.

We sympathize deeply with our Baptist brother and would advise him not to speak too loud and to keep off the brushwood while going through the forest or he may meet the fate of poor Johnny and his father. It might be better for him to "lay low" and let the other creeds fight it out, but if he keeps on talking in a loud tone about "the superhuman character of the Bible, its absolute freedom from moral and doctrinal error," he will find a pack of the wolves of reason on his trail in short order and saltpeter won't save him. By following our kindly advice he will at least be reprieved until the other creeds are devoured, which will afford him time to get down off his perch and run for cover. We can appreciate the terrible position of the Baptists. They are like the occupants of one of many lifeboats, the most of which they hav seen swamped before their very eyes, and they wait with breathless terror the shipwreck of their own bark of superstition. Be not afraid; ye shall emerge from this second baptism into the knowledge of absolute and provable truth which will need no creeds, translators, nor higher criticism scholars for its interpretation.

The Standard (Baptist, Chicago) says:

Dr. Harper does not belong to the destructiv school of critics, but to the constructiv wing. He holds not merely that the Bible contains the word of God, but that it is the word of God. He believes that such errors and discrepancies as the scriptures seem to contain are in part due to errors in the translation, and in part to errors in the original manuscript; but every such error, he holds, is chargeable to the human means by which the revelations hav come to us.

These words are quoted from an interview with Rev. E. T. Gates, who is in close relations with Dr. Harper. They are in flat contradiction to his published lecture recently delivered, in which the doctor, alluding to the Bible, said "it was the best that God could make, and if he could hav made a better one he would hav done so." There is no shifting of responsibility for errors to the "human means" in this declaration. To a God who is creating worlds faultlessly perfect with much less effort (as we are told) than a child exerts in blowing soap-bubbles in the air, to a God with a power that renders all things possible to him, it certainly seems as if, had he ever had occasion to speak to man, he could hav done so without making so horrible a botch of it, as is revealed in his alleged "word." It is no excuse for such a God to lay the blame on the translators, for they, conjunctivly with the "word," are his own alleged creation, and we must not insult his conceded omniscience by claiming for him ignorance of their unfitness to record his "word." Who then is to blame for the errors? Manifestly God himself; and being a God who makes mistakes, he certainly had no hand in "creating" a perfect universe. We hav a well-grounded suspicion that this Biblic God is a lineal offspring of the heathen gods (embalmed in collegiate lore) and is the last of his race. He is slowly but surely following in the wake of his ancestors, and like the ebbing light of the dying day is becoming dimmer and fainter until he finally fades into the darkness of eternal oblivion. Quisquis ubique habitat, maxime nusquam habitat.

WM. ALLEN SMITH.

New Theory of Cure for Consumption and Other Forms of Disease.

This communication more properly belongs to a medical journal. But as it is devoted to the promulgation of hygienic heresy, and as medical journals are supposed to be run mainly for the purpose of stamping out new and "irregular" truth, it would, after all, be quite out of place in their columns, even if admitted.

The glorious old TRUTH SEEKER appears to be pretty nearly the only periodical in existence without ism, hobby, idol, God, or prejudice, and that is unconditionally committed to truth, naked or otherwise; and as hygiene is unquestionably the most important subject next to liberty, it is preëminently fitting that I should seek its (often we think, too) generous hospitality.

The medical, like the clerical, profession, stands pledged against the discovery and application of any new truth not in line with its established theories. The prejudices of one profession are as deep, as narrow, and as bitter as are those of the other. A diploma of college graduation in either profession is a certificate of moral castration. To be orthodox is to be as incapable of generating a new idea as the eunuch is of begetting offspring. The soil of an orthodox brain is steril—barren.

The ear of the educated orthodox is deaf to the faint-whispering voice of nature. He cannot, he will not, listen. Why should he? He knows it all already. Nature is not his alma mater. He does not recognize her school as "regular." Better let the patient die or the sinner be damned rather than be saved by any other remedy than his. The only door to salvation is through his system. That is the embodiment of all truth. He who seeks to enter by any other door is a thief and a robber.

Dr. Koch's wretched attempt to discover a universal cure for consumption is a sample of orthodox progress and discovery. The world owes nothing to orthodoxy. Neither microscope nor telescope can giv sight to its purblind eyes. It has never discovered anything but methods of torture and it never will. Heterodoxy has done it all.

Reclining as a sucking babe upon nature's ample breast, or sitting humbly and low at her feet as a pupil and recognizing her as the only source of light and truth, the writer has received some impressions or ideas with reference to the subject of disease and cure which he feels impelled to speak about to his fellow-men. Not being able to formulate a system of treatment myself, my hope is that this may meet the eye and enlist the conviction of some free and independent physician who will make a practical and experimental application of the principle outlined and report success in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

There is a sentence found in that queer old scrapbook that Dr. Briggs and his inquisitors are wrangling about so bitterly that very tritely expresses the truth upon which I would rear my new system of cure: "Except ye become as a little child ye can in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven." I do not care who said it. That makes no difference. The question is, is it in any sense true?

The Spiritualists hav always claimed that Jesus of Nazareth was a medium, a healer, a mind-reader, a diviner of truth, a discerner and interpreter of nature. That he was a bitter hater of the theologians and all the pious gang of sniveling scoundrels who made up the orthodox church of his day th re is not a particle of doubt. He was the Bob Ingersoll of that day, and if Buddhism is true he may be the Bob Ingersoll of this day also. Anyhow, like Bruno, Galileo, and other martyrs who suffered at the hands of the saintly devils, he belongs to us Infidels instead of to the "church," and we ought to formally install him in our calendar of saints.

To be healed of disease, moral or physical, implies a regenerativ process, a new birth as it were; the going back into the arms of nature like a weak and helpless infant.

When a person has violated the laws of nature in any way and morbid conditions hav set in and increased until the functions of self-sustaining life can no longer be carried on, what is nature's first step in restorativ treatment? She makes him "sick." She puts him to bed, weak and relaxed, like a babe. She cannot repair him without. He must be broken up and mellowed like summer fallow.

Our bodily conditions are continually changing. As if from a lack of vital energy the various organs and parts are visited in turn with greater or less extremes of torpidity and activity. The center of nerve sensation, naturally in the stomach, may be shifted to other parts by force of circumstances. When morbid conditions are of long standing serious organic impairments are sure to follow, as in the case of consumption. The delicate nerve sensation and action which belongs to the stomach has gone to the lungs and left nothing but muscular action behind. The nerves, whose office is to carry on the work of nutrition, are torpid and dead, and can no more perform their functions than mittened fingers can pick up types or pins. The muscular action of the stomach is vigorous but the nerve action is feeble. Too much of one and not enough of the other. The consumptiv's muscular system has robbed his nervous system of its vitality and left it to die by starvation. His stomach may be full of the most nutritious food but the nerves are too dead to assimilate and secrete it. He dies by starvation, though generally a hearty eater to the very last.

The consumptiv's strange disinclination to comply with nature's first condition of cure—that is, to go to bed—is almost as marked as the dislike for water in hydrophobia. The very thing he needs most and the lack of which has caused his present condition is the very thing he seems to hate. This may be the effect of mental causes. What he needs first is mental treatment—that is, he must hav his condition and the only method of restoration so intelligently explained to him as to convict him thoroughly of its truth and cause him to yield a willing and hearty coöperation with the treatment. The false beliefs and morbid conditions of the patient's mind must be removed. Health of mind is a condition precedent to health of body. The success of even correct hygienic treatment depends largely upon the mind of the patient. Confidence in the doctor and in the medicin is in a majority of cases the real basis of cure, the drugs administered probably doing more harm than good.

There are various ways by which the nervous system of a consumptiv may be shocked, aroused, or quickened, and restored to the delicate sensitivness and natural equilibrium of infancy. I hardly know which is best. It can be accomplished by sweating, by hot baths, by calomel, and by other agencies, but one thing certain, the breaking up must be thorough and complete. The patient must absolutely become as a little child. He must be born again, so to speak. He must retrace his wayward steps and go back to the point of divergence from the true path. He must lay a new foundation for a superstructure of correct habits. He must begin life anew.

And here is where my theory of cure differs radically from that of the schools. Believing disease to be an entity, their theory is to cure one disease by causing another, a superstition derived from the ancient idea that disease was an evil spirit, to be routed by force of arms. It is to the interest of the medical profession to complicate the subject to the utmost degree, and to keep the people as ignorant as possible. Not satisfied with a hundred diseases, they are inventing new ones every day. They would like to hav a thousand, with an equal number of treatments and drug preparations.

Pretty much, if not all, of these different so-called diseases arise from a common cause. They are merely the different symptoms or effects produced by—what? The quack will tell you, "The blood—doctor that." Of course the blood is wrong, but that is an effect, and it is folly to tinker at effects. The cause back of all is a lack of vital force, functional derangement, morbid chronic conditions, like the ruts and gullies and hard irregular surfaces of a "summer fallow." The remedy is the breaking up, the plowing, harrowing, and mellowing process, the coming back to infancy, to nature, to an equilibrium.

There are vital tides which ebb and flow, whose action helps to keep us in tune with nature. There is a certain periodicity in our bodies in health by whose unconscious action we come around home to nature at intervals of greater or less duration according to circumstances, and are restored to vital unity and harmony with her. We should carefully discern and so order our habits of life as to promote this periodicity; for upon its constant action and ever-changing conditions depends our health. It is a coming back every week or two, or a month at most, into vital rapport with nature, getting our nerve sensations quickened, our secretory and excretory function set right, and adding fresh brightness and sweetness to life. It is like the alternations of night and day, of cloud and sunshine. The failure of this periodicity is the beginning of morbid conditions and chronic ill health.

Remedies or treatments which fall short of a thorough breaking up of morbid conditions do no more good than sowing seed on the hard surface of a road-track. If nature says, in acts, that a man must be made weak, relaxed, and sick before she can do her work of elimination and repair, that settles it. She built the machine and ought to know. Her methods should be our methods. Weakness and sickness, then, are for a purpose. They are remedial agents—to be hailed as a blessing and co-operated with instead of regarded as an enemy, to be "cured" as quickly as possible. Nature generally has her way and takes her time, though the doctor invariably works directly against her. She has to repair the damaged machine and fight the doctor and his treatment at the same time. If she cures the patient in spite of the doctor, he gets the credit and pay, which are not his by right.

Nature's processes are slow. In the breaking-up process she cannot, in a day, a week, or a month, re-animate organs and parts and restore them to life that hav been practically dead for years. But giv her plenty of time and supply the proper nutrition, and she will work wonders. After years of sinning a good job of regeneration involves a sacrifice of time, if not of dignity and money. Politics, business, theology—everything must be thrown aside as of trifling importance in comparison with the matter in hand. What is worth doing at all is worth doing well. Haste always makes poor work.

The patient, being reduced to practical infancy, should be put on infant diet—liquid food, principally milk, with but little solids. The more liquid the consumptiv patient can be made to appropriate the better. It should be taken into the stomach slowly, imitating as near as practicable the infant's manner of feeding. The Turkish ladies take on their enormous flesh by a suction, milk diet.

Thirty-three years ago I was filling a government hay contract on the O-ka-ta in New Mexico. Our Mexican hands had been telling a wonderful story about a dead man who had come to life at a sheep ranch about twelve miles down on Red river; and so one Sunday Charley Spangler, my partner, and I mounted our horses and rode there. We found the man, and a fatter, grosser, hairier, healthier specimen of the genus homo we had rarely met before. He told us the facts which had given rise to the story. He was a printer by the name of Atwood or Atwell. He had been very low with consumption, and when his physician told him he had only two months to liv, he started to find his father in Albuquerque. After riding seventy five miles a day for two days on the overland mail stage, he was left for burial, as good as dead, at this camp of sheep-herders. In the herd of two thousand sheep which was under the care of this family of Mexicans there were about two hundred goats. Upon the milk, curd, and whey from these goats the herders subsisted almost entirely. And this was the diet which had transformed a sack of almost lifeless bones into a rugged piece of humanity.

From that day to this, I hav been pondering and dreaming about this problem of the ages—the problem that the world has so long been seeking to solve—a cure for consumption.

Sometimes I dare to indulge the hope that I hav found it—picked it up from under the very feet of the millions of educated physicians who hav been hunting for it. If I hav not found it, then I hav only failed as hundreds of "learned" men hav done before.

When Dr. Koch had laid his "regular," microscopical, lymphatic egg, the whole world of "regulars" cackled and went to setting on it. But it wouldn't hatch. Like all orthodox eggs it was addled.

There is much more that I might say, with profit possibly to some; but this article is already too long. Whatever its value as a contribution to the world's stock of speculations and theories, and time will tell as to that, I dedicate it to the good fellows (my brothers and sisters) who make up THE TRUTH SEEKER family.

The Fight On in Georgia.

Ex-Senator Warren Smith, from Tennessee, came to Dahlonega a few months since to inspect some mining property. Being an out-spoken Infidel, he soon incurred the displeasure of the pious devotees of the church. The following notices from the local papers explain themselvs:

Ex Senator Warren Smith's lecture on last Sunday evening was well attended. Although the majority of those present differed from the speaker in religious opinions, yet everybody seemed interested in his bold, original utterances He took the ground that the theological idea of evil was false and erroneous, because it impeached the goodness, wisdom, and power of the Infinit. God with infinit goodness to prompt, infinit wisdom to direct, and infinit power to execute, can not make any mistakes. To say that conditions adverse to good found lodgment in a universe presided over by omnipotence, is an idea fostered by ignorance and discreditable to the intellectual and moral status of the age.

The speaker then offered some clear and philosophical reasons to prove that evil was in harmony with the divine economy, and necessary to the development of good.

After the close of the lecture, several perplexing questions were asked, and the answers, so readily and appropriately given, proved the speaker's fund of information covered a wide and diversified range of thought. His knowledge of ecclesiastical history and the Bible would eminently qualify him to preach the gospel; but he is "spoiled"—irredeemably spoiled by the acceptance of philosophical ideas that are at variance with Christian theology. Long ago he should hav read and profited by Paul's timely admonition to his brother Colossians: "Beware lest any man spoil you with philosophy." There is no doubt that Brother Smith is incurably spoiled.

WARREN SMITH'S REPLY TO "CITIZEN."

EDITOR NUGGET: In a recent issue of the Signal appeared an article over the name of "Citizen" that is so antediluvian, narrow-minded, and proscriptiv in sentiment that I feel it should not go unrebuked.

This writer starts out with the statement that the N. G. A. College is chartered with the "express provision that the Bible and its teachings should be observed in the school." To start with, we pronounce this statement false and utterly devoid of truth, as neither the "Bible" or its "teachings" are mentioned in the charter or its amendments. The question now is, why did this pious devotee of a man-degrading theology perpetrate a palpable falsehood in the first sentence of his article? The reason is obvious, as he has illustrious examples to justify him. Paul in Rom. iii confesses himself a liar, and justifies himself in the following language: "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory why am I also judged as a sinner?" Eusebius, one of the early church fathers and distinguished ecclesiastical historians, heads the thirty-second chapter of his twelfth book of evangelical preparation with these words: "How far it is good to use falsehood as a medicin for the benefit of those who require to be deceived?" and then writes a score of pages to prove it is right to lie and deceive when the glory of God and the advancement of the church require it. But a few months ago the New York Sun branded the Rev. De Witt Talmage as an unmitigated liar and he never resented it. Thus do we find that "Citizen" has standard Christian examples in the prevarication business, and on this ground he no doubt feels a sweet sense of consolation. Then there is another reason for Christian violation of the moral law, and that is that "Jesus paid it all." This fact givs them special license to sin; for are not we constantly reminded from the Bible and pulpit that "righteousness is but as filth and rags," and the "greater the sin the greater the mercy," and "while the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return?" This is one reason why our penitentiaries are filled exclusivly with Bible believers, and that the colony in Canada consisting of over one thousand forgers and defaulters are, without a single exception, prominent members of the church and officials of the Sunday-schools.

Christians hav no more right to introduce Bible instruction in colleges and schools supported by general taxation, than the Jew has to introduce his Talmud, or the Infidel the works of Thomas Paine; and when they do, they violate the constitutional right of every Jew and Agnostic in the state who pay taxes for public school purposes.

"Citizen" is deeply exercised over the fact that the young men and women coming here may imbibe some of the doctrins of an Infidel who is in Dahlonega giving free lectures. Well, we don't think a little Infidel principle would be detrimental to their future moral character. Sam Jones, in a sermon preached in Chicago on March 3, 1886, said: "Nine gamblers out of ten are raised in Christian families, and trained in Christian Sunday-schools." It would be a poor Infidel family that could not make a better showing than that.

But that there is real consolation in the Bible for a certain class I admit.

The drunkard derives an exquisit pleasure from reading passages in the blessed book like the following:

"Giv strong drink to him who is ready to perish and wine to those who are heavy-hearted, and let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more" (Prov. xxvi, 6, 7).

"Drink thy wine with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy works" (Eccl. ix, 7)

"Drink! yea, drink abundantly, oh, believers" (Sol. Song, v, 1)

"Drink no longer water, but take wine for your stomach's sake" (Paul to Timothy)

These passages, with many others, are very consoling to the unfortunate victim of strong drink, and encourage him in his downward career. We are proud to say that in the broad range of Infidel literature, not one word can be found to encourage or uphold the vile curse of intemperance. The libertin likewise derives great consolation from the Bible. When he reads that delectable little Sunday-school story about "Good Old Lot" getting beastly drunk and despoiling the innocence of both his daughters, it no doubt has a tendency to inspire him with emotions so pure, refined, and elevated that he feels near akin to the blessed angels. Then the murderer is consoled by learning that David, the sacred Psalmist, the "man after God's own heart," was a vile murderer, adulterer, liar, and polygamist; and yet our unsuspecting children are taught in the Sunday-schools that these old reprobates are examples of righteousness. No wonder our land is disgraced by murder, adultery, and crime in general, when our children are taught lessons so loathsome and degrading! We are glad no such indorsements of wrong can be found in the writings of any Infidel extant. "By their fruits ye shall know them." And yet "Citizen" reprobates the Infidel lecturer because he refuses to degrade his manhood and outrage his every feeling of moral sense and decency by accepting this hideous caricature on virtue and morality—this driveling, offensiv rot, as divine truth. Please excuse me, "Citizen;" if your buzzard appetite can swallow and digest the disgusting mess, please don't try to force it on others whose sense of refinement causes them to loathe and abhor it.

We are not alarmed at your appeal to the people not to allow any more free lectures, but we think the majority of the people of Dahlonega hav too strong a sense of justice, and too much regard for constitutional rights, to heed any of your silly suggestions. I am glad I liv under an Infidel constitution that prevents your kind from meeting Infidel arguments with the rack and fagot as they used to do.

WARREN SMITH.

This fearful arraignment of the church and orthodox doctrins called out the following suggestion from the Signal:

It is not politic to tackle a lion in his den. A hint to the wise is sufficient.

They may subside, but the seed is sown. The leaven of Freethought is at work, and a hundred students hav imbibed ideas that will forever spoil them as material for orthodox converts.

Why cannot the Liberals of America keep such advocates as Senator Smith in the field? The results of this demonstration here cannot be estimated. It has broken the power of the church, and given orthodoxy a stab from which it will not soon recover. It has set scores of young men to thinking in lines of thought entirely foreign to all their thinking experience. Let the good work go on, until man and woman are emancipated from the state of ignorance and slavery church superstition has fastened on them.

I DEEM praying mean and unmanly. I do not mind getting down on my knees to look for a pin when I hav dropped it; but I should never dream of getting down on my knees to look for a god. If a god be a god I can find him best standing on my feet, towering to the highest standard of my manhood and nobleness, and groping on the remote frontiers of being for the Mystery which is in harmony with the yearnings of my soul. I am convinced that no god that is really a god likes to see man debase himself and cut a figure as a "worm of the dust."—Saladin.

Every Liberal Should Hav It.

STILLINGS, Mo., May 27, 1891.

Your "Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" at hand, and I hav already passed several hours in looking over it. It should be in the hands of every Liberal-minded man on whose mind time hangs heavy. In looking at Heston's pictures he will not faint, nor shall he be weary.

Yours truly, JASPER BRADSBURY.

Our British Brethren.

Considerable interest has been expressed as to the welfare of the National Secular Society of England. The resignation of the presidency by Mr. Bradlaugh at the 1890 conference, and that great leader's subsequent death, were thought by some to be a too severe strain upon its cohering qualities, especially as many of the members were really only personal followers of Mr. Bradlaugh. But if we may judge from the report of the conference of the society held last month, Mr. Bradlaugh chose wisely when he selected the new president, for that gentleman has proved a capable executiv, and under his leadership the society has gained more members than it did in either of the two previous years. Next to Mr. Bradlaugh Mr. Foote is the natural leader of the English Secularists, and his conduct of the affairs of the Society will prepare even those who doubted to indorse Mrs. Besant's opinion that he is a very clever man.

At the Annual Conference for 1891, held May 17th, there were delegates present from thirty-six branches, as the local societies are called, and more would hav been represented had not the grip incapacitated the persons chosen. Mr. Foote presided. The report of the executiv showed an improvement in membership and finances. In 1888–9 four hundred and ninety-two joined the Society; in 1889–90 seven hundred and nine; in 1890–91 the list numbered seven hundred and ninety-four. There was also an increase in the society's income. The balance in hand of the General Fund rose from £172 13*s.* 4*d.* to £217 11*s.* 7*d.* There was also a slight increase from £37 10*s.* 8*d.* to £38 0*s.* 7*d.* in the Benevolent Fund balance, "after a fairly liberal expenditure." The Society will open its new year's financial account with the sum of £100 left to its president and intended for the Society's use. Twelve new branches were formed during the year in England, one in India, and one in Trinidad. "Throughout the country," said Mr. Foote, "there is apparent a revival of Freethought activity. Vigorous fresh efforts are being made at Leeds and Bradford, where the branches are reinforced with new blood. The Liverpool branch is in an improved position, and is making headway with its scheme for erecting a Secular hall. Progress is also reported from Manchester. The branches included in the Northeastern Federation hav been specially activ, and very successful lecturing tours hav been made in the district by Messrs. Foote, Moss, and Hunt. The London Secular Federation has carried on a most energetic propaganda. During the summer its open-air lecture stations were assisted by a liberal grant from your Central Fund, and during the winter the Federation has organized many courses of free lectures in various parts of the metropolis, thus reaching a large number of persons otherwise inaccessible. The North Middlesex Federation has likewise done a great deal of useful outdoor work. Your executiv is also happy to state that progress is being made in Ireland by the Ulster branch. It operations are at present confined to Belfast, but it is growing in strength and contemplates taking premises in one of the first streets in the city."

It will be seen from this summary that the new president is hopeful and has reason for his hope. But the death of Mr. Bradlaugh has seriously hindered one part of the work of the society—the repeal of the blasphemy laws. Nothing further has been done, though Mr. Foote, citing the case of Dr. Voelkel of Germany, and perhaps with an eye turned backward to his own prison cell, is aware that no safety for Freethinkers exists in any country where such laws are upon the statute-books. And the "Society for the Legalization of Bequests," of which Mr. G. J. Holyoake is president, has not yet succeeded in getting any member of Parliament to take charge of a bill. "Unless something is done before long by this body, whose action there is no desire to obstruct," said Mr. Foote to the delegates, "it will be necessary for your president, in concert with your executiv, to see if judicious pressure can be put upon some member of Parliament with a reputation for liberality in matters of religion." We trust that the "judicious pressure" will prevail, for it is a shame that a man cannot leave money for Freethought purposes if he so desires; and another legal outrage is that no Freethought public institution can exist. The proposed Bradlaugh Memorial Hall must be held by trustees who can, if they choose, convert it into a church. Such a contingency will be made as remote as possible, by electing no one as trustee who is not a member of the National Secular Society, but it is there, and is a constant danger. Girard College is an example of just such infamy.

Mr. Foote reports that in Australia, one of the Society's vice-presidents, Mr. Joseph Symes, "has battled with many and great difficulties at Melbourne, and has overcome them all. Mr. Symes's friends hav raised a beautiful Hall of Science, where he lectures on Sundays; his paper, the Liberator, increases in circulation; and the current abuse of Secularism in the colony is mixed with a growing respect for its numerical strength." This is not quite accurate, for the latest Liberators report a dissension in Mr. Symes's society between the Secularists and "Anarchists," and that the latter hav captured the hall from Mr. Symes. Another vice-president of the Society, Mr. W. W. Collins, "has been tossed from pillar to post in consequence of the bigotry of the Sydney government in closing licensed halls against him; but the Secularists are building a hall of their own, in which Mr. Collins will lecture and organize. Mr. Wallace Nelson has also been activ in lecturing and debating at the antipodes." In South Africa, too, there is considerable extension of Freethought reported to London. "Several members of the Society, who continue their membership, hav emigrated to that part of the British dominions, and a large quantity of Freethought literature is sent out there for sale and distribution. One member is collecting donations for the Bradlaugh Memorial." In Canada, which is now a British dependency, but which ought to join the American Union as soon as the Christian part of its population becomes civilized, Mr. Foote reports that "Mr. Charles Watts maintains his journal, and during the past winter has discoursed to very large audiences in the Toronto Academy of Music. Captain Adams, the president of the Canadian Union, has also addressed large audiences at Montreal."

The Society fraternally holds out its hand to the Freethinkers of the United States. "Your Society," said its president, "has no official connection with the Freethinkers of America, though a closer union is contemplated in a resolution on the Agenda." The resolution alluded to is "that some steps should be taken with a view to accomplishing a closer intimacy between the National Secular Society and the Freethought organizations of the English colonies and the United States of America." So far as the United States are concerned there will be no difficulty. American and English Freethinkers, as far as we hav observed, get along famously together; and if any matter arises on which the heretics of the two countries can march side by side, we opine tha the steps of both will be equal. Mr. Foote, however, seems to be concerned that we over here are slack in the faith. "The American Secular Union," he says, "scarcely seems to fulfill its former promis. One thing, however, has been done by President Westbrook. He has given a prize of one thousand dollars for the best practical Manual of Secular Ethics. The volume is to be published shortly, and, the prize having been awarded by competent judges, it may be found of real value in all parts of the English-speaking world." The American Freethought journals, Mr. Foote thinks, hold their own, and must be preparing a rich harvest for future years.

The Bradlaugh Memorial Hall project is well under way. Up to the present the sum of four hundred and twenty pounds has been collected. In addition a Bradlaugh Memorial Hall company has been formed, with a capital of ten thousand pounds, in one pound shares. The company's prospectuses are in circulation, and applications for shares are received daily. The donations collected will eventually be invested in the Hall company in the names of selected trustees. "Owing to the villainous state of the law," says Mr. Foote, "the trust will only be a moral one, but every possible precaution will be taken to secure the investments as a permanent endowment of your society." A sum of six hundred pounds has been collected also to purchase from Mr. Bradlaugh's creditors the printing plant of the National Reformer for his daughter.

The conference throughout was harmonious. The only point on which much feeling was aroused was whether non-members of the society should be made members of the Bradlaugh Memorial Committee. This discussion was principally for and against Mrs. Besant, who from her long friendship with Mr. Bradlaugh is thought by some to be entitled to the honor, while others oppose her because she is a Theosophist and has resigned her connection with the society, alleging that she could not work in harmony with the new president. The debate was quite warm, but was finally settled by withdrawing the motion to instruct the executiv "to add to the Bradlaugh Memorial Committee such trusted friends of Mr. Bradlaugh as may be willing to coöperate with them in doing honor to his memory." Mrs. Besant, therefore, is out in the cold, which seems unjust. She has labored for Secularism for many years, and has accomplished a great deal. Her close partnership with Mr. Bradlaugh in his struggles, and the signal ability she brought to his aid, ought, it seems at this distance, to be recognized by a position on the Committee chosen to build a useful monument in his honor. Perhaps if she would sacrifice her personal dislike to Mr. Foote to the extent of rejoining the society of which he is president, he would sacrifice his dislike of her by withdrawing his opposition to her election to the memorial body. Her Theosophical opinions can hardly destroy her usefulness to the committee; nor should she, because of them, be deprived of the honor due her. Mr. Bradlaugh had no warmer friend than she, nor none who grieves more sincerely over his death.

Mr. Foote made the closing speech of the conference, a duty that for many years fell to Mr. Bradlaugh. Our contributor, Mr. A. B. Moss, preceded him, together with G. Standring—a warm friend of the founder of this paper and highly valued by the present Editor—J. M. Robertson, the present editor of the National Reformer, Mr. Stanley Jones, and Mr. Forder. Mr. Foote's speech was roundly applauded, and he has evidently won a place with the supporters of the Society. In his paper, The Freethinker, considering the Conference and its future work he says:

"The National Secular Society has held another successful conference, and mapped out a great deal of fresh work. Resolving to do this is easy enough; the doing of it far more difficult. But it can be done if the president and executiv, who mean business, are loyally and earnestly supported by the members throughout the country. Some are able to take their share of the work, others are able to swell meetings and circulate literature, and others are able to contribute financially. Persons who are afraid to lose in business or position by an open connection with our party, should at least subscribe liberally, and help to provide the sinews of war for those who fight under the Freethought flag.

"By and by, when the law of England givs us security for our property, our party will do some 'constructiv' work. Nay, it will begin that task when the Bradlaugh Memorial Hall is raised in London, whether the law is altered or not. Premises, at any rate, are indispensable to such experiments. A name is nothing without a local habitation, at least in a climate like this. Meanwhile our 'constructiv' work must be the destruction of theology, and the preparation of the mental soil for the growth of sound ideas—ideas based on science, history, and common sense, and inspired by the sentiment of humanity.

"Those who imagin that theology is dead, and that Freethought has only to cultivate its 'true inwardness,' are basking in a fool's paradise. Tolerance is in no sense the child of religion; it is the offspring of skepticism and indifference. Less than fifty members voted for Mr. Bradlaugh's bill to abolish the blasphemy laws. Let the Freethought propaganda languish, and the fifty would soon be reduced to forty, to thirty, to twenty, to ten, to zero. We shall never gain freedom and justice by tickling theology into good temper. It will never relinquish the smallest of its privileges. All we win must be extorted. That is the lesson of all history, and it is as true to-day as ever. Those who cease to fight for the rights they hav not will lose the rights they hav."

We trust that next year will show still greater gains for our English brethren. Their leadership we believe will be wise; may their support of the cause be proportioned to the efforts made to advance it—and we believe, too, that it will be, for there are many English Secularists in this country and they are among the most enthusiastic and able toilers in the cause. We extend to Mr. Foote and to the National Secular Society assurances that the closer union sought with the Freethinkers of this country will not be rejected.

The Evasions of John B. Alden.

Mr. John B. Alden publishes a "Manifold Cyclopedia of Knowledge and Language" in forty volumes. One of our subscribers is also a subscriber to the cyclopedia. In volume 27 he found an article on Thomas Paine, in which is repeated the palpable lie that Benjamin Franklin advised Paine to burn his "Age of Reason." Mr. Merritt at once wrote to Mr. Alden, and his letter explains the nature of Mr. Alden's offense:

"BLAINE, WASH., March 22, 1891.

"JOHN B. ALDEN, New York—Dear Sir: I am in receipt of volume 27 of the 'Manifold Cyclopedia.'

"I wish to call your attention to what seems to me a glaring mistake in the article 'Thomas Paine.' In it I find the following: 'At the trial of Louis XVI., says Madame de Staël, Thomas Paine alone proposed what would hav done honor to France if it had been accepted—the offer to the king of an asylum in America—by which he offended the Mountain party; and in 1793 Robespierre caused him to be ejected from the convention, on the ground of his being a foreigner, and thrown into prison. During his imprisonment he wrote "The Age of Reason, Against Atheism and Against Christianity, and in favor of Deism."' The last sentence on the same page says: 'Benjamin Franklin advised him to burn it before it was seen by any other person.'

"Now, I find in volume 15 that Franklin died on April 17, 1790, some three years before Thomas Paine was thrown into prison in France, and consequently three years before 'The Age of Reason' was written. Will the author of the article Thomas Paine please explain how it is possible for one person to advise another to burn something before anyone else sees it, when, in fact, it is not in existence for three years after the adviser's death?

"When the author accuses Thomas Paine with being ignorant in his attack on Christianity, does he not unwittingly open himself to the same charge.

"Yours for the truth alone, JOHN M. MERRITT."

Instead of correcting the misstatements in his cyclopedia, Mr. Alden sought to evade the matter, and in doing so has mixed himself up with falsehoods and evasions and unsupported suppositions and dishonest conclusions so completely as to make it plain that he cares neither to ascertain the facts nor to tell the truth about Paine. This is what he says:

"MR. JOHN W. MERRITT, Blaine, Wash.—Dear Sir: Replying to your favor of March 22d, we hav given careful attention to your criticism. There is merely a confusion of dates, perhaps through typographical error. The words quoted, 'during his imprisonment,' also should be changed. Authorities show that one part of the 'Age of Reason' was written between Paine's accusation and arrest. Another part of it may hav been shown to Franklin in manuscript, having been written before Franklin's death; and the best authorities favor this supposition. We are obliged to you for calling attention to the incongruity in our statement. 'During his imprisonment,' etc., should be changed to 'Not long before his imprisonment, he wrote a part of the "Age of Reason,"' etc. Benjamin Franklin's advice also should be changed from 'Burn it,' etc., to 'Burn this piece,' etc.

"As to the 'ignorance' of Paine's attack on Christianity, it is undeniable that far stronger attacks can be made than was his, by reason of great modern increase of scientific and other knowledge. Yours truly, J. B. ALDEN."

There may be a confusion of dates in Mr. Alden's mind, but there is no confusion in regard to Paine and Franklin.

1. Franklin died April 17, 1790.

2. Thomas Paine began the first part of his "Age of Reason" in the latter part of 1793, and hurried it to completion when he found he was to be arrested, finishing it just six hours before arrest. That he did not write any of it before the latter part of 1793 is proved from his own words in the preface to the second part. He says: "I hav mentioned in the former part of 'The Age of Reason,' that it had long been my intention to publish my thoughts upon religion; but that I had originally reserved it to a later period in life, intending it to be the last work I should undertake. The circumstances, however, which existed in France in the latter end of the year 1793 determined me to delay no longer."

The second part of "The Age of Reason" was written partly while in prison, and completed later, being published early in 1795.

The dishonesty of Mr. Alden in this matter, or his ignorance, is at once apparent. The "one part written between Paine's accusation and arrest" was the first part; he had delayed committing his thoughts on religion to paper until the latter part of his life, and he then believed that he would soon see the end, and it was an accident that he did not. The second part was written after the first. There was no part at all, not one leaf, that could hav been shown to Franklin, for not one word of it was written until the "circumstances which existed in France in the latter part of 1793 determined" Paine "to delay it no longer." There are no "authorities" favoring the "supposition" alleged. It is a downright falsehood, invented to save the falsifiers of Paine's history.

When Paine returned to America in 1802 he published a series of "Letters to the Citizens of the United States," in one of which he says: "In my publications I follow the rule I began with in 'Common Sense;' that is, to consult nobody, nor to let anybody see what I write till it appears publicly." Mr. Alden will hav to squirm some more before he clears his reputation as a dishonest cyclopedist; and if all the articles in his publication are like this on Paine, it is indeed a valuable publication.

Editorial Notes.

AMONG the bills introduced in the Florida legislature is one making Atheists competent witnesses in courts, and another restraining railroads and mining companies from "desecrating the Christian Sabbath." This latter will prohibit running or loading or unloading local freight trains on Sunday. The first bill is a step toward securing equal human rights; the other would take them away.

Two banks robbed, three banks wrecked, the city treasury despoiled of half a million dollars, the state funds looted to the amount of a million dollars, the character of a dead bank president destroyed, another president a fugitiv, with a price set on his head, another in prison, a cashier under arrest, a city treasurer in the grip of the law for embezzlement—these are some of the results of a great financial scandal in Philadelphia. And the parties are all prominent church folks and good Christians!

IF Charles Bradlaugh had lived he would hav made the position of the prince of Wales a little more disagreeable than it now is. That sturdy republican would hav used the unmasking of the royal gambler as a text for asking some pertinent questions and for preaching some sound doctrin as to the duty of representativs of a people. Perhaps Labouchere may attempt to do it, but the English people seem to be too thorough toadies to miserable royalty to learn the most desirable lesson from the exposure of the nobility in the late baccarat trial scandal. It needs a Bradlaugh to make them comprehend its enormity.

THE directors of the Union Theological Seminary hav decided to retain Professor Briggs as teacher of biblical theology, notwithstanding his condemnation by the general assembly. The offense of the professor is that in teaching biblical theology he has substantially adopted the views of the German and English rationalistic theologians that the Bible is largely anonymous, and consists in great part of books which are mere records of Jewish traditions written by fallible authors, and that they must be judged and studied as the work of men and not of God. The retention of Professor Briggs, therefore, is a notice that Union Seminary proposes to be at least a little liberal in its conduct, and that its students may study the Bible with eyes at least partially open.

MONDAY, June 1st, Mr. Harman and his counsel went to Leavenworth, Kan., to prosecute the appeals from the district courts of Kansas and Missouri in the United States circuit court. Arriving at the court room they found Judge Raynor of Wyoming, instead of Judge Caldwell, on the bench. After waiting till Tuesday noon they were told that Judge Caldwell would not put in an appearance during this session of the court, and by agreement of attorneys the Lucifer cases are allowed to go over; whether till another term or to be heard during vacation has not yet been decided upon. The authorities, it seems, are in no particular hurry to try the defendant, which is well, for it leaves him at liberty for a while longer to work against the outrageous "Comstock" law.

WANAMAKER'S subordinates hav queer ways of conducting their offices. The Anti-lottery act passed by the last Congress distinctly provided that no postmaster or other person should open any letter not addressed to himself. But To-Day has learned that an itinerant official known as post-office inspector took thirty-five sealed letters from the El Paso post-office and opened and read them at his own lodgings. The statute itself is bad enough, comments To-Day, but as interpreted by the petty officials it is an intolerable invasion of our most fundamental rights. In the same town the postmaster confiscated the entire mail edition of the Times and refused its transmission through the mails because the paper contained a synopsis of the decision of the Louisiana supreme court to compel the secretary of state to submit to popular vote an amendment extending the charter of the lottery company. A Republican paper containing the same decision, it is said, was mailed without objection. The postmaster has been arrested on the charge of unlawfully detaining mail matter.

THE Methodist church is at last feeling the general improvement through unbelief of theology. A man who does not believe in hell can join that church, according to its New York organ, which replies to the question, "Ought a person who says 'I cannot believe in eternal punishment' to be received into full membership?" as follows: "We should receive such a person into full membership, provided he did not propose to express views of eternal punishment antagonistic to the doctrin of the Methodist Episcopal church upon that subject. If he believed in future punishment, but simply could not acknowledge its eternity, and did not feel called upon to propagate his doubts, and in all other respects was suitable to be received, we should receive him. But if he was going to antagonize the accepted doctrin of the church upon that subject, he is not a suitable person to be received. 'Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations,' or, as others translate it, to judge his doubtful disputations." Objections that this is putting a premium on hypocrisy might stand; but it shows that the Methodist church folks are not now as in the days of Wesley.

MR. PECCI, of Rome, professional pope, has given so much of the world as cares to read his lucubrations a paper called an encyclical. The subject is the labor question. "We [observe the plural of majesty!] approach the subject," he says, "with confidence, and in the exercise of the rights which belong to us [note his modesty]. For no practical solution of this question will ever be found without the assistance of religion and of the church. It is we who are the chief guardian of religion and the chief dispenser of what belongs to the church, and we must not by silence neglect the duty which lies upon us. Doubtless this most serious question demands the attention and the efforts of others besides ourselvs—of the rulers of states, of employers of labor, of the wealthy, and of the working population themselvs for whom we plead. But we affirm without hesitation that all the striving of men will be vain if they leave out the church." His main idea is that God caused man to labor; that that mythical personage made some to rule and the rest to be ruled; that the rulers should be good to the ruled, and the ruled should obey the rulers; and that the church, meaning the Roman Catholic, should hav dominion over them both. As a statement of what "the church" thinks the encyclical is good; for any other purpose it is valueless. The world has gone by its propositions years and years ago.

TWO of our oldest subscribers hav passed away this spring. Mr. J. F. Webster, who died in Flushing on the 16th ult., was born in Scotland sixty-five years ago, but has for many years been an American citizen. Like most of his countrymen he was a thrifty and prudent man, upright in his dealings, warm-hearted and benevolent, and consequently highly regarded in the community, though he never concealed the fact that he regarded the current religion as false in conception and cruel in its creeds. His wife, who survives him, shared his views. His body was cremated at Fresh Pond, in accordance with his wish. In his death his wife loses a loving companion, his town a good citizen, and THE TRUTH SEEKER a generous friend. Mr. Daniel Fleming, of Detroit, Mich., had lived out his days, being seventy-nine, when on April 20th he laid down his burden. His wife, two years older than he, could not bear the separation, and two weeks after was laid beside him. Mr. Webster had read THE TRUTH SEEKER twelve years, and Mr. Fleming thirteen. And yet another friend went away last month. Mrs. Whittick, wife of William Whittick, of Dushore, Pa., died May 29th. Mr. and Mrs. Whittick were a couple looked for at Liberal congresses and conventions; and though for many years in poor health, suffering much pain, Mrs. Whittick ably seconded her husband's efforts to make Liberal friends remember the couple who seemed so happy in themselvs and did generous deeds in so quiet a manner. Everyone who met them liked them, and in his great affliction Mr. Whittick is sure of honest sympathy from a wide circle of friends. Cremation was performed at the Columbarium of the Philadelphia society. Mrs. Whittick was but forty-eight years old, but they were years of honor and usefulness.

MR. EDITOR: I am sixty-seven years old. I do not want my paper to stop. I cannot get along without the paper. I hav been trying to get some one to subscribe and send for it, but I cannot. I liv in a place of about four hundred inhabitants. I am alone, but I will fight them as long as I liv.

MR. EDITOR: We had a very pleasant visit from Prof. W. S. Bell on the 25th, 26th, and 27th of last month. He delivered his lecture, "Liberty and Morality," in our Bijou Opera House on the evening of the 26th to nearly four hundred of an audience, and he was greatly pleased to see so many present. We intend giving him a warmer reception on his return in the fall. JAMES A. GREENHILL.

MR. EDITOR: There are a great many Freethinkers in this state, and the state Secular Union is already beginning to make itself felt in the state legislature, and in a very short time we will surely be taxing church property. I look forward with a great deal of eagerness to the time when there will not be a church or a parsonage that will escape taxation, and when men will become less selfish, and liv for the enjoyment of this life. E. R. HOLMES.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., May 29, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I take great interest in the paper, and in "Letters from Friends." I vote for the pictures every time, and wish I could giv something toward them, but I am poor. It is all I can do to keep myself in good standing with the TRUTH SEEKER family, and I am very sorry to see so many in arrears in your list. When the Bible Pictures are ready put my name down for one copy and I will remit.

Yours in search of truth, JNO. T. MURRAY.

NEW MILLFORD, O., May 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I should like to giv some of my experience from my boyhood up to the present time, but my age forbids. I am in my eighty-fifth year, having been born in 1807. I came to Ohio with my father's family in 1816, I being nine years old the winter before. Well, my folks all at some time of their lives had belonged to some church. My father and mother were Methodists. I never belonged to any church, but hav taken care of the Methodist preacher's horse and caught the chickens to feed the preachers.

Well, I tried to get at least one subscriber, and thought I should, but hav not succeeded. Men in business are afraid of boycotting. SAM. R. MIX.

MARENGO, ILL., June 5, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: I regret very much that my arguments concerning the eventual filling of space with souls, if they exist, are beyond the comprehension of Brother Walker; but I conceive it to be not owing to the softening of his brain that he fails to see the logic of my inferences, as he facetiously observes. I was in hopes that he would continue the discussion of the space problem until it had become perfectly clear to his perception, and thus convince him of the utter impossibility of individual immortality. One thing I cannot comprehend on my part, however, and it constitutes the point of my argument, and that is, how anyone who accepts the predicate of science of the infinity of nature, which of course involves eternal soul-evolution extending through infinit space, can fail to see that a plethora of souls would be the inevitable result. With this postulate of science as the basis of my proposition, can he not see that though each planet evolved but one soul, all space would hav been filled an eternity ago, because an infinit number of life-evolving worlds hav preceded those in existence now?

H. WETTSTEIN.

LEWISTON, PA., June 7, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: The papers are beginning to agitate the question of keeping out undesirable foreigners, principally from the labor standpoint, and though it is a serious question in that view of the case, and ought to be effectually checked if possible, still there is another view of the case which is of greater importance to the nation, viz, all these men, or the great majority of them, are the dupes of the church, and the church is bound to get a majority of votes here by fair means or foul. These men are naturalized, some by false oaths, almost as soon as they land. Everyone is another vote for the supremacy of the church. I believe the only means of checking the church in its march to supremacy in this land is to repeal the naturalization laws. Let no foreigner be allowed to vote after 1891, and you would find a great falling off in the number of immigrants. The foreign church would then hav no motiv for sending here the population they can well spare, and we should be saved from the greatest danger that hangs over our glorious republic. J. D.

OSHKOSH, WIS., May 27, 291.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find money order for a trial subscriber with the pictures. Long liv W. Heston. He is a brick. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for fifteen years. I consider it the best paper published.

I hav been investigating Spiritualism for over thirty years, and in that time hav witnessed many strange things in connection with it, so that I am almost convinced that we do exist after death, but not fully, so want further proof. Please giv the proof, the best you hav got; then if Ella Gibson or any others will come forward and demonstrate that spirits hav nothing to do with it, let us hav it straight, without slur or slang, as honest seekers after the truth. If spirits do come to us, as many claim they do, it would seem to me that every honest truth seeker would like to know it for a fact; or if, on the other hand, there are those that do know that they do not, is it not to the interest of everyone to know it? I would say to Brother H. Wettstein to giv us a rest on the crowding business, or until we are dead-sure that we are not going to be there. Giv us the proof positiv that we are or are not going to be in it.

Yours for the truth, R. C. RICHARDSON.

CANTON, KAN., June 1, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: By chance a copy of the Seventh Biennial Report of the state board of agriculture of Kansas for the year 1890 fell into my hands, and in looking through it I found that it contained some statistics from which, if a person had a good pencil and a little time to figure, he could find out something that was not generally known, i.e., just how much we are taxed for Christ's sake. So I figured, and I inclose the results in a form that I think would convince the most thick-headed son of the church that what he puts into the contribution-box is not all that he pays to support it, and that Infidels, as they are called, are compelled to help support it, whether they like it or not, in free America. I think if this could be done all over the country, and the figures brought to the notice of the saints, that portion of them that lie awake nights contriving how they can secure a good share of the pavements of the new Jerusalem when they get there, and the burden of whose prayers is,

But, Lord, remember me and mine
Wi' mercies temp'ral and divine,
That I for gear and grace may shine,
Excelled by nane,
And a' the glory shall be thine,
Amen, Amen!

would be with us on this point at least.

I received the back numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER a few days ago, and hav distributed the most of them. I will try to get you some new subscribers in a short time.

ELSINORE, CAL., May 27, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Even here in the wild West with all that is beautiful around us, the breath of the church is poisoning the pure mountain air. Yet we hope some time, perhaps soon, to join hands with our sister states and bound the east Pacific by Freethought. In our little village there are a number of Infidels, but as yet we hav organized no Liberal society, and the churches with undisputed right people the future Inferno with our sinful souls—which they are at perfect liberty to do if in the present they will allow us to enjoy ourselvs, and excuse us from listening to their eloquent discourses on the merits of mercy and the church's brotherly love. It is enough to be politely invited to their house of worship and go intending to profit by whatever good there may be in the discourse and hear nothing but insult to Freethought's dead heroes, and stale stories of death-bed recantings witnessed by the servant-girl and proved by whom?

And as for brotherly love, I feel it all leaving its place to anger when I hear them calling upon their God who in his "blessed word" declares he will (with brotherly love) punish forever such as choose not to believe that there is, was, or ever will be a man on this earth heartless enough to kill every little baby-boy, even for the gratification and the promis of the protection of the Gods. And I think that my mercy is quite equal to that of the "merciful father" who cannot even deal mercifully with the imperfections of his own creation. It would be grand to hav a children's paper where we might express our half-formed ideas without severe criticism, and, clumsy and uncouth as our expression of the same might be, fear no ridicule.

Hoping that this will be the next step of Freethought, I am, Your Liberal friend, EDWA HEALD.

PORTVILLE, N. Y., March 20, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: As I cannot get along without the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, I thought I would send you another dollar. I am a crippled soldier and unable to work, and the government that I fought for givs me the magnificent sum of $8 per month. Well, I hav been thinking for some time, why can we not hav a temple in Washington, D. C? The sky-pilots and their superstitious followers are building great temples to worship their great whangdoodle in; and if we could hav a national headquarters we might be the better enabled to watch them to see that they didn't bamboozle Uncle Samuel. I will giv $10, and if every other Freethinker will giv as much according to his means, we shall hav a half million dollars in less than six months. Let us hear from some one and see what a big fool I am.

Yours for truth and the pansy, JOHN R. COATS.

MR. EDITOR: It seems beyond the efforts of our republican form of government to banish from our public schools the superstition and blasphemous obscenity of a barbarous age. Why should this be so? It seems to me that when a law was once passed, it should be enforced if possible, or repealed without delay. It is no wonder that at the birth of our republic, thousands of the greatest statesmen, in all civilized countries, seriously doubted its necessary vigor to prolong its life to anything like the average age of monarchial or despotic governments.

There is not sufficient room here to enter into detail on so vast and important a subject. Then let this statement suffice for the present: Legislation has failed miserably in its effort to establish one of the grandest systems of education ever known to the human race. Now, it requires not superhuman sagacity to see plainly that unless enlightenment comes, and comes speedily, to the rescue of this God crazed people our days of freedom will soon be numbered.

If this government hav not the power to enact and enforce a free school law, in opposition to this multitude of raving maniacs, superstitious fanatics, the preachers, backed only by their senseless creeds, and the ignorance of their more senseless dupes, then alas for our boasted freedom! and alas for the fruits of our four bloody wars! For the ignorance of the Dark Ages and old Jewish savagery still sway the scepter over our God-afflicted and Bible-crazed people, while the legislature, rapt in mute imbecility, sits with bowed head and reverential awe listening to the foolish mutterings of the legislativ sky-pilot at the expense of a downtrodden and viciously deluded people. MR. EDITOR: I find it a'most impossible to obtain additional subscribers to your valuable paper—would like to get a dozen of them. The cry of "Hard times" and "Cannot expend from lack of means," I believe is very general, and is not without its argument and cause; but as your paper does not discuss that cause I forbear, for the reason that prejudice is more sensitiv of its favorit illusion than is very quiet, healthy thought or knowledge. So I advert only to what is usually alluded to in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and made controversial. First, the subject of Spiritualism is broached, and its opponents, skeptics many of them, in attempting criticism become excited and pick at their best Liberal friends who hav happened to hav added to their stock of knowledge a belief in a life hereafter, a spiritual philosophy that pertains to spiritual existence, or a continued life after the visible body is cast off. Well, I, an Atheist, think and feel that probably they may be right. It is their kind of mental liberty, and they seem to enjoy it. It is their right to enjoy and hold to it, and we as American citizens, distinct from the Old World practices of intolerance, should ennoble ourselvs and stand on the broad ground of American toleration. Admit them as friends, for, in fact, most of them are, having left the church, which is the enemy of right, or assumed independent religious action in matter of opinion. In that degree, we may assume for a truth, that we accord to them liberality, they in return will most assuredly accord it to us. Let them express their views. Those who imagin Spiritualism a dogma of Christianity, or the modern church, may be a little mistaken, for the church's creed is, one holy Spirit (impersonal, more than three), and not human spirits passed away from earth conditions. I might go on and take up each article separately and point out the useless verbiage or unjust remarks and epithets of many of my skeptical friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER toward those Spiritual communications that from time to time appear—the sincere expressions of loving hearts and kind wishes tortured with cruel words and sneering phrases. The Spiritualists are moving in a harmonious body, striving in the same good cause. We are in the reform movement, and who is there in our ranks when the trial hour comes that will then withhold to grasp the fraternal hand of friendship with them? Yours truly, W. B. Lewis.

Flat Creek, La., May 26, 1891.

Mr. Editor: I hav been taking The Truth Seeker for eighteen months, and hav been carefully perusing every article and every line in it, and I find that the Editor's head and mine run in the same channel, so that I hav not found a single point where I could make an issue with the Editor. Either his head is always level or mine is always inclined. But I could very often take issue with its contributors.

I hav been carefully reading the discussions on Spiritualism and Spiritology to try to learn something, and I hav not yet received any convincing evidence to sustain the hypothesis that our spirits or souls continue to liv in the individual organized form after the death of the body. Some of your correspondents assert positivly and say, "I know," but this does not make me know. When another man says, "I know," I say he thinks that he knows, but he might be mistaken. The Christian sometimes says, "I know that my redeemer liveth." The Spiritualist sometimes says, "I know that the spirits do liv after the dissolution of the body," but nature contradicts the assertion, and I regard nature as the safest teacher. She is my mother and I think my mother would be the last person to deceive me. The spirits who write messages on slates, etc., are too much like the God of Moses. When he wanted to deliver the Decalog to his chosen people, instead of coming to their camp to deliver the tables of stone in the sight of all the people he did not want to be seen, and went into a cave or canon in the mountain to dress his rocks and do his chiseling, and had Moses to keep up a big smoke to hide him from the prying eyes of his children, and had Moses to stand guard for a period of forty days to keep the people's spies from catching him at work. I do not believe that Spiritism is all sham or that the mediums are all frauds. I believe that there is mystery in it and some truth in it which neither we nor the mediums can understand. I believe there is in nature an occult force and intelligence which knows our unexpressed thoughts and can answer our questions in certain ways and under certain circumstances, or else some persons, called mediums, can under certain circumstances divine our thoughts, which is just as mysterious and inexplicable as the other hypothesis. Mankind are so given to the practice of sham and humbuggery, and so prone to lying when there is money to be gained by it, that it will not do to place any faith in ipse dixits, and I can hav no faith in the visible appearance of spirit bodies and spirit hands, unless they will let me touch them, feel of them, and freely handle them. Now, if the Spiritualists hav any facts in nature to base their faith in disembodied spirits upon, I will gladly receive them. Beyond nature I cannot go, and any faith which is not based upon known facts in nature I regard as a superstition.

Marceline, Mo., June 2, 291.

Mr. Editor: I will add to my late letter a few more objections to the Christian scheme.

George Washington's existence is reasonable to believe. I never hear of one doubting it. But many do doubt Christ's resurrection, because it is not reasonable. Men do not do so now, and if one should come to after being thought dead for three days it would not infer that he was God, neither would it prove that he ever did miracles.

If there be a God of wisdom, why did he create evil? With my limited knowledge, if I had the power to make and people a world, I would not create evil. Some say that evil is necessary in order to cause us the more to appreciate the good. Now, if the Bible were true, every Christian must love the devil and all his works; for does not the writer of the book of Luke make Jesus to say, "Love your enemies?" Now, is the devil not God's enemy, Christ's enemy, and an enemy to all Christians? But a God of infinit wisdom could hav created us to love the good and do that which is good continually without the existence of evil. If there be a God, and he created what we call evil here in this life, it seems very unjust. Some say the devil creates all the evil, and he is the one that will drag us down to hell. But Isa. xlv, 7, makes God to say, "I make peace and create evil. I the Lord do all these things." Did the devil write the Bible? If he did, then the Christians may say that the devil is the one that will damn some people and send them to hell. But we find in Matt. xxv, 46; Rev. xx, 10, 15; xiv, 11, where the writer makes Christ to say, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever. . . . . And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire. . . . And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever." I believe that portion I hav quoted from Revelation which the writer makes John to speak. Still, God allows the devil to deceive people. Now, if anyone says that the devil is the one who will send some people to hell, they may just as well admit that he wrote the Bible, for he has torn down God's plans from the very creation, and according to the so-called sacred book he has equal if not more power than God, for he will get for his share at least two-thirds of the people. And in Rev. xvi, 14, we find these words, "For they are spirits of devils working miracles." Now, if devils work miracles, are they not about as powerful as God himself? And we find in 2 Tim. iii, 16, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God;" and in 2 Cor. xi, 17; 1 Cor. vii, 6, 12, these words, "That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord. I speak this by permission, and not of commandment. . . . But to the rest speak I, not the Lord." Now, does not the Christian get off his head when he declares that every word in the Bible is given by inspiration, and that he believes every word in it is true?

I tell you, there are but few of them that read the Bible through and through from Genesis to Revelation.

In the beginning of my letter I said I would tell you what I notice by associating with both Liberals and Christians. The Liberals I find all to be broad-minded, reasonable. Even those who hav but little book-learning hav great sympathy for suffering humanity. I can say that during my fifteen years' traveling experience I never was charged an extortionate price for stopping with an Infidel. They do not think they know all that can be learned, but their minds are open to receive more knowledge, and are willing if the views they hold can be proved wrong to giv them up and grasp new ideas. They are good, charitable people. They trust in science and facts, and believe in the religion of humanity. They are often represented as being very mean people by the Christians. Preachers of some churches will tell their congregation that a man who livs a good and honest life—one who is truthful—one who is good to himself, to his wife and children—one who is good to everybody—one who has taken care of the sick and helped the poor and needy, will finally be eternally damned to endless torment if he does not believe in a dream or ghost story nearly two thousand years old. I tell you, I don't believe it. If there be a God he will never torment forever some people because they cannot believe something. Would he not be the author of our minds, and would he make our minds and surroundings so that we cannot believe a thing, and then damn us for not believing it? I think not, and I honestly doubt that a preacher in the pulpit to day believes such a doctrin.

I remember reading one of our friend John Peck's articles some time ago. He said he was old, and could last but a little while longer, and that he hoped after he passed away some young Liberal would be ready to take his place. I sometimes feel that if I survive him, I would like to take his place and fight the cruel doctrins he has been fighting.

Last Sunday I visited Col. E. D. Hicks and family, who reside in the outskirts of the city of Marceline near the beautiful reservoir and about three hundred yards west of the round-house. He owns a fine farm of beautiful rolling prairie-land, and I think it the most beautiful site in or near the city. He and family moved here from Illinois about one year ago, and proceeded at once to erect a fine residence and other buildings. He now has everything about him scientifically arranged and in good order. One only has to meet the family to appreciate them. They seem very happy in their new Missouri home. Here I find many books to read, all of a scientific nature. The papers and magazines that are taken are a library within themselvs. Among them is The Truth Seeker. Mr. Hicks was raised by a good Catholic mother, but the creed of Catholicism and the teaching of the Bible were too narrow and selfish for his broad, intelligent, and wide-searching mind to believe a God had anything to do with it, but that it was the work of designing men. Some years ago he and Mrs. Hicks saw phenomena sufficient to convince them of a spirit-world and a life beyond the grave. They are very sincere in their belief, yet willing to giv it up if it can be disproved. They like the proud title of Freethinker and Liberal, and no fear of hell casts its shadow near to darken this beautiful and quiet mansion. Three beautiful children are the tender flowers which help to brighten and make home happy.

If any of the Liberal lecturers should happen to stop off at Marceline, they should call on Colonel Hicks, for they will never regret meeting such a friend of humanity.

Yours for peace, liberty of body and mind, and intellectual development. C. A. Glenn.

Detroit, Mich., June 1, 1891.

Mr. Editor: Herewith I inclose you a copy of a letter I wrote and sent to the Presbyterian assembly last week while it was in session in this city, and which I send you at the request of several of the readers of The Truth Seeker in Detroit who would like to see it published in The Truth Seeker. Most respectfully, U. K. Booth.

Rev. Dr. Green, D.D., LL.D., Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly, and to the Delegates thereof, Detroit, Mich, Reverend Sir and Gentlemen:

Kindly soliciting your indulgence for a few minutes, and begging your pardon for the liberty I take in addressing you, I desire to state that I am informed that one of the principal objects and main purposes for which your venerable body has assembled in this city at the present time, is to review and probably revise the Westminster Confession of Faith, and if possible, determin what alterations, changes, eliminations, prunings, etc., the advancement of the intelligence of the present age requires, to enable you, as a church, to keep abreast of social progress and religious reform, and thereby save the old dotard, the pet child, the sick offspring, of the semi-barbarous John Calvin from the onward march and crushing footsteps of the careless, enlightened, tramp-tramp-tramping despoiler of creeds, and tone down, shield, and temper, if possible, the cruel and reckless blows of the iconoclastic Briggs, who (with the snarling teeth of a modern ecclesiastical Cerberus growling heresy in his face, and the fiery eye-balls of a synodical Pluto glaring scintillating flashes of hades about him and breathing sulphurous threatenings of condemnation upon his professional head) has dared to disturb the old Calvinistic landmarks, and with wicked and impious hands has sought to remove the sacred stakes and holy corner-posts that were set two hundred and fifty years ago and labeled, "Thus far and no farther; around these divine limits shall the waves of human knowledge ebb and flow, eddy and circle, forevermore."

And now, Reverend Moderator and Fathers, if I hav rightly conceived the object and purpose of your gathering, please indulge me a few moments while I essay to make a brief statement, ask a few simple questions, and proffer a little plain advice; for which I shall not require a collection to be taken up among you; the equanimity of your tempers shall not be disturbed, nor your nervous systems shattered, by the sudden waking into terrifying activity of the growling ferocity of the organ menagerie, nor will I vex or crucify your patience by cracking old musty doxological chestnuts upon you during your release from confinement and your exit to your outside jubilee.

First, then, to my statement. In the year 1815, or about that time, my father and mother moved from the state of Vermont to the (then distant and "far West") state of Ohio. Previous thereto, and preparatory therefor, my father worked like a slave, for four years, on a farm at $6 per month, to acquire the means with which to purchase a cheap pair of horses, a double set of harness, and an old-fashioned covered wagon, with which to perform their perilous journey. They were six weeks on the way, sleeping at night in their wagon, with two little children, my oldest brother and sister. They drove through wind and storms, through heat and cold, over muddy roads, through pathless forests, across trackless marshes, among miry bogs and malarial swamps and noxious fens; encountering every inconvenience, every deprivation, trial, and hardship that human life could endure. But now the same journey can be performed in twenty-four hours, with comfort and pleasure, in palace-cars, in storms, through heat and cold, and with no suffering to man, woman, children, or beasts. And what, I ask, has wrought this great and stupendous change? Not the Westminster Confession of Faith; not the Jewish Bible; not the New Testament; not Christianity, nor Christian priests, ministers, clergymen, or religious creeds of any kind; not baptism, fasts, sacraments, nor holy unction. No, none of these. But, sirs, it has been science. Yes, science, that dared to break away from religious creeds, religious books, and religious Bibles. Science, which, in the stupid ignorance or knavish rascality of the church, has been scurrilized as Infidelity, and denounced as the common enemy of mankind. And its advancement (unless emasculated by religion) was deplored more deeply by the priesthood and ministers of the (so called) gospel, than would hav been the revival and visitation to our shores of the seven plagues that cursed poor old priest-ridden Egypt.

Oh, reverend sirs, by all means revise your old Confession of Faith. Lift the hand of persecution from the head of Professor Briggs, and all others like him whose spirit of progressiv reform can no longer be chained down to the nauseous corpse and old gangrened creed of the superstitious ignorant past. Why, sirs, all sensible men and women know at heart, and by their actions so declare, that most religious bodies are composed of either knaves or fools, and they go right along, attending to their business, leaving them to take their own choice in the terms. I repeat, then, by all means revise your Confession of Faith. Hold it up, scrutinize it, gaze upon it, look through it, shake it up as an ague-fit shakes a body filled with malarial poison. Handle it without gloves, and hold it up in all its hideous deformity. Strip it of its old time-worn habiliments of superstition, and tear the mask of synodical approval from its bestial features, and let the light of the nineteenth century shine in upon it and expose its ungainly form, its unseemly, ill-shapen person, in all its naked, defenseless attitudes of monstrous frightfulness.

For the sake of science, philosophy, mechanics, and art. For the sake of the substitution of the machine-shop for the Inquisition. For the sake of labor-saving machinery, that has superseded and taken the place of the rack, the thumbscrew, the fagot, and innumerable other implements of torture invented in the interests of the church by the mighty power of religious brains. For the sake of the memory of nine million people who perished for "witchcraft" at the hands of the Christian church during its unchecked career and the universal demoralization of its bloody reign. For the sake of intellectual courage that finally rose above, broke away from, and bid defiance to the religious monster that was hurled aside, and that stands today in the background like a hungry wolf still licking her bloody jaws. For the sake of the memory of our fathers, Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Patrick Henry, John Adams, and the noble, belied, slandered, patriotic Thomas Paine. For the sake of liberty of speech, freedom of the press, and contempt for religious tyrants, by them overthrown. For the sake of these great men, and their noble Infidel principles, revise your old creed. For the sake of your own claims to intelligence, and your pretended love for the Roman Catholic's murdered Infidel Jesus—the reflected Buddha, the canonized mythical "Prometheus bound." For the sake of the history of the Golden Rule promulgated by the heathen Chinese philosopher Confucius five hundred and fifty-one years before the (so-called) Christian era. For the sake of your ill-timed and most ungracious hatred for your poor old mother, the Catholic church, from which you derived all you know about the old chestnut of "bleeding Calvary"—the "bloody shirt" of Christianity. In short, and in a word, for the sake of a decent respect for common humanity, quit the business about which (if honest) you seem to know so little. Leave Professor Briggs alone, even if your religious stock should depreciate. Cease to be drones, playing about the queen-bees in the great hives of human industry. Go home, go to work, and earn an honest living, and no longer wheedle and cajole the hard-working people out of their scanty earnings by making the poor, ignorant dupes believe you are "divines," and that the old mythical devil would drag all the horny-handed sons of toil down to his hot sulphur furnace if they should fail to contribute liberally, to support you in fine raiment to wear and choice food to eat, so that, as the "lilies of the field," you may "neither toil nor spin," but, like the old Mormon Solomon, sit in the shade and write songs to the "dove's eyes" of the dear sisters, and love-sonnets to the "breasts" of the ewe-lambs; and then, as in the Bible chapter headings, dub these amorous ditties "Christ's Great Love for the Church." And now, finally and lastly, I think it is about time that such things should be stopped. Therefore, since so many seem to be getting to understand the solemn priests' tricks, their dolorous, hypocritical ways, and their cadaverous melancholy looks, I would think the very best thing to do (next to revising the Westminster Confession of Faith) would be to disband. Go home and hide your gruesome features in the scarlet blush of shame, and for a "time, times, and a half time," and for a walk, walks, and a half walk, strike out "over the hills to the poorhouse." Do penance during the remaining portion of your natural lives. Study carefully the Rev. Ex-Moderator Moore's opening sermon, and try and find out why God, the father, did not giv all his children to Christ, since in his sermon the reverend gentleman says, "We do know that all that the father hath given him, shall come unto him." While the rest, I suppose (poor fellows), out of courtesy, and by way of compromise, were given to the devil, to keep peace in the royal family and prevent the latter from raising hades. Now, in conclusion, in the interests of science, peace, and abused humanity, I am, Sincerely yours,

Servetus, Bruno & Co.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Love Them While You Can.

Love your parents and your sisters;
Dearly love your brother, too;
Then, though hill and dale divide you,
You will nothing hav to rue.

For the hand to-day you're holding
To-morrow may be stiff and cold;
And a loving deed of kindness
Far outweighs the purest gold.

Regret, remorse, can ne'er recall
An unkind word once spoken;
But loving kindness unto all
Will prove a lasting token.

Some Thoughts on Religion.

In all ages of the world religious communities hav imagined themselvs to possess in some degree, at least, a knowledge of the supernatural or unknowable, while that which lay within the grasp of the human mind was invariably neglected and ignored.

A few hundred years ago the religious man knew little or nothing of the universe or the laws of nature. He worshiped a personal God about the size and form of himself, clothed him with almighty powers, and declared that he was everywhere present at the same instant of time, upholding and controling the affairs of the boundless universe, of which he supposed this earth was the most important part.

Now, if God is a personal being, it is a manifest absurdity to say that he can be in two separate and distinct places at the same time or that he can transport himself from place to place in an instant. This in all cases is an utter impossibility. Time is essential to all motion, whether rapid or slow. The rays of light emanating from the sun and so essential to the existence of animal and vegetable life occupy time in reaching this earth, and the lightning flash darting across the face of the cloudy sky consumes time in the movement. And further, the word "person" implies limits, form, etc., and must, of necessity, be a compounded substance, and we know that a compounded substance cannot be eternal, because there must hav been a period of time when the simple elements existed before the process of uniting or combining took place. It cannot be said that the ultimate atom or the elementary particles of matter possess form, but by virtue of their own inherent properties they associate, unite, and combine together, resulting in form and organization. They are then no longer simple elements but compounded substances.

The Christian world defines God as a spirit, and a spirit, they say, is an immaterial substance. But we may ask, are all substances not material? Does something exist that is not matter and possess none of its properties or qualities? Different kinds of matter possess different properties, and some properties may be vastly superior to others. But if a chemist were classifying his substances he would not class one as material and another as immaterial because they possessed different properties. He would class all substances as matter however much they might differ in their properties or qualities. If mind or spirit is not matter it certainly must be a property of organized matter. Is it not possible or even probable that intelligence may begin with organization and cease with it? Matter is not a property of anything; it is the thing itself. Destroy matter and you destroy all existence.

If the universe including the planetary system were subjected to the arbitrary will and power of a personal being who could disarrange and change at will the order of nature, everything would be doubtful and uncertain.

Under such circumstances the astronomer could not with any degree of certainty foretell the appearance of a comet or the transit of a planet.

The mariner wishing to visit distant lands and countries would hesitate to leave the shore, because when navigating the desolate, watery waste without a sure and safe guide he would be utterly and hopelessly lost.

But having the utmost confidence in the uniformity of nature's laws he launches out on the almost boundless ocean, well knowing that in due time his guiding star will appear to direct him on his long and pathless journey.

Christians of all denominations assert that God is a personal being; that he made, upholds, and sustains all that exists; that he hears and answers prayers, and is ever ready and willing to comfort the afflicted and distressed. Observation and experience, however, teach us that such is not the case. Prayer may express a wish or desire but it produces no results.

We know that the prayers and supplications of the grief-stricken mother when bending over the prostrate form of her dying child hav been treated with silent contempt, and in the language of the poet, that mother could truly say:

While kneeling o'er that angel form
I saw no ray of light.
Above me was the wrath of God,
Beneath relentless night,
As our first-born with folded hands
Across his snowy breast,
Within his little coffin lay
In death's unending rest.

As if to intensify the pangs of sorrow of the bereaved mother Dr. Isaac Watts, or some other great orthodox poet, in one of his inspired effusions says:

Hell is crammed
With infants damned
Without a day of grace.

Compare the above from Watts with the following quotation from the heretical poet Robert Burns:

She, who her lovely offspring eyes
With tender hopes and fears,
Oh, bless her with a mother's joys,
But spare a mother's tears.

The mother is not only sincere in her supplications but in the anguish of her soul she would sacrifice her own life to spare that of her dying offspring. And we find that this deep-seated maternal affection is not confined to the human race, but embraces the whole animal kingdom. The domestic animals, the wild beasts of the forest, the monsters of the deep, and the feathered tribes of the air are alike subject to its influence.

The mother linnet in the brake
Bewails her ravished young, and the sheep, which is one of the most timid and harmless of animals, will face the dog in defense of her helpless lamb. Prof. John Tyndall says that Bishop Butler "included the whole animal world in his scheme of immortality" (see "Advancement of Science," pp. 51, 52). It is vanity and self-conceit in man that causes him to think that he is a special object of divine favor. Why should he be an exception to universal law? Why not share the fate of all living?

All existing forms of religion are local in their application (none being universal) and indicate the prejudices and superstitions of the people of the particular locality where they are found to exist. It therefore appears that, with few exceptions, the human race are the victims of early religious training and surrounding circumstances. Hence, if the pious Christian had been born and raised under the prevailing religion of the Turkish empire, he would admire the Arabian prophet and despise the humble Nazarene, would venerate the crescent instead of the cross.

Consequently, the reflecting mind is driven to the conclusion that all forms of religion are of human origin; that the orthodox heaven can not be located; that hell has not yet been discovered; and that gods and devils exist in the imagination only. R. S. C.

"Thou Shalt Not Steal."

SCENE.—A woman and her little daughter May. Both shabbily dressed. Some loaves of bread exposed for sale.

May: "The lady in that house wouldn't giv you any work to do, mamma?"

Mother: "No, my dear, she would not employ me, and unless we can soon obtain food, I shall hav no strength to work, and we will both starve."

May: "Oh, mamma, I am so hungry. Why don't you steal a loaf of that bread while the man is away, and no one is looking?"

Mother: "I am astonished to hear you make that speech, May. Better starve than steal, my child, for God will not love us if we take what does not belong to us. Do you not remember that one of the commandments reads: 'Thou shalt not steal?'"

May: "That only means men, mamma, not women. The Bible says women belong to men the same as cattle, or other animals, or things. It is not wicked for animals to steal, and it is not for women."

Mother: "Whatever put that thought into your mind, May?"

May: "Why, I read in my little Testament only this morning, 'Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's ox, nor his ass, nor his wife, nor his man servant, nor his maid servant, nor any thing that is thy neighbor's.' So you see, mamma, you belong to papa, don't you—for I don't expect his being a drunkard makes any difference, or God would not hav turned water into wine for them to drink."

[Man rises from behind the bread counter; smiles.]

Man: "Madam, you hav a bright girl there. [Gives the child two loaves of bread.] Altogether too bright to starve, and she will soon be too bright to believe all that Bible nonsense. Call here every morning, little girl, and you shall hav a loaf of bread."

May: "Thank you, sir."

She Was Following an Example.

Lucy, three years old, was playing one day with a little neighbor about her own age. All went smoothly until some childish dispute arose, and Lucy, regarding her little friend as the aggressor, slapped her soundly once or twice. Her grandmother reproved her for her rudeness and display of temper, but the child clinched all argument on her side by saying, "Why, dan'mudder, dan'mudder, don't you know it does little dirls dood to whip 'em?"

A RESIDENT of Springfield writes to the Union to complain of the unequal distribution by the Springfield city government of such favors as the particular care of streets, the sprinkling of streets, and the granting of liquor licenses. He concludes, after a recital of the facts which he has observed, that the Bowery boy whose teacher asked him what the Golden Rule was was about right when he answered: "Please, mum; them what's got, gits; them what's got nothin', gits left." Probably there are citizens of this city who feel the truth of this.

Correspondence.

INDIAN GROVE, MO., Jan. 7, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first effort at writing for publication. I am fourteen years old. I hav two sisters, both younger than myself. Pa has been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER for several years. He became an Infidel, not to any of the sacred obligations of an honest life, but to the Christian religion, the greatest of all humbugs, by reading the "Holy Queer," with a view to the ministry. I am not much opposed to reading the Bible for those who hav the patience to do so, as I believe a careful perusal of its pages will develop Infidels faster than anything else. Ma is a stanch Liberal. In fact, I doubt if she was ever very sound in the orthodox Christian faith. One of pa's brothers is a firm Liberal. I could name perhaps a score of Liberals within a radius of four or five miles of our home; most of them are above the average for intelligence and uprightness of character, and it is strange, remarkably strange, that so few of them can be induced to take Freethought papers, when they are all, without an exception, perfectly able to do so. This fatal apathy is the bane of coöperativ Freethought associations: if there could only be a little enthusiasm and energy injected into the craniums of these apathetic Liberals sufficient to induce a general concerted action all along the line, the citadel of priestcraft and superstition would soon be razed to the ground and the superstitious slave emancipated and made free. We liv in the country, six miles from any town of importance, and hav no practical knowledge of city life with its superior educational facilities and opportunities for intellectual culture and social enjoyments. However, country life is not so much of an insipid humdrum character as many might suppose. In fact, I sometimes think it just delightful to inhale the pure fresh air laden with the aroma of sweet blooming flowers scattered in rich profusion over the beautiful landscape opening out their brilliant variegated petals to the warm rays of the sun in the green pastures and nestling by the hedges along the highways, or filling balmy air with their sweet fragrance from the hawthorn or the apple-tree boughs, just as nature intended they should grow. There are many features that beautify home and make country-life attractiv and pleasant, that I hav not the space to mention, as I hav already, perhaps, presumed too much on your indulgence in writing at such length; but I must not close without saying that the Children's Corner is a treasure to us all. Pa and Ma always take pleasure in listening to me or sister Annie, as we read its many short but very suggestiv letters.

Very respectfully, MOLLIE WALTON.

[The above bright and interesting letter indicates more than average ability, and we shall hope to hear from Mollie often. Her reason is sound and practical, and she will always be welcome to the Corner.—ED. C. C.]

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.
A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.

News of the Week.

THE Sacred College at Rome will probably raise to the rank of saint Elizabeth Bichier des Ages, for several pious deeds, chief of which is resistance of the order by the committee of the French Revolution that she, on account of her great beauty, impersonate the goddess of Reason.

THE Swedish parliament has forbid Catholics to proselyte.

IN Japan ten Catholics represent Christian dis tricts in parliament.

THE pope has ordered that all newspaper comments on his encyclical be sent him.

SOUTH AMERICAN republics are attracting immigrants by gifts of land and promises of employment and loans.

THE grip has killed hundreds of thousands in China. The Chinese made processions and beat drums to scare off the evil spirit.

MISS JEANNETTE HINE, of Northville, Conn., hanged herself, believing that she had committed the unpardonable sin and must expiate it thus.

ST. ALOYSIUS'S Catholic church at Covington, Ky., on the 1st received a mark of divine displeasure in the shattering of its clock by lightning.

THE pope requested Cardinal Manning to increase the Peter's pence from Great Britain, as an inquiry into the finances of the papal household reveals a shortage of 10,000,000 francs.

IN a recent storm at Norwich, Conn., electricity wrought damage in many curious ways, and exhibited a partiality for church steeples that plainly showed the direction of divine displeasure.

THE "sovereign pontiff" has decided to "place the Free State of Congo under the protection of the Blessed Virgin." For this important service he will be formally thanked by the Belgian king, protector of Congo.

A CONFLICT impending between Irish and German—or as they call themselvs, English-speaking and German-speaking—priests in Wisconsin, promises to be the most bitter one in the Catholic church in this country.

CATHOLICS report that while from 1850 to 1860 the wealth of the country increased 125 per cent, the wealth of their church increased 139 per cent; from 1860 to 1870 the wealth of the country increased 86 per cent, that of their church 123.

AT Emory, Tex., Henry Johnson, who murdered an old man for money, was hanged on the 8th. He embraced religion and was baptized. To his spiritual adviser on the scaffold he said of his courage: "I learned it from the Book which you gave me. It said: 'Let not your heart be troubled, neither be afraid.'"

UNDER the radical and Freethinking men at the head of the Mexican government, commerce is increasing, railroads are being built, manufactures and mines are being developed, public works hav been undertaken, order is better maintained, government credit is high, improved systems of education hav been adopted in many states, and bull-fighting has been abolished.

THE archbishop of Aix, France, drew up a catechism for a club of Catholic Workmen, in which occur these questions and answers: "Is it a duty to vote at elections?" "Yes." "Is it a sin not to vote rightly at elections?" "Yes, because in not voting rightly at elections we choose for our governors men who are enemies of God and of religion, and consequently of their country."

IN a suit brought by Sir Gordon Cumming for the alleged libel that he cheated at a certain game of cards, the prince of Wales, who had been one of the players, was a witness, and was handled freely by lawyers. It transpired that he travels with a card-playing equipment in his luggage. The game was played for high stakes, and, being baccarat, was itself forbidden by law; thus we see a future king breaking his own laws. The suit was lost, and Gordon-Cumming has been dismissed from the army. If he did cheat, as many believe, the prince, it is thought, should be blamed for not denouncing him. Royalty is suffering; republicans are jubilant, saying that Edward VIII. will never reign.

Gems of Thought.

I ONCE had faith. But when I came to know something, as soon as I began to reason, which occurred early in life, at the age of thirteen, I found my faith attacked and that it staggered. . . . It is said that I am a papist. I am nothing.—Napoleon Bonaparte.

IT is time that nations should be rational, and not be governed like animals for the pleasure of their riders.—Paine.

IF every copy of the Bible were destroyed, all that is good in that book would be reproduced in a single day.—Ingersoll.

THE doctrin of eternal punishment has been the warrant for torture and massacre all through the ages; for may not men do just a little of what God does a good deal?—Robt. C. Adams.

CHRISTIANITY, like all other religions, has been powerless to resist the ceaseless tendency in nature and in man to change. In practice, Christianity to-day is the very antithesis of what it was in the time of Jesus.—Arthur B. Moss.

IT would be no overstatement to say that for nearly six hundred years the priests of the Galilean miracle-monger persuaded a plurality of the Caucasian nations to risk their lives in defense of dogmas the mere profession of which would start a modern Christian on a galloping trip to the next lunatic asylum. — Professor Oswald.

ALL the persecutors declare against each other mortal war, while the philosopher, oppressed by them all, contents himself with pitying them.—Voltaire.

DEVOTION is a disease of the imagination contracted in infancy.—D'Holbach.

I HARBOR for good or bad, I permit to speak at every hazard,
Nature without check with original energy.
—Walt Whitman.

ONE who surpasses his fellow-citizens in virtue is no longer a part of the city. Their law is not for him, since he is a law to himself.—Aristotle.

THE monastic system greatly diminished the productiv energies of society by consigning immense numbers to idleness, and by diffusing a respect for idleness through the whole community.—Lecky's History of Rationalism.

IN the present age the theological part of Christianity is being gradually less and less insisted upon, while its moral part, which can be supported by science, is being more and more depended upon as its essential and permanent element.—Wilson.

THE time approaches when men must take their choice between quiescent, immobil faith and ever-advancing Science—faith, with its medieval consolations, Science, which is incessantly scattering its material blessings in the pathway of life, elevating the lot of man in this world, and unifying the human race.—Draper.

IT is only the God of theology whose vengeance never sleeps or ends with any generation; whose wrath is fresh every day, and his hell eternal. Only when man has had his human heart dexterously removed, and has become the changeling of some vampire phantasm he coweringly adores, could he be the instrument of the crimes Christianity has committed against humanity.—Moncure D. Conway.

WHEN the charge of persecution was applied to the ruling party in the Reformation, not by its enemies, but by its own offspring; when the sects denounced by that party said, "We are doing just what you did; we separate ourselvs from you, just as you separated yourselvs from the church of Rome," this ruling party were still more at a loss to find an answer, and frequently the only answer they had to giv was an increase of severity. —Guizot's History of Civilization.

WHEN the doctrin of Evolution is looked at in its moral aspect, as one which leads man ever onward and upward, and which encourages his brightest anticipations of truth over error, of knowledge over ignorance, of right over wrong, of good over evil, who shall presume to say that the convergence of all these great lines of thought, each of them the resultant of the patient toil of a whole army of scientific workers, is a fact of no account?—W. B. Carpenter.

THE RISING TIDE OF SKEPTICISM.

Notes and Clippings.

IT was a favorit saying of Erasmus Darwin that "Unitarianism is a feather-bed to catch a falling Christian."

"AFTER his supper of stolen beef Mr. Stanley read his Bible as usual," is a sentence in the latest anti-Stanley book.

TIMES are changing, says an exchange, to such an extent that it will only be a few years until parents will be sent to bed for talking back.

"ALAS!" cries Pastor Rossiter of New York city, preaching on "The American Sabbath, "alas! some people seem to think it was made for pleasure."

THE Unitarian Christian Register says: "Dr. Briggs never uttered a more wholesome truth than when he classed bibliolatry with mariolatry and other superstitions. It is not the strength, but it is the utter weakness, of the Protestant church to maintain the dogma of biblical infallibility. The fact of infallibility, whether it concerns the pope or the Bible, is one that can be easily tested. The Bible can no more stand the test than can the pope."

A RAILROAD blacklist proscribing persons who hav used passes dishonestly, fell into the hands of a Pittsburgh Dispatch reporter, who says: "Clergymen are not exempt. It would certainly make a preacher blush with shame to see his name and residence published with such remarks after it as 'alters and loans one-half fare permits,' 'changed a permit to include his wife,' 'willfully allowing his half-fare permit to be used by another,' 'sells his reduced rate tickets to scalpers,' etc."

THE unfinished churches of Granada, says a Nicaraugua letter, are the largest buildings, and the most interesting, perhaps. One of them is on the corner of the plaza and the street from the pier. It looks more like a ruin than a new church—in fact, is at once a ruin and a beginning. The greatest cathedral of Nicaraugua stood there till one day an earthquake shook the country and the people fled, praying, to the church. Then another shock followed and tumbled the walls on those who prayed, killing hundreds.

TWO weeks ago the trustees of the Greenlawn cemetery at Columbus, O., refused the old Union soldiers of the county the privilege of unveiling on Sunday, July 5th, the $10,000 monument in their graveyard—a monument erected by the Franklin county taxpayers to commemorate the heroism of the boys in blue sleeping in that burying-ground. It was, says the Columbus Post, the dirtiest, lowest insult ever offered in this country to the veterans of our land; and the Post adds: "If the Greenlawn trustees don't soon hear from the old veterans and workingmen of this city, the Post will be wonderfully surprised."

THE higher biblical students of Germany, remarks the Sun, whose methods our progressiv theologians profess to follow, got rid of the devil, or thought they had got rid of him, long ago. They hav shown that he is not referred to in the Apostles' creed, and hav striven to prove that they are able to giv a new meaning to the allusions to him in the scriptures. Why hav the American progressivs kept quiet on this question? So far as we hav noticed, only one of them has taken it up, and it is his opinion that he has been successful in abolishing the devil. They will very soon be compelled to declare their opinions on the devil question under the higher criticism which they uphold.

"I SHOULD say," remarked an expert, "that there are at least fifty thousand cranks in the city of New York, and I think they should start a newspaper to be called the Crank. It is proper to define a crank as a person who differs in his opinions or conduct from the majority of other persons. We used to say that a short-haired woman or a long-haired man was a crank. There are cranks in religion and in politics and in style. Some men talk like cranks but do not act that way. I know a man who was called a crank yet made a fortune in business. A great many of the wise men of the world hav been regarded as cranks. Some people are cranky at one time but not at another. Few men are cranks before thirty or after fifty. A crank may know a good deal. Few of the men who are looked on as cranks ever go to the madhouse; and that is a fact."—Sun.

IN taking steps toward the perfection of man, writes Edgar Fawcett to the New York Herald, "comirg generations hav many fallacies to forget. For example, mentioning two or three of these fallacies quite at random, I should say that our descendants must cease to connect morality with religion; that they must cease to regard the worship of an unknown, unseen, and unimaginable deity as in the least way important to the human race; that they must strip national separativness entirely from the problem of coming civilization; that they must cultivate the clear seen requirements of a common language; that they must realize the individual odium shadowing each member of society who stores wealth merely to hav it said of him that he possesses more than is needful to his ordinary comforts, for in this bloodless and altruistic way I believe can the terrible differences of classes alone be settled."

A PETITION was circulated in Colfax to the effect that all restaurants, stores, news-stands, and livery stables should be kept closed all day on Sundays. They are getting awfully moral across the sand-ridge, comments the Prairie City, Ia., News. If they would do that it would kill Colfax "deader'n a snail." The Clipper says in regard to it: "When it gets so that the worn and weary merchant, clerk, lawyer, teacher, railroad man, or what not, who comes to Colfax for an over-Sunday rest cannot buy a cigar, get a newspaper, a dish of ice-cream, or a glass of lemonade, or hire a carriage for a ride over the hills to enjoy the cool breezes on Sunday—when this time arrives the sexton, whose salary is collected each Sunday at the churches, will complain to the preacher, who does much of his work on Sunday, that it is a very slim picking. When the churches and preachers are compelled to invoke the aid of the law to compel people to be good, according to their way of thinking, they acknowledge a weakness in their cause. Laws are not made to compel people to be good; but to restrain them from doing wrong, and for this reason the Sunday observance law will always be ignored when it conflicts with the convenience of the public."

Jehovian Christianity.

None but cowards refuse to read, think, and act.

There are in the United States about eighty thousand human drones, who, so far as I know, in order to preserve and prolong their own lives, to liv without dirty work, to evade pain, to enjoy themselvs at others' expense, busy themselvs an hour or two each Sunday in making statements which common sense and the history of this world do not corroborate. It is possible that some of these drones, having received only a theological education, are unacquainted with exact facts, and are not guilty of intentional misrepresentation. Supposed truths hav been retained for centuries to be finally demolished. "As the world grows older it grows wiser." Those of the drones who are hypocrits, that is, those who know themselvs, are no real benefit to mankind, are hellish fools, for, although seemingly they will ever hav an easy time, in reality it is not always so. There are deadly microbes everywhere, and these little fellows shun a clergyman no more than an Atheist. The parsons who hav sense enough to be hypocrits should cease their useless occupation and attempt to find a positiv microbe exterminator. That class of drones who really are sincere we regard as merely simple fools. I will ask a question: Is the Reverend Talmage ignorant or a hypocrit? I can not but think that with millions of facts testifying to the falseness of orthodox Jehovian Christianity, only ignorance can honestly profess that religion. The universe, excepting some humanity, is one vast refutation of orthodoxy.

Most men are so constituted that the moment one becomes a mental antagonist, that moment the one loses the ordinary friendship of the other. Too many are mental idlers. The mind of the average man "may be likened unto" a vast field, sown thick with ignorant weeds and thin with the wheat of intelligence. Disturb him not, and he remains a friend indifferent. Differ with him regarding theology, and a feeling of holy horror, of pueril piety, and divine disgust, which seldom does not go onward to malignant enmity, soon imprisons his mind.

This is an age of investigation and rage for controversy. There are many, though comparativly few, who demand reasons. They ponder, and are not satisfied with pious and arrogantly presumptiv assertion without proof. These persons benefit the intellectual world by their presence. Those who swallow the gibberish of the Talmages with "open-mouthed credulity" are not "in it"—the intellectual world. Truth seldom hurts the feelings of an honest man. Truth, though uttered by a murderer, though found associated with the vile and corrupt, is just as valuable as a truth proclaimed by an Abraham Lincoln.

The Christians tell us, No, it is blasphemy to speak our Infidel thoughts of Jehovah, but of Confucius, Buddha, Mohammed, the savage's stone deity, and the Indian's great spirit, we may discourse freely. How do Christian believers know it is not sinful to speak disrespectfully of these impostors? Do all followers of Christ investigate all the religions which disgrace mankind? Of course, if Christianity is the only true religion the remainder are a nuisance. Experience has taught me that ninety-nine per cent of the Christ-worshipers hav an amount of knowledge appertaining to other religions which may be represented thus: 0. The big majority of believers know nothing about the creeds, etc., of the churches other than those of which they are members, and little of their own. They hav seen some one going and hav followed without question. Such flocks of Christian lambs remind me of the flying harrow, with one dissimilarity. In one case the leading goose knows the goal. In the other, the shepherd knows nothing whatever of the destiny. The layman who investigates all religious nuisances becomes a believer in none. Parsons hav been known to do thus. For instance, Pentecost. The good book says, "A prudent man concealeth knowledge." If this is so, the parsons are the most prudent men this side the walls of the "eternal city." Who ever heard of a pulpiteer saying, "My friends, there are other religions than ours. I beseech you to critically examin them all. In the courts of this country these other religions could prove their divine origin equally as well as we could ours. And, O my hearers, although the Bible is God's true word, it contains hundreds of self-contradictions. I advise you all to inspect these infinit inconsistencies with great care to see if you really do believe all you unknowingly say you do. And may the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost aid and comfort you in these investigations, which will take you years to make—that is, if you look up all the evidence on all sides, and this is what you should do in order to be Christlike. For I do verily think if Jesus was here now he would giv these Infidels and impostors a hearing, and surely produce the now absent, convincing Christian evidence. However, dear audience, if you prefer, 'I even I' will take a vacation for a year or two and rake over these other so-claimed divine affairs and determin for you as to their alleged truth." "So mote it be." "The simple believeth every word."

Some believers think when one conceives that God is nowhere, then that one is prepared to commit all manner of crime. Such believers judge only from their own feelings and they had better continue believing. Some strong-minded men who are tender-hearted hav at times in the presence of animals suffering a feeling of delight come over them. They immediately banish this sensation. May some not be able to exile this feeling? Does it not account for the aptness with which some people believe in hell? It is a significant fact that our criminals are mostly believers. The feeling alluded to—said to be prompted by the devil—is probably a reversion to some very ancient savage animal progenitor of man. If the truths of heredity were more fully and generally understood the escape from pain, civilization, would be much easier.

The fancy tabernacles appeal to the truly vulgar, not to the thinker. A semi-brainless youth is imposed upon by elegance. He mistakes pomp and ceremony for argument. The fact that Christianity now exists is taken for proof that it is a divine institution. And those eminent Christian gentlemen. Does not the Hon. Mr. H. belong to the church? And that drunkard who sweats and toils in pain that Hon. H. shall be honorable is an Infidel? Yes, but that cashier dwelling in Montreal is a Christian. The church now has plenty of arguments which Christ lacked.

What earthly benefit does a poor laborer derive from a prayer-meeting where he hears his earthly boss ask our heavenly boss to "shower blessings on us all," and knowing his earthly boss alone receives the blessings in the shape of elegant residences, magnificent vehicles, and all luxuries; and knowing that only with the eyes of faith can it be seen that "our heavenly father" and not the poor laborer is the giver of these blessings? The dirty workmen are the makers of the blessings which are called down from heaven. I listen to believers who claim the Lord Jesus has cured them of disease. Well, what if he did? Did not the same Jesus invent the disease and cause the afflicted to hav it? Think of all the sickness and suffering in this world which Jesus does not alleviate. Think of wars, hurricanes, pestilences, famin, and floods, and then think of a believer who claims to be cured by the Lord of some slight ailment. I hesitate not to say such people are engulfed in infinit ignorance and sacred selfishness. It is cheerfully admitted they are sincere. So are Catholics, Mohammedans, and Mormons. So are savages, and so am I. Let us sting them into a sense of their insignificance. We substitute Come to justice for "Come to Jesus."

The Bible of Christians, they say, is the voice of God to man. If so, what part of our bodies is this voice addressed to? The brain or vermiform appendage? What good is the brain if not to think? Has not an Infidel as good a right to speak his mind concerning this alleged word of God as a believer? The usual answer by Christians to the last question is, "No." Christians say, "Read our holy scrap-book, but if you conclude it is false keep your thought to yourself. For if you speak, you will hurt our feelings, and compel us to secure ourselvs by shouting 'Blasphemy' (in the good old days we would hav scorched you), as we cannot answer your arguments with reason. Faith alone furnishes us reply." The Wanamakers and Talmages think only of their own feelings. They cannot understand how they insult sensible beings by telling them they and their innocent children are on the road to hell. Let us ascertain what favorable texts Infidels can find in the Bible to prove their right to blaspheme—speak. I find in Judges xix a narrativ of slimy obscenity and demoniacal revenge. The last verse of this chapter reads: "And it was so, that all that saw it said, There was no such deed done nor seen from the day that the children of Israel came up out of the land of Egypt unto this day; consider of it, take advice, and speak your mind." I hav spoken mine. Now let some parson speak his and illustrate the divine mystery it embraces. Who is it that is meant to speak their mind? The pope says it is for him alone "to consider of it," "take advice" (of the Holy Ghost), and speak his mind. The Talmages insist they hav the same privileges as the pope; and as for myself, having been entreated to read the holy bosh, I hav concluded to speak my mind, although I hav taken no advice of pope, priest, nor parson. If we can speak our mind regarding one chapter of God's holy botch, why not of all?

Let us search the botch for an unpunished blasphemer—one who laughed at God. Genesis xvii is very important, and informs us that when Abram was ninety-nine years old the Lord God appeared unto him, altered his name to Abraham, etc., and promised him a son; verse 17 divulges that, "Then Abraham fell upon his face, and laughed, and said in his heart, Shall a child be born unto him that is a hundred years old? And shall Sarah, that is ninety years old, bear?" You see Abe had so little confidence in God that he scoffed at God while God was talking to him. Why hav not Infidels, with whom God has never condescended to parley, as good a right to speak their honest thought about this ghost as Abe, who knew and conversed with God? Is it not a little singular that those old patriarchal cusses whom God used to talk with, had so little faith in him? Abe appears to hav been a sort of Infidel, for he was disposed to limit the capability of his Lord. The Lord, however, did not rebuke Abe for being honest for laughing; he did not utter "the malicious cry of blasphemy." According to the Bible chapter just considered, it seems Abe knew as much as the ordinary man relating to maternity. Possibly he was acquainted with some sexual laws. Is it possible in those days men lived to be nine hundred years old? If so, why not a corresponding period of productivness? Was not man by God told to "multiply and replenish the earth?"

In the sepulcher of emblem, confined by the coffin of parable, from the shroud of allegory, has been snatched a mummified fact—viz., according to Gen. xvii, 17, men in Abe's day were procreativly useless for a period of their lives amounting to hundreds of years. O Methusaleh, what a desirable Catholic priest you would hav made for the last nine hundred years of your life! Well, Abe, the original blasphemer snickered at the Holy Ghost, and as a word against this ghost is not "forgiven in this world or in the world to come," poor Abe is now in everlasting fire. Let us further seek for Bible right to blaspheme. "Come let us reason together," says Isa. i, 18. Not faith together. What does dear Paul say? "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." If this superb saint intends us to prove all things by faith, why do not Christians entirely discard reason and rely on faith for proof in all matters? When an arithmetical calculation is performed, let us figure according to some faith rule. Let us eat faith. Let faith govern all things, or else let us reason in dealing with theological humbuggery. Let us now speak our mind of the Christian religion of Jehovah; let us ask for proof of all things concerning this side-show religion.

They tell us a self-creativ being named God, Lord God, and Jehovah, manufactured everything seen, felt, heard, tasted, and smelled by man. That this gentleman having a multiplicity of cognomens created all from nothing. That there was a time when time was not, when space was not, and when matter was not, and that the great being who made himself, also made time, space, and matter. They allege that Jehovah made the first man from the dust of the earth, and original woman from that man's ribs. They assert this primal pair were placed in a garden called Eden, the whereabouts of which no one knows, and were told they could eat anything growing therein except the fruit of one particular tree—that of knowledge of good and evil—a tree which now is a member of an extinct species. Well, the Christians claim that one day while the Lord God was away from the celebrated garden aforesaid, a snake came waltzing along on his back, head, or tail and engaged in conversation with the female occupant of that garden. Now, they say this snake persuaded the woman to taste the fruit of that forbidden tree, that she in turn coaxed her spouse to also eat, and that this maddened their maker—the Lord God—to such an extent that he ordered the enticing serpent to nevermore waltz as hereinbefore stated, but to, in the future evermore, crawl on his belly. But this was not enough to appease the anger of a just and merciful creator. He was not satisfied with cursing the snake by compelling him to adopt a locomotion which is apparently the only one a snake could hav. God must hav more revenge, so he says to the gardener: "You'll hav to sweat hereafter for your grub; I've quit manufacturing Edens for you." God also cursed the woman, and all the curses are said to apply to us of to-day. They tell us "in Adam's fall we sinned all," and I must acknowledge that the Christian theory of this world's creation and the fall of man is the most reasonable, plausible, and sensible theory without proof I am aware of. Well, the Talmages tell us that God the unchangeable, after cursing, damning, flooding, and devastating the earth for four thousand years after Eve ate the apple, finally changed his mind, concluded that man needed a "pick-me-up" after his fall, and about one thousand eight hundred years ago gave his only son, who was old as his dad, that all who believe in him may be saved thereby from the fellow with cloven feet and pitchfork in hand who is especially pleased to toss human beings into a "lake of fire and brimstone," located God only knows where. Well, this only child, after carpentering and meandering around near a place called Jerusalem and showing himself a very clever prestidigitateur, is at last nailed to a cross (by a people whom his father had taken especial care of for all preceding time), whereon he asks himself why he has forsaken himself. But in the language of Voltaire, "God murdered God to appease the wrath of God."

Let us follow St. Paul's advice and see what Jesus saved us from.

Christ plagiarized the rule of Confucius. The Golden Rule of which we hear so many boasts was given by Confucius 500 BC, in these words: "What I do not wish men to do to me, that I also wish not to do to men." What wonderful faculty was required to originate this rule? According to the Talmages people living previous to Christ's coming knew not enough to be decent, for they had not heard of this rule. It seems to me if many had not followed this good rule previous to the birth of Jesus he would hav been born into an empty world. Even savage tribes would perish unless they slightly acted in accordance with the Golden Rule. Is it observed and practiced to its fullest extent even among Christians? The bare rule is of small consequence in the hands of savages. It is not enough to tell people to be good. We need to know what good is. It is of no earthly use to giv rules consisting of meaningless words. Christ told folks to be good and forgot to say it was wrong for them to enslave their fellow-men. Instead of juggling with water, fig trees, and fishes, why did not Jesus Christ say: "Thou shalt not suffer the sale of men even if they are black-skinned." Instead of viewing all the kingdoms of this earth from an "exceeding high mountain," why did not Jesus Christ say: "When America is discovered do not ravish the Mexican and Peruvian empires, nor murder the Indians even if they do not believe in me." When J. C. was tempted on that "exceeding high mountain," does anyone—even Talmage—suppose he saw these kingdoms? I understand our present postmaster-general hies himself from Washington home to Philadelphia every week to teach a Bible class, and I desire him to send me a postal card stating where that "exceeding high mountain" can be found. Instead of promising those who believe in him that they can without fear of death gobble prussic acid, why did not Jesus say, "Thou shalt not drink whisky, which destroys morality, curses mankind, and prevents people from keeping my rule."

A Christian's nearest sensible answer to this last question can be that as he reads not of whisky in the holy scraps and only of wine, it was not necessary for Christ to speak against a non-existing evil. If, as Mohammed did, our savior had cursed strong drink, he would hav been quite a savior. In place of telling believers they can quack with a new tongue, why did not Christ furnish reason to persuade Infidels? Instead of promising the faithful they can, minus harm, jam their fingers in an unfanged rattlesnake's mouth, why did not Jesus establish his doctrin so that it would be clearly discerned, thus saving the lives of millions who hav been slaughtered in his name, for his sake? Perhaps in this case Jesus meant dead serpents, for he said not which. Instead of giving believers power to cast out devils, why did not Jesus say devils are imaginary, therefore, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to die." Instead of saying, "Ram your hand on a leprosy sufferer and he will recover," why did not God's only progeny tell of vaccination, anesthetics, the present science of surgery, and giv a sure remedy to destroy microbes, which the genius of the nineteenth century human saviors has proved the cause of all dreadful diseases?

Of course the Christian's only reply is that these wonderful promises of their savior were intended to be fulfilled only in the days of the ignorant apostles; and to this I retort that the necessity of belief was also only intended for those days. Christ promises great capabilities for those who believe, but I fail to find believers more capable than Infidels. I hav known Christians with faith the size of that "exceeding high mountain;" but they were totally unable to miraculously move even a mustard-seed. The truth is, Jesus Christ of theology never existed. Volney, in "The Ruins," has completely proved my assertion. They say Jesus, after preaching for a short period of his life—and that consisted, I insist, chiefly in telling folks to do right and not what was right—was killed by Jews "whom the great Jehovah had failed to civilize." Knowing the fearful curse of slavery, and the destruction of cities which would ensue in after years; knowing that hundreds of thousands of helpless beings would, after his ascent to heaven, accused of witchcraft, be butchered by his followers; knowing that his cruel creed—the necessity of belief—would originate all manner of diabolical devices to torment and kill thousands of honest heretics; knowing that in America millions would in futurity perish on battle-fields, languish in prison, and that her widows and orphans would be "given to drink vinegar and gall;" and all as a result of the teaching of his father; knowing of all this reserved for the future, why did Jesus Christ say while on his cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Had he indeed been a God, he would hav known he had failed to perform his duty, had omitted to do what even his most villainous follower to-day would hav done. Instead of saying, "Father, forgiv them," why did he not say, "Father, forgiv me?" What did Jesus Christ die to redeem? God's ways are mysterious, is the parson's only reply; and I then ask, What are parsons being paid for? For what purpose are they educated?

If immortality is a fact, it is a fact, even if the Bible is a mass of lies and infinit absurdities. The hope of life after death victuals in luxury a multitude of loafers—parsons.

The system of human slavery which Jesus took particular pains with "exceeding great joy" not to discourage, and the belief in witchcraft—demoniacal possession—which he advocated, hav, in partnership with his needless necessity of belief, caused nearly every war in Christendom, and spurted out the life-blood of innumerable millions of human redeemers. But, you say, the sacrifice of all these redeemers is not as great, nor deserves the praise that a God who cuts his own throat does. Now, Christ positivly knew all the ecstatic joy awaiting his advent in heaven. He knew also of anesthetics. How do you know he really suffered? Could he not dispel pain with a wish? Could he not appear to suffer excruciating agony and yet that same moment be in the midst of joyousness? Would it not hav been rather superfluous for him to actually suffer? Now, do you not desire to believe that, after all, Jesus did not suffer any pain? Certainly he who was brutal sufficient to refuse to prevent future misunderstandings of the Holy Botch, was crafty enough not to hav experienced the least bad feeling on that cross.

Here is the opposit of Jesus. Giordano Bruno announced to an ignorant Christian horde his honest mind. For this he was imprisoned seven weary years in dungeons built by Christ's vicar on earth. He was finally burnt. Before being sacrificed this human redeemer was offered his life to recant. Bruno did not believe in the divine demon or merciless mysteries of Christianity. No gates of heaven were open for him. No golden streets to traverse or heavenly music to charm were in the great unknown for Bruno. Did he recant? Did he become a hypocrit? Life is sweet. This was the only life for Bruno. He was placed at the stake. Fagots were piled around him and lighted by the followers of Christ. Slowly the torturing heat commenced its fatal mission. Bruno's sufferings were horrible. He could not banish pain. He knew he was forsaken, but he asked not why. He knew. He knew an ignorant world of Christ's fanatical demons had repelled the truth. Not, however, the truth of Christ. The truth of nature. Thus did honest Bruno die, and to candidly express my honest mind I must say no God could equal this in sacrifice. Jehovah once loved the stink of burning flesh. See Ex. xxix, 18. Can it be possible a momentary reversion to that former taste returned to God while his honest and perfectly consistent disciples were roasting Giordano Bruno? Did Christ in heaven shed tears while Bruno burnt? Why did he not then redeem the world from misery?

All animal life has sense of pain. "Think how life devours life," how "every drop of water is a battle-field." How every respiration may graft within our bodies the living seeds of death. How every footstep in a flowery field destroys intelligence. Think of wars which draw the life-blood from the side of nations. Think of epidemics. Think of all crime and misery now existing. Of barbaric Russia's Siberian exiles, of cannibals. Of the one billion three hundred million persons now living who are bound for hell. Think of the sacrifices of thinkers. Of Bruno, Servetus, and all the martyrs. In the face of this evidence what idiocy for me to worship a savior who saves only a few from the violent vengeance of a good God; a "light of the world" whose light is the glare of hell, and whose terms of salvation are the frightful necessity of believing what my brain belies. It has been said that "disease is the natural state of a Christian."

Here is Christianity: 7 x 2 = 14,000,000.

Let us hear no more of one who saves from an imaginary fire beings whom the one created and destined for that fire. For the "light of the world" so managed matters when he was here that after his flash it remained for Infidels to furnish the truly needful light. In one respect Christ was a prototype of our parsons. He said "do right," but failed to say what was right. Jehovah in Eden and Christ in Palestine were the same. They in either place gave the people very little valuable information. Again the question is put, For what earthly use did that Nazarene peasant liv a few short years in obscurity and perish on a cross? A complete analysis of this subject discloses that the so-called redeemer originated only a single new idea, and that is the desirability of believing in him to escape his savage brutality—eternal punishment.

Brother Talmage, shall we unite with you in prayer?

EDWIN N. BEECHER.

The Agnostics and Spiritualists: Their Political Relation.

Recent articles in the leading organs of both these parties, illiberal in their spirit toward each other, suggest the remark that their differences in aim are not incompatibilities or rational motivs of hostility such as are evinced by the Ella Gibson "Brotherhood of Moralists" and M. L. Salter. The latter recognizes the usefulness of Spiritualists in directing attention to magnetic and psychic faculties previously either ignored or vilified; but he does not allude to the fact more important to us, that as shown in recent persecutions, Agnostics and Spiritualists bear in common the brunt of church hatred, of which general and state governments are the executiv organs. It is in fact a war to the death, a war for the spoils, that is waged against us because we, both in different ways, represent the principle of liberty; Agnostics by denying biblical authority, Spiritualists by superseding it in their democracy of new revelations. Political sympathies ought to unite us against church organizations and especially against their alliance with the state. Without taking up the cudgels for Spiritualism, whose evidences hav not come home to me, I submit that for the scientists and serious thinkers who profess belief in them, they are very different from those phenomena of the "circle" and of hypnotism, which Mr. Salter adduces. Even if the term hypnotism, from upnos, sleep, could embrace them, it would not be what is understood by that term. That is not understood of revelations by dreams of important facts known to no living person and which continue beyond the grave the practical sympathies of blood relationship. Take such a case as has been recently cited, of an English gentleman whose dream not only anticipated the cablegram from India, of his brother's death, but acquainted him with persons and places as well as events, set before him as upon the boards of a theater, and which and whom he recognized and verified on going to India to settle up his brother's estate. "Antichrist," I see, recognizes the prevalence of Agnosticism among Spiritualists.

Sympathy among the inquirers at a circle, or rather synergy of intelligent aims, is rationally requisit for intelligent communications; but those practically conversant with the formation of circles will probably scout as absurd the idea of their general and collectiv hypnotization. Let us not break the back of this Spiritual camel by an overcharge. What has hypnotism to say to an apparition seen by several disconnected parties at different hours and places on the same day, as in the recent case published by the New York Herald, of a Congressman in New Jersey, whose will had been violated by his relativs in the disposal of his property? The witnesses here were not interested parties and were not in sympathetic contact with each other. There was no question of magnetism. The ghost, though in this case a modern Congressman, is a customary visitor since history began to be written as well as among peoples who write none. It is not dependent on mediums, or circles, or magnetizers, and seems to be apparent to dogs and horses as well as to mankind. Modern Spiritualism only pretends to be a particular method of inviting its appearances and conversation.

Hypnotism in the free untechnical sense warranted by its derivation from upnos, sleep, extends to all revelations in dreams whatever may be thought of spirit agency in them. There is another hypothesis, viz, that of intelligence in the collectiv life of our planet, by communion with which the individual may become spontaneously conscious of whatever exists upon the earth without limitation by its special senses though otherwise only within the range of its intelligence.

This is not claiming anything transcendent, since many beasts and birds are proved to possess a coplanetary sense of places and directions, by which they find their way home from distant points, and even across oceans.

1. When renewing get a friend to subscribe and thus save a half dollar apiece.

2. Get your newsdealer to display it on his stand or in his shop window. Be sure that he displays the pictures.

3. Get your newsdealer to keep in stock one or more copies, with your guarantee to take off his hands at the end of the week any that remain unsold. If he exhibits them the pictures alone will sell them.

4. Take a few extra copies and circulate them among your acquaintances. On your request, we will send you back-number sample copies free.

5. Leave a copy occasionally where it will be picked up—in the train, in the factory, in the meeting-room, in the cigar store, in the barber-shop. Leave it picture-side up.

6. Keep in your pocket some of our cheap tracts, and when convenient hand one to a friend.

7. Get a new subscriber by persuading some friend to take it.

Is it or is it not true that there is an eternal hell? The horrible doctrin must be abandoned publicly and frankly by the churches who hav hitherto preached it, and who must bear all the consequences which will follow its retraction, or else it must be admitted to form a portion of the church's creed. . . . It is vain and untrue to dissemble the fact of this doctrin's legitimate place in the faith of Europe, and of the gloom it has shed over the millions of souls who partially receive it, and the agonies and madness it has caused to the thousands who hav more vividly grasped its meaning.—F. Cobbe.

Ignorance, Superstition, and Persecution.

The above heading is the expression of a most unholy trinity, little less than three in one and one in three. Likewise are they so joined together that no man may put them asunder. Ignorance is the hot-bed of superstition, which is the strait and narrow way to persecution. The brain starved into a famin—worse than Tanner's forty-day siege—is crazed to madness and seizes its own kind to devour. Here we hav wholesale barbarism and downright cannibalism. Reputation, liberty, and life were devoured by these human vultures. But two events in the religious history of our race will be needed to prove this—the Spanish Inquisition and the St. Bartholomew massacre. Like hungry wolves, this mass of ignorance and superstition glutted upon the rights, reputation, and lives of their fellow-citizens. The butchery came neither by chance or providence. It was no more than the legitimate progeny of ignorance and Bible superstition. The same wretched sire and dam would to-day bring forth the same slaughter, but for the power of science and the valor of freemen achieved by the thinkers of our age. Our heroes in the climax of human life and rights, say to the rabbis, popes, and all manner of priests, Thus far thou hast gone, but no further shalt thou go. The tortures of the Inquisition, the blood of the St. Bartholomew, the banishment and hanging of the Baptists, and the burning of the New England witches must suffice for your maw of ignorance and superstition. The thousands upon thousands victimized upon the bloody altar of your bloody faith must not be repeated in our age of harmony. As the time of your silly, sickening miracles has, with a few exceptions, passed, so must the age of your slaughters. If indeed without the shedding of blood there can be no remission of sins, then sins will no longer be remitted, and your horrid sins are finding you out.

To the credit of the Jews, they are learning from bitter experience that Bible religion and persecution go hand in hand. Hence they are moving toward the way, if not already on it, of common sense and Freethought. The Universalists and Unitarians are moving on the same upward grade. The better quality of brains, the higher order of courage and candor, in the more educated orthodox churches are eliminating from their creeds some of their worst features. Along with these must go the same features just as explicitly expressed in their holy Bibles. Revolutions in accord with evolution, never go backward. Seing this, the more hopeful church classes, like sea-captains in dangerous storms, are overboarding their heaviest material in the forlorn hope of saving the rest. Nor can their increasing numbers of honest and profound thinkers escape the overloading process. The lots are being cast for their Jonahs, and the big fish is at hand in the crystal waters of Freethought to bear them to land. As they get safely to shore and find honorable and prosperous living, thousands of others will desert the unseaworthy vessel and follow their leaders.

Never since the Jewish or Christian age hav common sense, skepticism, and Freethought flourished as now. A clergyman once told me he thanked the Lord for having his mother bear thirteen children, otherwise he had never been. So we may thank our Darwins, Huxleys, and Ingersolls for making our age and our lives more than worth living. As Job is reported to hav said that he saw a light in the cloud, we can more truly say, rejoicingly, that we see one of more exceeding brilliancy. Since, in one sense, ignorance is nothing, darkness nothing—nonentities—so knowledge and light are the entities to fill their places and dispel their miseries. This most happy and noble work is going on year after year, month after month, day after day, and hour after hour.

Unlike the miser, these golden elements are distributed freely, profusely. In giving thoughts and knowledge to others we keep even more for ourselvs. Qui docet dicit—he that teaches is taught. Ignorance is a disgrace. The code of Moses recognized, condemned, and punished the sin of ignorance. By this the Israelites still stand as on their Sabbath, i. e., the seventh day, and the Bible uncleanness of swine's flesh. From all these, modern Christians hav made the most inconsistent, not to say ignorant, departures. Besides, their persecutions far exceed any known among the Jews, if indeed we can say, modernly, that the Jews persecute at all. Neither can we truly say that Christian persecutions are due to chance, willfulness, or providence. They are effects linked with their Bible causes. The exile of Baptists and the burning of witches by the old Puritans in New England came from their loyalty to their Bible and, as they ignorantly believed, their God. Therein did they read: "Thou shalt suffer no witch to liv;" "If any man preach any other gospel than that we hav preached let him be anathema." Painful as it must hav been to exile and to burn, as it was for Washington and his officers to hang Andre, yet such was the law and such seemed to be the necessity to fulfill it.

Two more modern instances of the cruelties of religious ignorance and superstition are at hand. A woman, named Ann Lee, was driven, it seems, from England, over a century ago, by her noisy departure from the established "faith once delivered to the saints." Unlettered as she was, coming to our side of the Atlantic, she seemed to be well schooled in housewifery, industry, and charity. Soon she began to gather her members into a communistic religious family, taking the name of Shakers. Harming none but trying in their way to benefit all, they had to meet through their first years (Mother Ann at their head) the most unreasonable and cruel persecutions. In more than one sense these betrayed the ignorance of the persecutors, since the aim was to put them down, while the end naturally came out to put them up. From their little handful of humble, kind-hearted, industrious members they grew into some twenty prosperous, independent societies in the different states. From one of them D. M. Bennett came and blessed the world with THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Two weeks ago a new sort of preacher, George J. Schweinfurth, from his farm and church near Rockford, Ill., came with his sister and a principal member to visit one of their little churches in this city. As is the custom of Christians, they became the guests of a leading member, Mrs. Ward—no better Christian nor exemplary family in any community. Representing that the man aspired to be a second Christ, curiosity and ridicule came up in spontaneous or miraculous generation. On Sunday, with a crowded and respectable audience in Mrs. Ward's large parlors, I listened to the preacher's two-hour sermon. A more dignified, courteous discourse it has not been my fortune to hear through my long life. While he dissected the wrongs of our past age, tracing them into the churches and dragging them from the horns of the altar, it was done in fine parliamentary style, holding the undivided attention of his intelligent audience to the close. He claimed to be like Christ and representing him only so far as he had learned and was still learning, by his spirit, his soul-renovating truths. His church which he had founded, and for which he was constantly working, would eventually triumph, as it held, lived, and proclaimed these pure, uncompromising radical truths.

The next day, the Star, our leading city paper, came out with a notice of the secret meeting of citizens with "strong religious tendencies," etc., and the note they had sent Mr. Schweinfurth to leave at once or take a coat (by implication if not expressed) of tar and feathers. For two or three successiv evenings Mrs. Ward's residence was besieged by crowds blocking up the street in front. The police came and did their little to dispel the crowds, and the mayor, to his credit, promised protection.

Here again ignorance was at the root of this shameful persecution. Probably not one of the crowd had read or given a moment's thought to the terrible religious slaughters of the past, nor to the shameful persecutions of Ann Lee and her followers—her followers claim that she was Christ's second appearing—too blind to see that in repeating this wickedness they were building up the cause they were aiming to pull down. And surely the temple of American liberty which they are thus "secretly" trying to sap, will fall first on the pitiful sappers. Samson seems to hav been thus crushed, and Jeff Davis and his seceding coadjutors in attempting to rivet the chains of their slaves knocked the last one loose.

Readers will pardon me for seeming to dignify this insignificant conclave by using such illustrations. An old Dutchman had his son Jake in the fence corner to jump out and "boo" as he rode the colt by to show that he was very "shentle." As the boo came the colt sprang and the old man landed on the ground, getting up to thrash his boy. "Papa, didn't you tell me to boo?" "Yes, Jake, I did, but thought you had sense enough to know dat was too big a boo for dis little colt." So may it be with my boo about these secret boobies. W. PERKINS.

Pious Mockery.

On the 16th of May I passed the ninetieth milestone of my life's journey, and on looking back over the long distance I can remember nothing that appears to me more like rank mockery and blasphemy than many things that are done by churches in the name of what they call a holy and sacred religion.

Take, for instance, the following. In February last, the Trinity church in a New Jersey village undertook to get up a church feast or pious frolic, and here is a list of the advertisments that appeared in a daily paper to call attention and custom to the same:

Trinity church entertainment and supper at Cosmopolitan Hall to-morrow night, Wednesday, Feb. 4th. Admittance, 10 cents. Supper tickets, 25 cents.

Gipsy chorus to-morrow night at Cosmopolitan Hall. Gipsy Jane will tell your fortune to-morrow night.

Don't eat your supper at home, thinking you will not be able to get a square meal at Trinity church supper to-morrow night.

The Ladies' Guild are noted for their good suppers and plenty of it for the money.

What's that man laughing at? Why, he is thinking of the supper to-morrow night at Cosmopolitan Hall.

Why, what makes that man look so sad? Just think, he did not go to Trinity church entertainment Wednesday night, and wants to kick himself. Now, that is the way you will feel if you do not go.

Two ways to grow fleshy. First, get your supper at Cosmopolitan Hall to-morrow night. Secondly, see the gipsy camp, and buy one of the oranges.

Trinity church supper to-morrow night at Cosmopolitan Hall. Supper served from 6 to 8 P.M. and during intermission.

Delmonico's the place for a supper. You may say that now; but not after you hav had a supper prepared by the Ladies' Guild of Trinity church. Go, Feb. 4th.

Orange tree in bearing to-morrow night, Cosmopolitan Hall.

Gipsies are always camping out, rain or shine, so do not stay at home if it should rain.

The Orange girls, as well as the tree, will be worth seeing to-morrow.

All of the above notices were scattered along among other advertisments in one paper and repeated the next day; and I do not know as I ever saw another such article of pious falsehood, mockery, and blasphemy in my life except here and there in the Bible and from clergymen. Trinity church means the church of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and here they hav brought down Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, or their names, and united them with a gormandizing, junketing company of pious liars, frauds, and cheats. Some who saw the advertisment of oranges thought that an orange raised in this climate in a parlor or hot-house would be a curiosity and went to get one. After paying ten cents admission they found that the orange tree was a cedar, and the oranges tied to it were made of rags sewed up and stuffed with some kind of trash. Some gave ten cents for an orange for the fun of showing the pious patent fruit, while the more ignorant bought them to aid the fraudulent church in carrying out its sham work in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Am I too severe? Is it right for the churches to lie and cheat in the name of the trinity, and teach their young people that religion will permit them to lie and cheat in all the transactions of life? The gipsy fortune-tellers were not gipsies at all, but village girls; and if they had been gipsies what has the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost or a trinity church to do with gipsy fortune-tellers?

But enough of this for the present. Seventy years ago I saw that the churches of this nation were running out of grace and godliness—if they ever had any—and commenced lecturing on that subject. I traveled thousands of miles and delivered hundreds of lectures, never took a fee at the door, never permitted a contribution-box to be passed around, and never once in all my travels asked for food unless I had money to pay for it, and it was not half the time that I had a farthing, but went hungry until some one felt my wants and offered food freely. After lecturing some years I started a paper in 1845 devoted to the same cause, hoping to reform the church, and sent it at least one year to every man, woman, or child that asked for it, whether they paid or not. I now hav piles of letters proving that my lectures and writings brought some thousands of people out of the churches to pursue a more rational course, the most of whom hav now passed away without any fear of Calvin's hell, or the angry, wrathful God of the man-made Bible, my own darling wife being one of them. I came to this place about eighteen months since with a desire to feel that every human being that I met was my brother or sister, but I still find it impossible to keep my pen and tongue still while I see errors that are cursing the world; so I must continue to pursue my own course my few remaining days if it dooms me to die without a single friend. O trinity! trinity! how thy friends mock thee!

In love to all, J. HACKER.

Recent Gems from the Religious Press.

The Cumberland Presbyterian says: "What is named 'holiness' does harm when those who profess it stop trying to do better and begin to criticise their neighbors for not preaching the same doctrin and making the same profession."

We are inclined to the opinion that what is named "holiness" bears about the same relation to a pure and just morality as a bottle of Jersey cider labeled champagne does to the genuin imported wine. That men should walk about labeling themselvs by their garb and elongated visages "holy" and "pious," striking terror to playing children who stop in their sport to look after them in wondering awe, as something supernatural, is of itself to any reasoning mind the outward evidence of an inward fraud. Of all the lazy paupers which labor is called upon to support by the edict of our magnificent civilization, the priests and ministers are the most useless and insistent.

The princely paupers who liv by the exertions of others, make at least a pretense of doing something for the amusement of their "set," thereby making a slight return for the privilege of being "loafers," but your priests and ministers, dealing entirely in a future world, while robbing the deluded in this, hav no valid excuse to offer for being helpless beggars upon the bounty of the world. After centuries of persistent fraud, born of the selfish lust for power and pelf, the long retinue of followers of a manufactured god, the devil, heaven, hell, purgatory, bibles, saviors, apostles, are about to be buried deeper and more lastingly than was ancient Pompeii. No more shall dead men who lived in the dead past stretch out their fleshless arms to menace the liberated thought of living men of the present day. Never look at the past nor the future, they are not ours, but in the ever-living present bend your best energies for the establishment of natural justice on this earth.

A correspondent of the Christian Register (Unit.), writing on the cases of Dr. Newton and Dr. Rainsford, says:

Premising that your views of the ministry are probably not different from mine, I beg leave to suggest that you hav entirely overlooked, it seems, the most important element in the case—that of positiv law. It is not a question of how "liberal" Mr. Newton or Dr. Rainsford may be. Each of these gentlemen has taken, in common with all clergymen of their denomination, a solemn obligation to maintain "the doctrin, disciplin, and worship of the Protestant Episcopal church."

A sailing-master signs a manifest of the cargo and takes a "solemn obligation" to do his utmost to land in safety and good condition passengers and cargo at the port of destination for which his vessel sails. Adverse winds or crippled machinery renders it advisable to throw overboard some of the cargo. What would be thought of the passengers if they, in solemn conclave, decided that none of the cargo should be sacrificed, but instead the captain should "get out"—that is, leave the vessel at the first opportunity. Mr. Thomas G. Shearman tells the Presbyterians in a letter to the Eagle that they hav on board of their religious craft the doctrin of "elect infants," which implies millions of non-elect boiling, broiling, and sizzling infants, which are being eternally cooked and never done, by the express order of God almighty. He tells them to throw this doctrin overboard; they tell him and Dr. Briggs to "get out" and leave that lovely and loving doctrin alone. The correspondent of the Christian Register reminds Mr. Newton and Dr. Rainsford that they are breaking the law of the church.

This correspondent forgets that the law of the church is quite ancient; that since it loaded up the gospel bosh, quite a breeze has sprung up; in fact, a hurricane of doubt and discussion and waves of reason threaten to submerge the whole religious navy, unless some of the cargo is dropped into the sea, and that right speedily.

It is the supremest folly to tell the captains to "get out." The same conditions will confront their successors.

The pity of it is, the religious squadron seems to be heading for Salt Lake. Why not lighten up and go into port with colors flying and at a fair rate of speed?

The Freeman's Journal (R. C.) says:

There are several things to be said in favor of Dr. Briggs. Such a man will do more in a lifetime toward educating young men and guiding them in their investigation of truth than any forty of the four hundred who hav recently barked at him. An honest man even in error is to be commended, for honest investigation leads to truth.

We quote this from a Roman Catholic journal in part to show the absence of sectarian bigotry in dealing with a Protestant question of church disciplin, and also to exhibit the monumental gall of a Catholic editor in alluding to "honest investigation leading to truth." The "blarney" bestowed upon Dr. Briggs is another evidence that Catholicism and Protestantism are surely coming together on many points, and that intolerance is fast disappearing on both sides. It is quite evident that they will join forces to meet the common enemy—reason and intelligence—in case of emergency, and that that emergency will arise in the near future is a conceded fact.

But "honest investigation leading to truth" from a Roman Catholic paper is enough to make the monks laugh, the bishops grin, the cardinals roar, and the pope to smile his saintliest. What is the truth about your transubstantiation fake, Mr. Editor? Is it not a monstrous, hideous, cannibalistic lie? Eating dead flesh and drinking the blood of a man dead for centuries past! Do you want an honest investigation leading to truth in that direction? Do you want to submit your bread and wine after it has been "changed" into the "literal body and blood of Christ" to chemical experts for a report as to its properties? Do you want honest investigation to lead to truth by proving your priest liars when they tell your poor dupes that for certain sums of money their friends are brought out of purgatory? Certainly honest investigation does lead to truth, and that is just what all churches hav always avoided.

You must be joking, Mr. Editor. If the truth could but be made clear to all men to day, the churches would be deserted to-morrow.

Who Is to Blame?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Miss Ida C. Craddock, secretary of the American Secular Union, in her last interesting communication says:

Nevertheless, the secretary regrets, more than she can say, the necessity of confining ourselvs to this sort of work, when we ought to be up and doing aggressiv, practical work in the field. But our hands are tied at present. We hav no field secretary, and the board hav agreed not to attempt to appoint any for the rest of the fiscal year. Our appeals to the lecturers in the field—appeals which we hav been making over a year—hav passed unheeded, save in one instance, where a lecturer did discuss the matter in the papers and announced his intention of attending the Portsmouth congress to help in the matter of coöperation—an intention which he was unfortunately prevented from carrying out. With that solitary exception, the Liberal lecturers hav maintained a discreet silence regarding the American Secular Union, or hav at most spoken of it only to criticise. Plainly, nothing is to be hoped for from them—as even Mr. Stevens, the former secretary of this society, has lately volunteered us the information that he found it utterly impossible to secure their coöperation with the American Secular Union.

Perhaps the lecturers are not to blame for this "masterly inactivity." From my acquaintance with them I judge they are eager to make every stroke count for Liberalism. Is it true that "nothing is to be hoped for from them," as Miss Craddock says? Lecturers are neither able nor willing to divide their slender income with the Union. They cannot carry the Union financially. If it is to be a success it will require funds. The lecturers hav not the funds to furnish, even if they were willing to carry the Union as the Christian carries his cross. I would like to see this cause triumphant, and see genuin coöperation between the Liberal lecturers, men and women, and the Union; not coöperation between the Union and one or two lecturers.

Would it not be well to make lecturers a definit business proposition, as definit and tangible as has been made to a lone "field secretary?" If a traveling secretary must be salaried to the extent of $1.500 or $2,000 a year, why not offer $500 (not more than that) each to all lecturers who will enlist under the banner of the American Secular Union? Then let the lecturer depend, in the main, as he now does, on his own efforts to make expenses and a fair livelihood. In this way would not a generous rivalry spring up among the workers in the field as to who would organize the greatest number of societies, and solicit the largest fund for the Union, and circulate the greatest number of Union documents? I think the Liberals of this country would rather sustain ten lecturers at $300 each from a common fund, than to pay one man $2,000 or $3,000 a year. I am ready to volunteer in this work the 1st day of October; but I will agree to no plan that will exclude any brother or sister lecturer. Let all be treated alike; "privileges for none."

Colonel Ingersoll on Immigration and Land Reform.

From his Response to the Toast, "Our Visiting Friends," at a recent Banquet in Helena, Mont.

There was in the United States of America from the years 1862, 1863, and 1864, for fifteen years, the most marvelous exaltation ever attained by any race of men. There was a time when we were infinitly in love with justice, with liberty, and when we felt that we had given freedom to every man, woman, and child standing beneath the flag. Now my only fear is that, after passing through that splendid period, we may come back to trade, that we may come back to the minor things of life, and to what you may call the harassing details of business; that we may then be governed a little more by our selfishness; grow a little smaller, and all at once say: People enough hav come to this country; we don't want any more, no matter whether they are oppressed in their own lands or not; no matter whether any poor man, in some far-off land, has a dream for his children and says: "I will take them to the great republic, where every man, no matter how poor he may be, can take his little boy on his knee and say, 'John, all the avenues of distinction are open to you; there is the school-house open to you.'" I tell you that sweetens and makes sacred every drop of sweat that rolls down the face of honest toil; and yet some people are saying: "We hav got enough of them; we hav got enough." In my judgment it is all wrong, all wrong.

If you look at the map of the country about which so much has been said, and so well said; just take the Mississippi river and its tributaries, all that vast territory drained by that system of rivers, I tell you to-night there is plenty of room—plenty of room—to take care of and feed and clothe and furnish roof and raiment and education to six hundred millions of people. We, here in the United States, hav got about one-seventh of the good land in this world—here in the United States. There are only about fifty millions of square miles in the whole earth, and a great deal of that is taken up by ice, and a great deal by sand. We hav got about one-seventh of the good land of the world, and we don't want to begin to get narrow and a little mean and a little contracted. We must remember that our ancestors, many of them, landed upon these shores as poor as any human beings hav landed on any shore, and we must remember that their sons are the most prosperous in this world. So I want the most generous policy everywhere. I don't mean by that that we take the criminals of any country, or that we take the paupers of any country; but we do want every honest man that comes here and wants to make a living, and we ought to welcome him with both arms wide open. We hav got lots of room here.

So much to my toast of "Our Visiting Friends"—I believe that is the toast. Who the visiting friends are I don't know. I am the only one that I know, and I can say that I am welcome, as far as I am concerned; and I can further say that I thank you all from the bottom of my heart for having given me an invitation to be present.

And let me say another word while I am at it. Mr. Carter has just been appointed, or a little while ago, to the position of commissioner of the general land office. I am glad that a Western man has received that appointment, but you can hardly blame Eastern people for thinking that too much land is being given away in the West; when we read in the papers that several miles from Helena land is worth $40 or $50 or $100 a foot, and then talk about giving away millions and millions of acres, you can see how it strikes the average man in Massachusetts. But for myself, I am glad that a Western man has that place. And right here, I hav got a hobby about lands. You know there has been a great deal said in the country about single tax and all that sort of business, but I hav got a hobby on the subject. Now my hobby is this, that that land will be the most prosperous that has the most landowners in it; it will be the most prosperous where the men who own the land plow the land; it will be the more prosperous the more homes there are in it. Consequently I am in favor of exempting a home of a certain value, all homes, from every kind of taxation, as well as from forced sale for any reason whatever. Say what you please, the home is the unit of good government.

Now there is the next step. If you want to build a railroad from here to somewhere, and of course you do, the law is so that that railroad can condemn the land necessary for its construction. Now I want the law so in every state of this Union that if any man or corporation owns above a certain amount of land, that certain amount of land is to be fixed in each state according to what is done with that land; that if any person or corporation owns more than a certain amount of land and won't sell it, you can condemn it for a home exactly as you would for a railroad, and let twelve men pass upon the value, and let the man that wants the home pay what it is worth and take it. I don't believe in robbing any man under the sun simply because he has got more land than he ought to hav, but I believe in saying to the man, "If you want to make your home upon that land, and the owner, although he has plenty of land, refuses to sell, go into the court and fix the price;" because we do not want a nation of tenants; we want a nation of home-owners. I tell you it is pretty hard to get a man to shoulder a musket in defense of a boarding-house. Very few are willing to fight for the landlord. Rather fight the landlord.

Now if this commissioner of the land office will do all he can, and I believe he will, to giv every man a home on the public domain who is entitled to it, and, in the language of your governor, will keep it from the rapacity of speculators or of corporations, and giv it to the man that really wants to plow it, that really wants to raise something for himself and family and add to the wealth and prosperity of the state—if he will do that he will be the best land commissioner that has ever sat in the place, in my judgment. But it may be well enough for me to say that you must not expect too much of him, because he cannot make the laws; the laws are there, and, besides all that, there is another above him at present. So you mustn't expect too much. All that you hav a right to ask is that he do his level best in that direction, and I believe he will, from the confidence you hav expressed in him. That of itself is a certificate that he is going to do what he can.

Saints: Their Make and Use.

Instinct may be defined, the principle that governs the actions of life in the absence of the reasoning faculty. All the animal creation is dependent on instinct in proportion to the lack of reason. The plant and flower also are under the same law; they instinctivly reach out toward moisture, light, and heat for sustenance and health. Now, man, the highest order of animal on this planet, though possessing the faculty of reason, is also under the law of instinct, less only in proportion to his acquired intelligence through observation and experience. For without observation and experience the faculty of reason could hav nothing on which to exercise its function. Primitiv man, a child of nature, does not begin life in a professor's chair, explaining the interrelation of the antipodes or the causes of insanity. But he looks upon the sun and moon with great reverence; he gazes upon the starry firmament with ecstatic wonder; he sees the big water and in it with veneration ventures to bathe his dirty feet. He is mainly under the law of instinct, and as well might an arbitrary command be given the fox not to touch the chickens under pain of eternal starvation as to forbid him to eat of the most luscious fruit growing before his eyes. But like the plant and flower he instinctivly reaches out and yearns for light and help.

The universal history of man warrants the conclusion that he instinctivly seeks some object of worship. Some few people in the world hav attempted to reach to the cause of all function and power—to grasp and comprehend deity itself; but all such attempts hav failed, for it is not given the finite mind to even apprehend the infinit. These failures hav forced all peoples to construct secondary or intermediate gods and demons that may come at least within the bounds of human imagination.

One of the most ancient religions that contains any philosophy, of which we hav any knowledge, is the Hindoo. Its poets and sacred writers acknowledged their inability to reach an eternal being. I quote: "Who knows, and who in this world shall declare, whence and why this creation took place? The gods are subsequent to the production of this world; then who can know whence it proceeded, or whether it upholds itself or not? He who in the highest is the ruler of the universe, does indeed know, but not another one can possess this knowledge." These Hindoos exhibit more humility and less conceit than Christians ever hav. They venerated the sun and the stars; they personified the principles of good and evil—picturing them as antagonistic gods, each contending for mastery. They had a few more inferior gods, but their record of miracles and their calendar of saints make comparativly a poor showing. Their saint-god, Buddha, they believe was incarnate; who thus ranks Jesus as to time. Now, while the Hindoo worships the greatest manifestations of deity, his highest, invisible god, Vishnu, is the full equivalent of the Jewish Jehovah.

The ancient Egyptians, too, worshiped the same great manifestations. They erected beautiful temples and dedicated them to the sun and moon (Osiris and Isis). They also paid divine honors to the river Nile, as on its annual overflow depended their support. Thus far their religion doesn't look like abominable idolatry. They may hav selected and honored the festiv onion as the representativ of all good vegetables, and gave it praise as such. Now, all history agrees that a larger population and a better government in Egypt were the rule before Christianity invaded it. The Egyptian did not spend his whole time in murder and crime because no Christian monk was by his side. But the Egyptians were not much given to man-worship, hence a lamentable lack of saints. True, they had a good many inferior representativ gods; but their invisible Jupiter-Ammon is equivalent to the Jewish Jehovah.

All religions hav their basis in astronomy. But the Greeks while they made a god of the sun (Apollo), another of the sea (Neptune), etc., and personified the elements and human passions, were prone to apotheosizing their heroes—making of them gods and goddesses. These latter bear a more striking resemblance to Christian saints than the Christian likes to admit. As Grecian poetry is profuse with the imaginary exploits of their gods and goddesses, so is our ecclesiastical history stuffed with some preposterous, some impossible, some fraudulent doings of the blessed saints. And certain it is that the Greeks were more cultured and had a better government before Paul got in his disastrous work among them than at any time since. But while they had a long calendar of gods and goddesses, their great invisible god Jove is the exact equivalent of the Jewish Jehovah.

Now take a look at the Christian saints. Their great numbers prove the early Christians much given to man-worship. They start out with a man-god, and then cluster around him an army of saints. They make a saint of every lone fisherman and tentmaker who will leave his useful calling to preach a crusade of wrath. This army of saints, headed by Peter, is supposed to be diligently engaged in storming the celestial citadel and forcing from it divine favors for the benefit of faithful believers. Manufacturing saints has been one of the most interesting and imposing ceremonies of the Christian church. All along the dark ages it was frequently performed to impress on the ignorant devotees the power of the church. The darker the age the more saints. The Protestant may deny the authority of this church and object to all its doings during a period of more than a thousand years; but in doing so he must acknowledge that during all that time his Lord was not able to manage his own divine enterprise, and that not till Luther came to his aid could he rescue it from pagan mummery, anti-Christs, harlots, etc.

But Christian nations are indebted to the dark ages for their patron saints. France has her St. Denis; Russia, her St. Nicholas; Spain, her St. James, etc.; and what would Ireland do without her St. Patrick? And even here, without the help of saints how could we find names for the multitude of churches—Saint Paul's, Mary's, Bridget's, etc., ad infinitum?

The first followers of Jesus are all classed as saints—the whole sect; but in the fourth century saintship became more expensiv. Then the church laid down harder conditions, and classed them as follows: 1. Apostles and evangelists; 2. Martyrs; 3. Confessors; 4. Doctors in learning; 5. Virgins; 6. Matrons and widows. Since the tenth century the manufacture of a saint has become a momentous affair. "It consists of two stages—beatification and canonization. The former stage consists in a declaration by the pope that the beatified person is entitled by reason of eminent virtues, attested by miracles, to be regarded as a saint, and as such to be honored and invoked. The inquiry in both beatification and canonization is conducted by a congregation of cardinals, and consists in examining his writings (if any), then of the holiness of his life, and finally of the miracles alleged to hav been performed by him in life or obtained through relics and intercession after death. Proof of two such miracles is required. After the saint is finished, the cardinal prefect of the congregation of rites hands the pope's brief to the cardinal arch-priest of the Vatican, by whom it is read, the Te Deum is intoned, the image of the beatified individual is uncovered to receive the veneration of the assembly; high mass, with the collect, in his honor is sung; and in the afternoon the pope goes solemnly to the church to pay reverence to the image." I omit the details of this great ecclesiastical ceremony; but at such times St. Peter's edifice is specially decorated at vast cost—the entire expenditure is estimated at not less than £20 000 = $100,000.

Now, this costly saint may be invoked by the devout, through pence and prayer, to obtain heavenly blessings; and the particular church that is fortunate enough to possess the crown of an old hat, a lock of hair, a toe-nail, or other relic of the saint, has the inside track to win divine prizes.

Performing of miracles has always been considered as the first claim to saintship. Martyrdom is held next in order. But many of the earlier saints, like the apostles, after performing many miracles, rejoiced in suffering martyrdom—expecting thereby to receive an hundred-fold reward. They then performed miracles to prolong their torture, but never to save their lives. Curious, isn't it?

The New Testament furnishes little authority on martyrdom except the case of Jesus; but church tradition goes to show that a decided craze for the honor and emoluments of martyrdom prevailed soon after his disappearance. The last we see of Peter in the Testament is at a council in Jerusalem; but tradition takes him to Rome, and there has him praying to be crucified with his head downward, that his death might be more ignominious than that of his divine master. Nothing really is known of Matthew, Mark, Luke, or John—how they lived, or whether they lived at all; but church tradition has it that only John died a natural death. Of course the three others were martyred, and all became saints. But the apostle John didn't hav quite a natural death. Tradition says he went from Patmos to Asia, and being one hundred and twenty years old he digged a grave and buried himself in it; and that long afterward the earth above his body boiled—rising and falling as he breathed—many witnessing it.

Paul is a good saint. He never worked at his trade after his conversion. He did not love women—because he couldn't; so he hates them in his epistles. He traveled over the Roman dominions looking for martyrdom. In Rome he managed to get into prison, and after two years' free board he was put out of it; but church tradition has it that late in life Nero kindly accommodated him with the crown of martyrdom.

James, the son of Zebedee, surnamed the Elder, and brother of the apostle John, was a fisherman. Herod is said to hav made an early martyr of him, and sent him on the way to paradise rejoicing. James the Less, brother or cousin of Jesus, the supposed author of the epistle of James, is said to hav been stoned to death in Jerusalem.

But the manner of martyrdom of the apostles is mild-like compared to that vouchsafed to many aspirants a century later. "The holy martyrs," records the veracious ecclesiastical historian Eusebius, "underwent such torments as are above all description. The tormentors employed to torment the lady Blandina tortured and mangled her from morning till evening, till they themselvs were faint. But that blessed woman renewed her strength so that it was a refreshment and ease to her; and though her whole body was torn to pieces, yet, by pronouncing the words 'I am a Christian,' she was immediately recreated and refreshed, and felt no pain. After the executioners had given up the business of attempting to kill her, which they could not accomplish, she was hung up in chains dangling within reach of wild beasts. And this no doubt was so done by the ordinance of God, that she, hanging in the form of a cross, might by her incessant prayers procure cheerfulness of mind to the suffering saints around her. After she had hung for a long time, the wild beasts not venturing to touch her, she was cast into prison and reserved for further torment. There she rejoiced in what she had gone through as if she had been invited to a wedding-dinner; whereupon they broiled her whole body in a frying-pan, which she not at all regarding, they cast her to a mad bull, who foamed and tossed her to and fro upon his horns; yet she had no feeling of pain in all these things—her mind being wholly engaged in conference with Christ, so that at length, when no more could be done unto her, she was beheaded." This pious account seems to show that mangling and broiling the lady didn't amount to a straw; but when she was beheaded her savior either couldn't or wouldn't save her in that condition.

Take another sample from the same author: "As for Sanctus, deacon of Vienna, when there was nothing more they could do to him, they clapped red-hot plates of brass on most tender parts of his body, which fried and seared him all over; yet remained he immovable, being cooled and refreshed with heavenly dews of the water of life gushing from the womb of Christ; his body being all scarred and drawn together, having lost the external shape of a man, in whom Christ performed great wonders. For when these wicked men began again to torture him, supposing that the same tortures, repeated while his body was swollen and inflamed, would master him or that he would die, they were sorely disappointed; for by these latter tortures his body got relief from all the injuries incurred before—he recovered the use of his limbs; he got rid of his pains; so that through the grace of Christ, the second torture that they put him to proved to be a remedy and cure instead of a punishment." In this case it seems not to hav occurred to the tormentors to behead their man.

Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, was honored with martyrdom along with twelve lesser lights. The tormentors tried in vain to burn him to death. They ran a spear into his navel, and the flow of blood was so great that it quenched all the fire. But they killed him somehow, and made him a great saint.

These are fair specimens from the long calendar of church-authenticated martyrdoms. But nobody out of the Christian cloister ever knew anything about them. "The blood of martyrs is the seed of the church," says the Christian; hence he extols the quality and enlarges the quantity of such bloody fertilizer. Under its nourishing influence the church grew rank and cruel. These stories of torture, blood, and miracle were invented and used by the priests for centuries to edify and gratify the ignorant, gaping devotees of the marvelous. They fell back under the law of barbarous instinct, made worse by religious fanaticism. Common sense, probability, reason, had no charms for them. The more preposterous the story the greater the faith. The more horrible the alleged martyrdom, the more entertaining and satisfactory. And all through the Dark Ages of Christianity by such means pope and priest ruled and degraded their followers.

And these recitals of torture induced a cruel disposition in the Christian. He was led to feel that like torments should be inflicted upon every "dog of a Jew," pagan, or heretical Christian. Hence inquisitions, racks, thumbscrews, fagots, etc. A French historian (Guizot) relates instances of Christian troops beheading prisoners of war for refusing to giv up their own religion and kneel to and kiss the cross. That cross has led the slaughter from century to century, from Jerusalem to Mexico; and even to-day in some parts of Europe, the Christian delights to rob and torment the Jew or heretic. Christians hav suspended the practice of forcing the cross on unwilling people only where they hav lost power to do so.

Much of the frightful system remains to this day. In Catholic countries crosses are met with on the roadside bearing effigies of Jesus or some other saint in an attitude of anguish to stimulate the lone traveler. In their churches it is just the thing to hav paintings of suffering martyrs hanging on the walls. And even our Fifth avenue cathedral has its memorial window exhibiting a naked saint reclining on an iron grating with a glowing fire under it. The devout worshiper by intently gazing at it, expects to obtain a portion of the heavenly blessings promised the suffering saints.

Nor can Protestants get along without the use of this blood-fertilizer. Some of them may chop up the cross and sell the old paintings of torture; but many of their sermons beat paint in presenting harrowing description of the terrible sufferings on a cross, and the eternal agonies to be endured by the unbeliever in a hell. As between the two it is about an even game: "You pays your money, you takes your choice."

Religious Persecutions in Germany.

Dr. Voelkel, Magdeburg, Editor of the Freireligioses Sontags Blatt, in the National Reformer.

A remarkably large number of German Freethinkers hav lately been subjected to heavy sentences of imprisonment for blasphemy and "defamation of the state church" and its institutions. Though in former years such sentences were not rare, it seems as if just after the abolition of the Socialist laws the state took a special, though not a benevolent, interest in all those working in the Freethought cause. Whilst formerly sometimes months elapsed without a sentence being recorded in the Neues Freireligiöses Sontags Blatt, hardly a week now passes in which such an event is not reported. Herr Kruhl, in Silesia, was lately condemned to six months' imprisonment, because in a lecture he reproached the church with trying to stupefy the people, and with only attracting old women and children. The same punishment was meted out to Herr Erth in Saxony for similar expressions. As to myself, I was sentenced three times during the space of two months, first to a fortnight's imprisonment, for an alleged insult to two clergymen, who had by unseemly interruptions disturbed one of my lectures, and caused the meeting to be dispersed by the police; further to six months' imprisonment for defamation of the Virgin Mary; and, finally, to a term of six months for blasphemy in the form of criticism of the doctrin of the trinity. As regards the last two sentences I hav appealed to the Reichsgericht in Leipzig for a new trial. I am now undergoing the first sentence of a fortnight in the prison of Gommern near Magdeburg; and am writing this in cell No. 2.

Let us first consider what the German statute-book orders in regard to blasphemy and the defamation of the church. Sec. 166 ordains: Whoever creates annoyance by blasphemy, also whoever asperses any of the three religious communities acknowledged by the state (the Protestant, the Catholic, and the Jewish), shall be punished by imprisonment up to five years.

The sense of this is clear though it is elastic: It is an offense (1) to blaspheme God, (for the punishment of this "crime" it is, however, necessary for one of the persons present to be annoyed); (2) it is an offense to asperse any of the three religions, their ordinances or forms, i.e., baptism, communion, etc.

There is no clear definition of the word blasphemy. The Reichsgericht has decided that aspersion of the church or its ordinances, if it is not done in a scurrilous manner, is not punishable. The dogmas of the church may also be criticised, providing that the church itself is not thereby indirectly defamed. Whatever is not clearly expressed by the law is elucidated by the decisions of the Reichsgericht. It is, therefore, necessary to be well acquainted with these, if one is to avoid danger. Many of the judges are not sufficiently acquainted with these decisions, and their sentences are often quashed on appeal to the Reichsrath. The editor of a workman's journal, who had written a poem which was thought to offend against Sec. 166, was condemned. The Reichsgericht having quashed the first sentence, I defended him in Nordhausen Thuringen at the second trial and obtained his acquittal.

During the last six years I hav been prosecuted innumerable times for blasphemy, but hav always been acquitted, having conscientiously kept within the bounds of Sec. 166 and the decisions of the Reichsgericht. The mode of procedure is as follows: The public meetings and lectures are under the supervision of two police officers, who sit next to the speaker and take notes during the lecture and the discussion. Should either of these or anyone in the audience believe that Sec. 166 has been offended against, they immediately inform the public prosecutor. He orders the magistrate of the district to hold a preliminary examination of the accused. After this the accusation is served. I hav repeatedly been enabled by this written defense to obtain a withdrawal of the accusation. The next step is the judicial procedure before the five judges constituting a tribunal. The result is condemnation or acquittal. In case of condemnation, an appeal is allowed to the Reichsgericht in Leipzig, should there hav been an error of form or of law in the sentence.

I wish to say a few words about my first lawsuits, in all of which I was acquitted without lawyer's help. The first prosecution against me was for writing a fairy tale, "The unhappy heir," which appeared in the Sonntags Blatt. The charge was one of indirect blasphemy, and aspersion of the church by ridicule of the Bible. The public was excluded, as is usual in such cases. After an hour's debate I was acquitted on all the five points on which I had been charged. It was not blasphemy; it was only "disparagement" (Herabsetzung) and "want of reverence" (Mangel an Ehrerbietung). The state prosecutor had asked for six weeks' imprisonment.

The second prosecution was for a speech at a burial in Jessnitz, Grand Duchy of Anhalt. The public prosecutor himself requested an acquittal, and the court complied.

A third prosecution was in connection with the Sonntags Blatt. I had published a poem which described the grand effect produced by the interior of the Cologne cathedral. In the last verses the poet laments that these ennobling sentiments vanished completely when two priests in absurd apparel (Narrentracht), with silly babble, conducted a so-called service. The public prosecutor demanded two days' imprisonment. The verdict was acquittal.

I pass over many other cases in which I was acquitted as a result of my written defense, without the case going to verbal trial. In one of these charges the prosecutor in Erfurt had incriminated seventeen points in one of my lectures. Fourteen of these impeachments were only quibbles; three only were of any importance. My defense, covering three sheets, proved the untenableness of the charge by an overwhelming amount of theological material. The charge had been made by a schoolmaster.

In one of the last trials, in Berlin, the public prosecutor asked for my acquittal after having heard my defense, and this was agreed to. The trial had lasted a long time. The "blasphemy" was contained in a lecture I had delivered before the Freie Gemeinde in Berlin. By the arrangement of Herr Friedrici, president of the society, each speech is stenographed. In order to obtain the report of my lecture, the public prosecutor had ordered the house of Herr Friedrici and the houses of several of the other members of the committee to be searched. The bookcases of the society had been broken open, and the contents ransacked to find the report, in defiance of the protests of Herr Friedrici. But the search was in vain, because, I believe, Herr Friedrici had the document in his breast-pocket. And in spite of all these energetic measures, which could not hav been more severe in a case of high treason, there followed a verdict of acquittal in compliance with the demand of the public prosecutor.

I come now to the two unfortunate lawsuits which hav up to the present led to two separate sentences of six months' imprisonment. I delivered a lecture last year at Muhlhausen, in Thüringen (where once Thomas Müntzer lived), on the religious aspect of the Peasant Wars of the sixteenth century. I refuted the theory of the Catholic historian, Janssen, that Luther had caused the Peasant Wars. I stated that as early as 1476 a Franconian peasant, called the piper Hans, because he played the flute at weddings, asserted that the Virgin Mary visited him at night and revealed to him her opinions of the pope, the emperor, etc. This statement, which may be found in every detailed history of the Peasant Wars, was misunderstood by a schoolmaster, present at the lecture, who consequently charged me with blasphemy of the Virgin Mary. He believed me to hav said that the Virgin Mary had received nocturnal visits whilst she lived, thereby hinting at the illegitimate birth of Jesus Christ. In the context the misunderstanding is at once explained; but three of the judges, who were Roman Catholics, and the Catholic public prosecutor were prejudiced against me. In vain I pleaded that in a lecture on the Peasant Wars of the sixteenth century I could not possibly hav alluded to an event (the birth of Jesus) which was said to hav happened fifteen hundred years before, and which had no connection with my subject.

The court had omitted to subpœna one of my witnesses. I demanded that he should be sent for at once. The court adjourned for an hour. My witness appeared; he gave a correct report of my lecture, and was much surprised at the statement imputed to me. He was then called upon to swear that I had not made the statement. This he could not do, but he declared on oath that he had not heard the statement, and must hav done so had I made it. The witness for the prosecution, the school-master who had informed against me, admitted on oath that he had not heard the crucial word "received." Nevertheless the public prosecutor considered the case proved, and demanded nine months' imprisonment and immediate arrest. He considered me guilty of blasphemy, the Virgin Mary being looked upon as a deity in the Catholic church; and guilty also of aspersion of the Catholic church and its ordinances. The court decided by three votes against two for a sentence of six months' imprisonment.

An appeal against this judgment can be made on several points. The first is that it is founded on evidence, the chief part of which was not given on oath. In the second place, in spite of my repeated demands, the court omitted to ask the witness for prosecution whether he had been annoyed by the statement; this, as mentioned above, being necessary for the punishment of blasphemy.

A month after this I was again sentenced to six months' imprisonment. In a lecture delivered in Halle I had criticised the doctrin of the trinity and contended that the Bible gave no proof of it. I said that in the story of the baptism of Jesus (John i, 32; Matt. iii, 16; Mark i, 10) the appearance of the Holy Ghost, in the form of a dove, is represented as a vision seen by Jesus, or by John. The dove, however, was a pagan bird, and, what is most important, the explanation that the three were one is wanting.

I showed that the same want of a distinct exposition of unity was apparent in the formula of baptism (Matt. xxviii, 19); that Mark xvi, from the ninth verse to the end of the chapter, was not found in the older manuscripts; that John i, 5–7, of the later Lutheran Bibles, did not date from Luther, but had been declared by him to be interpolated, etc. I reminded my readers that Frederick the Great ("der alte Fritz") had said the trinity made an exception to the multiplication table, as in all other cases three times one was three. And I ended by saying that to honor Jesus one need not look upon him as a God. A crucified God does not suffer as a human being would; every human being who combats, strives, and suffers, does more for salvation than a crucified God.

An especial interest was given to the trial by two clergymen appearing as informers. They were not governed by their doctrin of loving their enemies. One of them was evidently ashamed of the despicable part he played; the other, in presence of the biased judges and the public prosecutor could see nothing but blasphemy in what I had said. On the other hand, I pleaded that I had said nothing against the existence of God, but that I had only endeavored to show that all the Bible quotations brought forward by me proved nothing. If the doctrin of the trinity had been clearly expressed in the Bible, there would hav been no need for the bishops to hav voted on the subject centuries after. The expression, that Jesus "came out of the urn (after the ballot) as a God" was considered a gross blasphemy.

When I entered court I could at once foretell the issue of the trial. The judges stared at me, some smiling and some laughing; and maintained this attitude during the whole trial. During my defense they conversed so audibly that I stopped suddenly, thinking I had not the ear of the court; but was told to proceed. I was finally condemned to six months' imprisonment, at the instance of the public prosecutor. In both cases an appeal has been made to the Reichsgericht, but who knows what will be the result?

THE Jesuits in Madagascar hav been righteously reproved by the courts of that land for slanders of the Freemasons. The head of the Jesuit mission has been fined $200 and ordered to pay damages to the amount of $2,000 to the Freemasons. Last year a lodge of Freemasons was established at Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar. The Jesuits at once issued a pamphlet in the Malagassy language, setting forth the "disreputable and loathsome proofs of Freemasonry." The pamphlet said that the evils of Freemasonry were too great to be described in detail, and therefore attention was confined to some principal instances. It asserted that kings and princes had been so beguiled by the social pleasures and feastings of Freemasonry as to shelter beneath their rank and power agents of the craft who had the destruction of these royal personages in charge, and who carried out their mission. The execution of Louis XVI. at the time of the French Revolution was ascribed to Freemasonry. The pamphlet also said that previous to the introduction of Freemasonry into England from Germany, in 1779, the people of that country were noted for the rectitude of their conduct, but that Freemasonry had spread among them vices of all sorts and many unspeakable crimes and evils, until the people had become greatly corrupted. This pamphlet made a profound impression and gave Freemasonry a bad name among the nativs, but the more intelligent part of the people think the Jesuits hav sustained a well-deserved defeat in losing their case. Of course the Catholic papers call the finding of the court "an outrage."

TALMAGE'S church is fighting the collector of Brooklyn. Their counsel recently appeared before Judge Van Wyck in the city court and asked to hav the taxes, amounting to $1,385.40, which were charged to the Tabernacle members a few days after they had bought their present site in Clinton avenue, to be declared null and void, on the ground that the church property was exempted. The church obtained title to the land on Nov. 9, 1889, and that on Nov. 15, six days afterward, the city's taxes were confirmed. Corporation Counsel Jenks opposed the motion, on the ground that the taxes had become a lien on the property on July 1st preceding, when the assessors' books were closed. The church people are perfectly willing to enjoy the protection of government, but no one ever knew them to be willing to pay for it. They want other folks to keep up their fire insurance policy.

Oppressed People.

Some eminent and philanthropic persons whose hearts bleed for long-range misery hav completed an organization known as the "Society of American Friends of Russian Freedom." It is patterned after the English society, which has nine members of Parliament in its central committee. The American society is composed of Free Religionists and liberal Christians, T. W. Higginson heading the list, which includes the poets Whittier and Lowell, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, son of his father; Bishop Phillips Brooks, M. T. Savage, Heber Newton, George Kennan, the Russian prison explorer; Mark Twain, heretic; John W. Chadwick, and a few others of lesser note.

The object of the society is "to aid by all moral and legal means the Russian patriots in their effort to obtain for their country political freedom and self-government." The present members do not intend and "are not asked to approve, to support, or countenance the extreme and violent section of the Russian opposition. Men and women," they say, "who hav made up their minds to commit acts leading to their own inevitable death are not likely to be influenced one way or another by what outsiders think and say of them. What the society wishes to do is to tell to all liberty-loving Russians that many Americans are in deep and warm sympathy with their aspirations, that they will watch with eager attention every new effort of theirs, will hail with enthusiasm their victory, and will mourn for their sufferings in case of defeat." This, of course, is of great assistance to a people being driven off to Siberia by thousands to perish from cold and brutality.

In the address prepared by the Boston society the promoters say:

"1. While all other Christian nations of America and Europe, including those recently enfranchised from the Turkish yoke (which are considerably behind Russia in culture), now liv under free constitutional governments, having their national parliaments, their responsible ministries, their habeas corpus, Russia is the only Christian country in Europe where no such guarantees exist. In Russia alone can men and women be arbitrarily arrested, thrown into prison, exiled, and otherwise be punished without any form of trial; in Russia alone are simple expressions of opinion visited with the heaviest penalties; thegovernment is not there sanctioned or modified by any popular vote, and millions of people, crushed under the burden of arbitrary taxes, are at the mercy of irresponsible, uncontrolable officials, whose will makes the law for them.

"We understand that the main body of the Russian opposition, even including the extreme revolutionary party, known by the name of 'Nihilist,' asks for no impracticable reforms, being prepared to adopt legal methods of agitation from the day the present autocratic régime is replaced by a constitutional monarchy which shall be controled by a national party. Until then, since no legal means of agitation are provided, it is not strange if men are tempted into illegal ones.

"We consider the movement for a constitutional government in Russia perfectly legitimate, moderate, and timely; and we think that Americans, who were the first to proclaim and assert the supreme right of the people to self-government and independence, ought to help and encourage by all proper methods those who seek to follow their example.

"2. The methods of the Russian bureaucratic despotism in dealing with its political opponents appear to us particularly objectionable.

"Every government, so long as it is tolerated by a nation, has doubtless a right to defend itself against its political enemies. But we cannot consider in the light of legitimate self-defense such acts as slaughtering unarmed prisoners, flogging women to death, and tearing from their families hundreds of children, aged fifteen years and less, to be exiled to Siberia.

"The Russian exile and prison system, as it has been represented in the exhaustiv statements of Mr. George Kennan—statements which hav never been disproved—is a disgrace to our age and an insult to our common humanity, against which we are bound to protest, as some of us protested against the similar atrocities perpetrated by other nations.

"3. We must also condemn the recent persecution of the Jews in Russia, under the pretext that some of their number were guilty of usury.

"The wholesale persecution of the millions of Jewish people, who are generally extremely poor workingmen, the exclusion of Jewish youth from colleges and universities, the closing to Jews of liberal professions, can in no wise be viewed as protection against usury, but as a relapse into the barbarous practices of the Middle Ages.

"In all countries the amount of political and social equality enjoyed by the Jews is in direct proportion to the general freedom. The Jewish problem in Russia must be solved in the same way that it has been solved in other countries; and the abhorrence we feel at the persecution of a peaceful, law-abiding people, whose real offense is that they are Jews, is an additional reason for our wishing Russia to enjoy the safeguards of a constitutional government."

This stirring and great sympathy with oppressed people at a distance is a marked characteristic of many Americans and Englishmen. Nine members of parliament composing a part of the central committee of the British society, are folks of this sort But what do they say when the Russians ask for constitutional government for Ireland? And Americans are all aflame over Ireland's wrongs and Russia's tyranny; but if any of the members of this society hav protested against the American official inquisitions, the echo of their protest has not yet reached New York. Of course it is well enough to be indignant over the unequal land laws of Russia and to print protests against Russian land-grabbing and monopoly, but a few words against some of the hideous economic injustice in the monopoly of land in this country, as protested against by Colonel Ingersoll, would not be entirely wasted, and might besides do as much good for humanity, standing perhaps as good a chance of being influential with the powers that be. We do not wish to discourage any effort to extend freedom, but we are a little doubtful of those who feel so much for the oppressed of other countries and calmly look on at the monstrous injustice daily perpetrated at home. It's too much like the Methodist cry for a million for missions for the heathen, but not a word for the suffering heathen right here within a mile of the Methodist headquarters.

This society proposes to obtain and spread authentic information about the condition of Russia, to organize lectures, meetings, debating societies, and to use all other legal and honorable means of influencing public opinion in America, and to promote similar societies in other countries. But why not do this first about the United States? Why not find out how many evictions of people unable to pay their rent hav occurred in American cities? How many tenant farmers hav suffered loss from rapacious landlords? How many Kansas farmers hav been sold out at sheriff's sale; how many people died of starvation from lack of land to work upon? Why not organize lectures, meetings, debating societies, to discuss American hard times? Why talk about Russian official tyranny when Holy John does the same thing in his governmental department that the post-office censors of Russia do? And all over the country people hav within the past few years been imprisoned for not being the same sort of Christians that the majority are. One died in a Southern prison where he was put for believing that Saturday and not Sunday is a holy day. Out in Pittsburgh, Pa., they will not let a man lecture for pay on Sundays if he is not orthodox, though Christians can and do so as much as they like. We havn't heard that Mr. Higginson, or Mr. Newton, or Mr. Chadwick, or the two poets, hav said anything against such discrimination.

We would rather organize a Society of Friends of American Freedom than try to coerce the czar, though that is a good object, and all who feel a keener interest in oppressed people across the water than in oppressed people in the United States should address Francis J. Garrison, 4 Park street, Boston, Mass.

The Illogical Christians of Kansas City.

Mr. Schweinfurth's fellow-Christians of Kansas City, Mo., where he recently visited for the purpose of promulgating his peculiar Christian doctrin, are not so tolerant as those of Rockford, Ill., where he is better and more unfavorably known. On the 1st instant some of the citizens of Kansas City constituted themselvs a committee to announce to the Christ that he is an impostor and to warn him to make himself less conspicuous on Kansas City streets. The committee held a meeting—business men of influence predominating—and it was decided that the self-alleged Christ is a blasphemer, and a subcommittee of twelve was appointed to look after him. A notification to leave town was prepared at "the request of some of the older and more conservativ men who thought it best to giv the alleged Christ time to work an ascension miracle, or to descend into hell and remain there for three days or longer if he desired, or to do anything to leave a vacancy where now his corporal presence exists." The document reads:

"KANSAS CITY, MO., June 1, 1891.

"GEO. J. SCHWEINFURTH, 914 East Fourteenth st., Kansas City, Mo.

"At a meeting held to-day by a committee of a number of citizens it was resolved that you as an impostor among a good people in this community, hav been a detriment to such an extent that the means adopted, as shown hereafter, hav become a necessity, in order to protect some of your unfortunate, weak-minded victims against being openly led to deviations from the true path of good morals and Christianity by your pretended teachings.

"The people composing this committee are thorough Kansas Cityans and will not tolerate this imposition any longer, but will readily adopt the necessary means to carry out this verdict. We hav resolved that for the good of our community you are to leave this city within twenty four hours, and unless you so comply you must abide by the consequences. We want an answer by bearer of this letter, and if same is not given your non-compliance will be accepted and you may expect an early visit from "THE COMMITTEE.

"MENU:

"FIRST SERVICE,

"TAR AND FEATHERS."

The messenger did not see Schweinfurth, but the communication was handed to one of the "angels" who then officiated—in accordance with the accepted derivation of the word angel—as messenger. "Christ" was in the upper regions of the "heaven" and would not come down stairs nor would he deign any reply to unholy communication. Another meeting was held later in the day to further consider the case, but the result of the deliberation has never been made known, as the alleged "Christ" instead of miraculously setting at naught the machinations of the unappreciativ Kansas Cityans appealed to the worldly powers that be. He dispatched an "angel" to his honor Mayor Holmes, who entertained the seraphic visitor and promised worldly protection to the redeemer from Rockford. So the committee's work went for naught.

We think the good old-style Christians deserve rebuke for their illiberality toward this modern messiah. His claims are just as valid as ever anybody's were, and there is no more reason why he should not work miracles than there are against his proselytes doing them. His doctrins are no more strange in this generation than those of Jesus were in his; and if virgins bore children nineteen hundred years ago, there is no reason why Schweinfurth's female angels should not do so now, and still remain virgins. Schweinfurth is of course an impostor, a scheming religious swindler, but he is not the first nor the worst of his class. Aside from his religious principles and acts he seems to be a gentleman in all except his property-monopolizing tendencies, but there hav been dupes and victims of such as he before now, and the pious swindlers hav moved among decent people and even been highly estimated. Mr. Pecci of Rome probably makes more money out of his victims in an hour than Schweinfurth has done in all the years he has been playing the Christ.

And certainly it ill becomes the Christians of to-day to call the kettle black. They believe the old story implicitly; it was real then, why may it not be so again? If they reject it of to-day, why not reject such yarns when told of the long ago? Their belief concerning Jesus the Christ and their actions toward Schweinfurth the Christ are inconsistent and illogical.

New Subscribers.

This week we desire to acknowledge the kindness of Messrs. H. N. Prouty, J. A. Grimes, W. F. Schade, J. M. Hubbard, W. B. Friedman, Ed. Stein, H. Q. Norton, W. B. Clark, J. Wallace, Chas. Traver, J. Graham, J. H. Chapman, and Thos. Duncan, for sending us new subscribers, Messrs. Duncan and Friedman sending four each and the others one to three. Such efforts are a great help to us, and are heartily appreciated. We need a great deal larger list to make smooth sailing and we hope to get it with the aid of our friends.

Injustice to Taxpayers.

The charities of this city received from the public treasury last year the sum of $2,001,835.74, something over one-half going to the Roman Catholic church. The figures are:

Foundling Asylum of the Sisters of Charity	$261,838 00
New York Catholic Protectory	254 000 00
Roman Catholic House of the Good Shepherd	13,200 00
St. Joseph's Institution for the Improved Instruction of Deaf Mutes	20,700 00
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls	7 211 00
Mission of the Immaculate Virgin	116,923 14
Institution of Mercy	80 157 66
Missionary Sisters, Third Order of St. Francis	64 320 00
Dominican Convent, Our Lady of the Rosary	50 312 49
Asylum of St. Dominic	49 514 41
St Joseph's Asylum	51,250 42
St. James's Home	10 959 99
Asylum of St. Vincent De Paul	14 574 13
St. Michael's Home	5 467 01
St. Ann's Home	16 770 41
St. Agatha's Home for Children	18,780 42
Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls	1,506 99

The other institutions benefited are Protestant and Jewish. Some of the former are called "unsectarian," but the word is misused, for they are all Christian places.

About one dollar in every sixteen of the expenses of the city is used in running these institutions to mak Christians. And the way they are run is well told in the speech before a Troy jury made in the suit of Anna Amoe against the "House of the Good Shepherd," as reported in these columns last week. And only a few days ago the parents of a child committed to a Protestant institution in this city brought suit against the officers for inhumanly abusing the boy. These institutions are unworthy objects of public aid; and besides, voting money to them is the rankest sort of injustice to the taxpayers. It is using public money to support religion, which is a violation of our organic law.

Another of the Periodical Humbugs.

A humbug operation of rather unusual size has been going on for some weeks in Pennsylvania. "Father" Mollinger is the performer and the place is at Troy Hill, Allegheny, where the halt, the maimed, and the blind resort to be "cured." The priest proclaims himself the possessor of "the power of effectiv prayer." He utters these prayers, telling the patient to do likewise. "While under the influence of these prayers he selects a medicin. He believes that the divine mind, acting through him, causes him to select the remedy, and that thus faith and works cause the cures." That is the program, and the results are as usual. His fame has spread widely and a short while ago about three thousand diseased people were around him, waiting to be cured. Of course the excitement is kept up by reports of miraculous healings. "James Duffy, of Canton, O., has been entirely relieved of a severe attack of palsy. Duffy has been unable to hold anything in either hand for several years. Father Mollinger gave him a crucifix to hold and, looking him steadily in the eyes, told him to clutch it tightly. The man obeyed, and instantly all trace of palsy left him. Mamie Scanlon, afflicted with hip disease, and Miss J. Duffy, of Binghampton, N. Y., suffering from white swelling, left for their homes perfectly cured. Alice McGowan, of Overton, N. Y., was also sent home cured of blindness. Albert Curtis, suffering and helpless from acute rheumatism, and Mrs. Frances Heins, unable to walk for eleven years on account of paralysis, both had the power of locomotion restored." These are but samples, many more of equally startling and miraculous character being reported.

It is said that the priest will be called to Rome to explain his thaumaturgical racket. Already some who hav been "cured" are complaining that the cure was not permanent enough, and skeptics allege that nobody has been cured at all, which is undoubtedly the case. Excitement and stupid faith may hav led some to think themselvs benefited by the mummery of the priest, but psychology will explain all that plain humbug does not. Such a priest, however, is very valuable to his church, and if he goes to Europe he ought be placed in charge of the Lourdes chapel. America is too hard-headed a place for him to keep up the imposture long.

A METHODIST editor writing of the late war says, meaning by "nation" the North: "The nation believed in their soldiers, and both soldiers and nation believed in God. How could that army be otherwise than invincible?" As a matter of fact, the Southerners believed fully as devoutly in God—the same God—and also in their soldiers, and the soldiers believed in the same God. Why, then, was not the Southern army as invincible as the Northern? Our columns are open for any Christian to make this clear.

THE Independent notes with surprise that a boy arrested in Newark recently "did not know who made the earth or the sky, nor what punishment would be given hereafter to wicked people who take false oaths." But does the Independent know these things? If so it should not hide its knowledge, but giv it freely to the world. Great renown awaits the man who can satisfy the public in these matters. The boy who is so intolerably ignorant is the child of Italian Catholic parents.

THE Rev. Henry Preserved Smith, of the Lane Theological Seminary, and evidently of Puritan parentage, writes to the Independent to sav that "A rigid insistence upon the Westminster doctrin of transmission of the Bible would vacate every chair of exegesis in the church. The doc rin is that the text has been by God's 'singular care and providence kept pure in all ages.'" That is to say, there is not an exegetical professor in the Presbyterian church who believes in the Westminster Confession of Faith, which is the authoritativ creed of the church! Surely, the heretics are multiplying, and what in the end will be the fate of the creeds?

OF all the irreconcilable idiots loose in this city the editor of the Mail and Express is unquestionably the most idiotic. To "restore the sanctity of the Sabbath to the Metropolitan Museum of Art," while at the same time affording the laborers of the city opportunity to view its treasures, he advocates opening it at five o'clock in the morning six days in the week. "The workman's day," he says, "begins at eight. If he were to spend an hour or two in the galleries he would still hav an hour in which to get to his work, and that would enable him to attend to his work in time anywhere in New York or Jersey City." Imagin a man getting up at four or half-past to visit an art gallery before going to work! Mr. Shepard is certainly the champion nincompoop of the town.

TO Mr. Wettstein's offer of one hundred dollars for a spirit test of slate-writing, or by discharging a gun at a materialized spirit, or dematerialization of a spirit while he holds its hands, the Better Way says: "The first and third offer might be acceptable to a medium, but spirits do not giv tests on such offers. The second mode is objectionable because a materialized spirit is so closely allied to the medium that, though ten feet apart and both in sight, the least injury done to the spirit affects the medium—it being known that on an occasion where a spirit took a sip of water it was immediately ejected by the medium in another part of the room. Thus the shooting test is an unreasonable one. But Mr. Wettstein may obtain tests for less money than that if he will visit a few mediums and go in the spirit of an honest, earnest investigator. Spirits can be only importuned by love to give tests, not by money; for it is they who giv the tests—not the medium."

IF a person desires to know how to be good scientifically, morally, socially, politically, and can stand three or four lectures per day on the subject, he should hie him to Plymouth, Mass., where from July 1st to August 12th, inclusiv, the "School for Applied Ethics" will be in session. This school is an ethical Chautauqua, the result of Professor Adler's long labors, and is designed to teach "clergymen, teachers, journalists, philanthropists, and others, who are now seeking careful information upon the great themes of Ethical Sociology." The terms of tuition are ten dollars, and board varies from six to fourteen dollars per week. The director of the faculty is Professor Adams, of the University of Michigan, with a number of associates more or less prominent in educational circles. Professor Adler will lecture frequently and is a powerful influence in the management of the school. The schedule of subjects of lectures includes about everything industrial, governmental, religious, and ethical, including the Indian question and humane treatment of animals. Sunday evenings there will be sermons by various clergymen, Swedenborgian, Jewish, Roman Catholic, Unitarian, Baptist, and one not yet provided.

THERE is an amusement park on the grounds of the National Military Home, near Dayton, O., and the people of that city hav been in the habit of visiting it Sundays. Recently the "ministerial association" of Dayton resolved that it ought to be closed, even to the soldiers in the Home. There is nothing, it seems, that the ministers won't attempt to save their day. The speakers at the ministerial association meeting openly advocated the Puritan Sunday. "We had learned," said one orator, "that if man can not be made religious, he can, at least, be compelled to obey the laws. All we ask is to see the laws enforced. There are about five thousand soldiers at the Home, and one of them tells us that not over five hundred are in favor of closing the park. He calls the ministers who are attempting to close it—for he is a vehement man—"low-down, sneaking vampires," and closes his letter with these words: "I spent three years in the war for the Union, and twenty-five as a scout in the Indian country, and my hand is more familiar with a gun than with a pen, yet I could write volumes in reference to this matter. But if I fully expressed my mind, Holy John would probably suppress the article, so what's the use? But can't you 'hit 'm a lick?' I wish you would."

THE premier of Quebec is reported as having said to the pope at a recent audience: "When I assisted at the Baltimore centenary, I felt an acute regret on finding that there were no Canadians among the American bishops, notwithstanding that there are more than a million Canadians in the United States. As the diocese of Ogdensburg is about to become vacant, I shall pray the holy see to nominate a Canadian to the vacancy." The Catholic Review quoting this says: "M. Mercier must hav curious ideas of international courtesy when he permits himself to interfere in the affairs of the church in the United States as freely as if he were a member of the American hierarchy." And the act is made none the less queer by the fact that the premier himself is an Infidel. Of the proposal the Review adds: "To it one would object if such a candidate came to the people in the ordinary way; but to hav a priest selected by the politicians of Quebec and the ecclesiastical powers of the same province; selected primarily because of his blood, and placed in a see on the Canadian borders, are circumstances which the ordinary American looks upon with suspicion and contempt." It seems that the priests of the two countries are slightly jealous of each other.

EX-SENATOR WARREN SMITH, of Tennessee, and a well-known contributor to this paper, continues to excite the ministers of Dahlonega, Ga., where he is temporarily stopping on business. A dispatch from that town to the Atlanta Constitution says: "Warren Smith, who may be classed with the Freethinkers of this age, has been delivering lectures here on Atheism and religion. He has stirred the preachers from one end of the county to the other by his bold utterances, and it is noticeable that his audiences are composed largely of church-members. He recently delivered a free lecture entitled 'The Christ of Nazareth and the Christ of Christendom,' and it must be said that he handled his subject in a masterly manner, and gave some of the good brethren who heard him food for thought. It is evident that he is an apt disciple of Bob Ingersoll, and travels, for the most part, the same road with the great Infidel. A curious feature of his recent lecture was that a majority of those present seemed to approve of the radical utterances of the speaker, and those who represented the other side and were present to criticise, arose and publicly approved the doctrins enunciated. This, to say the least, was most curious, as the speaker condemned in the most unsparing terms the sanctimonious observance of Sunday, branding Sunday laws as an outrageous violation of the constitutional rights of American citizenship. The preachers see that Mr. Smith is making an impression among the people—one that they think will be dangerous to religion in this section, and they propose to answer his arguments from the same platform. That is, it has been suggested that they do so. They say they can refute his Atheistical statements, and if they decide to take the stump with him, a debate more exciting than that of Drs. Carswell and Armstead, at Douglasville, will be the result." For a business man Mr. Smith is a pretty evangelist in the cause of truth and liberty.

OWING to ill health Helen Gardener has been visiting Florida. At a hotel where she stopped in Jacksonville the guests recognized that they had some sort of a Northern lion among them, but just what sort of a lion they didn't know. So they guessed. One thought she wrote poetry for the papers. Another that she was Laura Jean Libbey, a writer of sensational and trashy works. The question was finally answered by a bright young man of extensiv reading who said he believed she was the woman who had written "Is This Your Son? My God!" After reading the book, the exclamation is natural, or the attempt to picture a miserable libertin is a failure. The young man spoke better than he knew. Miss Gardener was brilliantly entertained by the Floridians and their visitors. A reporter who attended her "reception," at which she read selections from her books and received a basket of flowers, thus describes her: "This woman is a queen among women. Plain and unassuming in manner, as true genius should be, one feels as if acquaintance had existed for years, so friendly is her welcome. In a gown of white albatross, with silver ornaments, she looked every inch a queen." Another one wrote: "Jacksonville is proud of having within its gates to-day a woman whose keen perceptions, close study, and high degree of intelligence place her beyond doubt a queen amongst women." The same pencil-pusher drew her picture: "Helen H. Gardener is an earnest, petite brunet, with large, brown eyes, whose every expression is one of thought and study. By no means is Miss Gardener austere and sedate; she has a keen sense of humor and enjoys a joke." He further gleaned this information concerning her: "Miss Gardener is at present compiling a work which will be published in the fall. She is a Virginian by birth, and traces her lineage directly from Lord Baltimore. She livs now in New York city, and mingles with the writers who hav, like herself, reached a high degree in literature. Miss Gardener is yet a young woman, and a bright future is hers." All of this we believe to be accurate, and it only remains to add that her book, "Is This Your Son? My God!" can be procured from this office for fifty cents in paper, and one dollar in cloth covers. But as a gilt-edged investment for Freethinkers we recommend her "Men, Women, and Gods," at the same prices The other one is meant for Fifth avenue immorals.

Letters from Friends.

EUREKA, CAL., June 2, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: It givs me pleasure to learn that the Bible Pictures are going to be printed in book form. I intend to take several copies, but I will likely see you personally before the book is out, as I intend to come East this fall.

ROBERT GUNTHER.

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH., June 1, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed $6 apply to my subscription and for one new subscriber. The other dollar is for the Bible Picture book as soon as it is out. I wonder how Brother John Wanamaker likes some of his own medicin. I think the dose should be repeated often, as you are doing. Let the good work go on. T. G. REDFIELD.

EXOELSIOR, WASH., May 30, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 for which send one copy of the "Pictorial Text-Book." I believe this makes ten copies I hav purchased (former orders sent from Wedron, Ill.), and if all the people hav ordered who hav promised me they would, I hav sold over twenty copies. The book in my estimation is the best one published to do good work among the superstitious, and for that reason I talk for it wherever I go. I wish every Liberal would do the same, as it would be of great assistance to you and also in the propagation of Freethought principles. I am a stranger here but hope to be able to get many more to purchase the book when this copy arrives so they can see what it is.

Yours truly, M. P. BRAFFET.

NEWARK, N. J., June 7, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Pope Pius IX., Aug. 15, 1854, declared in his encyclical letter that liberty of conscience was a most pestilential error. Mr. Pecci, the harmless old man known as Leo XIII., also declares that Socialism and Anarchism are about the same. If the pope preached that those doctrins were divine and emanated from God, they would be accepted by his faithful as popish truths. The pope was king of kings on earth; but Freethought or reason has at last dethroned him, and he is not master of Rome. While his agents hav been working to capture Protestant governments, Freemasons and Freethinkers hav been capturing Rome. While he has been preaching Freethought a pestilential error, Freethinkers hav been preaching that popery was a damnable pestilential curse to mankind. Where he was making one convert to Rome, Freethinkers were making nine. While Romanists were praying to God, Freethinkers were working to discover scientific truths. While papists and Protestants preach that where ignorance is a bliss it is a folly to be wise, Freethinkers declare that ignorance is a curse and it is not a folly to be wise. Priest Hecker declares this country is to hav a state religion, and that religion is to be Roman Catholic. Freethinkers declare that Romanism is a foreign plant, and should never be allowed to grow on American soil, where Paine, Washington, and Jefferson, and hosts of Freethinkers fought to establish liberty. While papists and bastard Americans hav been preaching that our public schools were godless and brothels, Freethinkers hav been showing up that nunneries were individual prisons and brothels, where nuns hav been found dead hanging from their prison cells, and to allow a church to imprison our children is a disgrace to our country, and a God that would ask such a sacrifice should be made to take his own medicin.

Learn how to liv is my motto, instead of liv to learn how to die. One birth and one death are quite sufficient for me. I do not care about being the first to rise on resurrection day. I know only of the present, and nothing of the future, and popes, priests, or sages do not know anything more. Those who preach of a heaven hereafter should be made to show their heaven to the living. Show up or shut up. Dead people tell no tales.

I am a Freethinker, and believe like General Grant, when he spoke those noble words at Des Moines, Ia.:

"Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the more perfect security of free thought, free speech, and free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men irrespectiv of nationality, color or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar of money appropriated to their support, no matter how raised, shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian school. Resolve that neither the state or nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or Atheistical tenets. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and the private school supported entirely by private contribution. Keep the church and state forever separate."

Those were noble words from a noble and patriotic president, soldier, and statesman. But Rome says: "Hands off the child till we hav made it first loyal to the pope, and then the state can educate." Instead of religion, I would teach wisdom, honesty, and virtue, and humanity, our religion, and trust to nature's god for our future life. Freethinkers, let us hav free speech and free press; then, indeed, the people will be free. Respectfully and fraternally, W. W. MORRIS.

POINT RAINS CO., TEX., June 5, E.M. 291.

MR. EDITOR: Please afford me sufficient space to express a few thoughts as they occur to me in regard to the spread of Liberalism and the decline of ecclesiasticism. My being is inspired with an assurance of the advancement of Liberalism when I read the reports in both religious and secular papers of religious persecutions and trials for heresy of such as the Rev. Dr. Briggs, et al. Surely this is positiv proof that Rationalism is spreading her bright wings of thought over the nation, with their shining rays of intelligence penetrating the dark recesses of Christian slums of ignorance and superstition.

When I contemplate the rapid spread of Liberalism, and observe with unmistakableness the religious apathy of the church-going people, I fancy I hear the death-knell of theology tolling from the lofty spires of Rationalism. But on account of its sins and infamous crimes I think it is destined to die a hard, terrible, and ignominious death. The paroxysms are now becoming more and more severe. In the phantasmagoria of her wild and frightful delirium she sees spirits of those she has murdered, who, like Banquo's ghost, will not down at her bidding. She beholds their blood upon her garments and can no longer hide the shame of her long and infamous career. In gasping for breath and struggling for life she is thrown into violent paroxysms of vomiting; and in relieving her stomach of its foulness she heaves batches of her slime at the bright canvas of liberty and the spotless characters of its noblest defenders. The prognosis is certain. Her death is inevitable. Her hideous form will sink into the most profound coma, her eyes will be closed in shame, the curtain of insignificance lowered around her, and her remains wrapped in the winding-sheet of infamy and lowered without a tear, a word, or a song of regret into the dark depths of oblivion. Thus will end the tragic scene.

True it is that many ministers of small caliber (22 and less) are not aware of the real condition of their old craft. Like the backwoodsman who, ignorant of the assassination of Abe Lincoln, cast a vote for him in the late presidential election, one of them, who had never heard of the council of Nice, remarked to me that Infidelity with all of its learning and eloquence would never be able to lower a single sail of the old ship of Zion. He said she had stood thousands of years and was now stronger than ever.

I am of the opinion that what he knows, or thinks he knows, came to him by absorption in an atmosphere of crude opinions and a poor assortment of facts. It has never had a sail on it since Voltaire, Thomas Paine, Darwin, et al, shot off what few dirty old rags it ever waved to the disgust of common sense and decency. Now it is seen as a water-soaked hull, loaded with sin, blackened with infamy, and wrecked on the sandbar of falsehood and cowardice.

This same preacher denounced all the Liberal publications as damnable and infamously immoral.

At the same time he frankly admitted that he had never read any of them. He refused to read the "Age of Reason," would not read "The Gods," THE TRUTH SEEKER, nor the Freethinker's Magazine. He said he was afaid of them. In other words he admitted that he was clinging to a pious fraud that he knew would not stand the test of reason; and that he was a slink and a mental coward—just such as the preachers Mr. Frank Morse in his letter to THE TRUTH SEEKER (Vol. 18, No. 22) makes mention of. I am of the opinion that these preachers are doing a great deal for the cause of Liberalism by violating their God's commands—especially the seventh Commandment.

Success to the cause of Liberalism, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Watson Heston. Yours for Universal Mental Liberty,

JOSEPH STIDHAM, M.D.

FLAT CREEK, LA., May 26, 291.

MR. EDITOR: I hav seen but one Spiritualistic performance. In the winter of 1859-60 I and James Willeford were running a shingle machine near Alvarado, Tex., and two brothers from Tennessee, by the name of Frost, came to Alvarado. One of them was a medium. I heard exaggerated reports of his performance, and had no faith in it. I thought it was all sham and delusion. In a short while we employed the Frost brothers to work at the shingle machine. One night we asked the medium to giv an exhibition of his mediumistic powers. He objected; he said that it strained him and made him sore. I told him that I had never seen a performance, and was very anxious to witness it, and we prevailed upon him after a while to giv us a séance. He did not charge anything for his exhibitions. There were six or eight of us present, and we had all to sit down around the family dining-table and place our hands upon the table in front of us and press down on them, he doing the same. In fifteen or twenty minutes the table commenced moving. Then he told to us get away from it. I had been told that the table would rock with three men lying on top of it, and that two men could not hold it down and stop from rocking. I saw by the way he placed his hands upon the table that he could rock it by muscular effort without the aid of any external spirit-force, and when he got the table in activ operation I stepped forward and gripped the opposit rims of the table with my hands, pressed it down, and stopped its action. The medium very civilly entreated me not to do that, and just keep away from the table. I told him that I had been informed two men could not stop the table from rocking, and I wanted to test that. He replied, "That is not so." He then told us to go and stand in the door so as to giv the table all of the dining-room to act in. He then instructed us to mentally put questions to the table and to mentally instruct it how to answer them by going to this point or that in the room. He did not want to know what the questions were. He only wanted to know who was going to put a question. We all took our turns at putting questions, and each time when the table would go to any point of the room and quit rocking, the question would be asked, "Did it answer your question?" The answer was always "Yes." I conceived the idea that the medium watched the eyes of the interrogator to get a clew to the answer. When it came my second turn to put a question, I asked "Which of two suitors a certain girl was going to marry?" The medium had never seen the girl and knew nothing at all about her. I kept my eyes fixed upon him to see if he would look at me, but he kept his eyes constantly fixed upon the table. He never looked at me, and I never let my eyes precede the table to the points where it had to go to answer my question, and the table did more than I had asked. It showed me how the matter then stood, and how it was going to terminate, revealing to me the secret of a girl's heart, who was several miles away. I was beaten, and my skepticism had received a severe shock. I asked the medium, "What was it that moved the table to answer our questions?" He replied, "I don't know. I know no more about that than you do." Now, this young man appeared to be perfectly honest and candid. He did not attempt any explanation of the phenomena, and he was not making capital of his mediumistic power. It appeared to me that he was dealing with a power which he himself did not understand.

I am well acquainted with a young lady, who is perfectly honest and truthful, who says that she and some other young persons sat down around a table to try to develop a medium, and when the table commenced moving she jumped up to get away from it, and found the table cleaving to her hands like a magnet until she lifted it off the floor. The sight frightened her so that she never would try the experiment again.

Now, from these phenomena, and many more which, perhaps, I will furnish hereafter, I hav formed the opinion that there is a universal spirit-force and intelligence in nature (not outside of or beyond nature) which knows our unuttered thoughts and feelings, and that it also knows past, present, and future events; that it can act upon and through our brains and nervous systems, and under certain conditions and circumstances can answer our questions and make revelations to us, but not in spoken words.

Now, the question arises, What is there in nature that can possess this force and intelligence? What is it?

The only thing known to me to which I can attribute these powers and phenomena is that subtle, mysterious, indefinable something which scientists call electricity and magnetism.

Gods, ghosts, spirits, deities, and demons hav been inferred from the phenomena of nature, and the hidden, mysterious force and intelligence behind the phenomena is what theologians call God and deity. Now, if we find that what scientists call electricity and magnetism produce the phenomena, does it not prove that electricity and magnetism, and God and deity, are only different names used by different classes of men for the same thing. i. e., the author of nature's phenomena? Now, if the doctors of theology hav any other God let them rise and explain. Let them tell where their God is, what it is, and how they know that it is, or resign. It is false conceptions and false pictures of deity that has made the Atheists, and those who draw the false pictures are the parties to blame, not the Atheists who doubt the existence of the originals of the false pictures. Scientists know that electricity is force. Deity is force and intelligence. Now, if we can establish the fact (as I believe) that electricity is force and intelligence, we will solve the great problem and reconcile science and theology. But there would be found a great deal of rubbish in theology to throw away. P. F. SHUMAKER.

CRESCO, IA., June 7, 1891.

MR. EDITOR: Some of my Liberal friends who are fully acquainted with the obstacles I encountered in my emancipation from church thraldom are urging me to write up my experiences. I will make the attempt, and likely a failure. My attendance of English schools of any kind is limited to thirteen days of district school in 1854, when I could not even speak a dozen words of "Yankee."

Subsequently, between work on the farm, in the blacksmith and machine shop, grist mill, store business, and carpentry, as also during army life (1861-1865), I picked up the little learning, or rather information, I possess.

At the age of eleven and a half years I landed, in 1854, with my parents on the soil of this country, where a king, ruling by the "grace of God," had been kicked overboard, but I now find that the source of grace had not been sufficiently included in the kicking out business.

Previous to emigration I was compelled to waste the greater part of five years to imbibe holy bosh in a German Lutheran school. In this country more time was misapplied to the same purpose, when, finally, I was confirmed, ostensibly to the Lutheran faith, practically, however, to a system of credulity and stupidity which has been a hindrance to me in many ways; and I squandered much precious time during nearly a quarter of a century in devotion to the vitiating stuff my mind had there been crammed with.

In my endeavors to master the English language to some extent I used a German-English Bible as a guide to translation and interpretation, being at the time ignorant of the existence of much superior books for this purpose. Though this so-called holy writ is very inferior when compared with books which claim no divine inspiration, it served me indirectly as an eye-opener. Here my skepticism began to sprout. When occasionally my inquiring mind stumbled against astonishing and evident discrepancies pertaining to sacred things I was instructed by older heads to cast aside all criticism, as it would surely lead to doubt—the sin most destructiv to faith. These evasions did not satisfy me; my confidence was shaken. Despite my strenuous efforts to follow the beaten track, to remain a true and unquestioning believer, I discovered with deep feeling and many misgivings that a mind imbued with a desire for knowledge would not down when once started on the road to investigation, when once en route for that vastly higher plane, independence of mind. Still, I yet considered the church with all its conflicting theories my goal. I attended regularly, contributed money which should hav been applied to better purpose, and occupied the highest official position therein below (?) the preacher.

Of course during the later years of my service in the army of the Lord frequent skirmishes took place without culminating in open rupture. But when the Jew God, who is claimed to possess and exercise the ability to accomplish everything without assistance, enlisted my parents, relativs, and so-called friends, in addition to his already commissioned and anointed servant, the preacher, to help him (Jew God) make me toe the mark; I was forced to open war by explaining to one and all my position. You may or may not be able to imagin the amount of acrimony bestowed on me by these regenerated and sanctified people who profess to love their enemies. Perhaps I am not entitled to this queer sort of love because I wish to benefit them by offering arguments and reasons for their enlightenment and am therefore not their enemy. I find it as difficult to get the approved meaning of Christian phraseology as do the Christians themselvs. Though I was not defeated, not even frightened, I must admit that my position then was exceedingly embarrassing for the reason that my investigations so far had all been impelled by the desire to prove the Christian religion true beyond a doubt or cavil. Failing to discover the necessary evidence I was forced to the wall. I felt for the time being presumably somewhat as a boy would feel who, with plenty of grit, had not sufficiently developed fists to make the fur fly; that is, I could not advance arguments with which to meet my credulous and preëminently pious adversaries, until it occurred to me that a more extensiv and unbiased study of their law-book ("Holy Queer") might giv me the inside track—and sure enough it did. They did not expel me from the holy circle by means of the customary sanctified court-martial, but preferred to let my name fade from their annals and memory from their ghost-befuddled minds; at any rate, I was never summoned before any inquisition. Up to the time of withdrawal from the church I had not been acquainted with an outspoken Liberal; had never seen a Freethought book or paper, was even ignorant of the existence of such. Had never read really scientific works of any kind. Try, if you can, to picture the state of my feelings. There I stood alone, an outcast, isolated to a degree in the midst of friends and relativs, scoffed and jeered at by those nearest me, estranged from one in whom I had the utmost confidence, whose fidelity I could not doubt. I was heartsick, yes, tired of life; it was torture. The future looked dark indeed. I would hav recanted cheerfully at that dreary time, but in view of the rebuffs and scorn received from all sides, I could no more perpetrate such outrage on my conscience and manhood than one could crowd a newly-hatched bird back into its shell.

It is amazing to me how I succeeded to bear this burden, the weight of which was (in the '70's) rendered still heavier by an adverse business venture which involved and finally swallowed my all, financially. To aggravate matters I committed the folly of many others. I attempted to drown my troubles in the whisky bottle, but soon discovered that spirits over the bar and spirits from the pulpit were equally degrading. I renounced both and am therefore happier. I am no saint (whatever that may be), and do not wish to become one. But a saint, as pictured by Christians, and despite religious claim, could not be thoroughly happy while his wife and children remained in the toils of superstition. Had I, at the time when my reason began to assert its influence and demand its rights, been sufficiently posted so as to argue logically, I might hav saved from clerical serfdom a good woman—one with common sense, good intents, and more than ordinary clear-sightedness on subjects other than those connected with religion—and the outlook would hav been brighter.

The first intimation that I can remember which informed me that some one else differed with the church—apart from internal dissension—was an expression made in public to the effect that "religion is a humbug." My own mind had long before been convinced that more pretension than sincerity governed many on matters of belief, and I expressed myself in this sense, though timidly, some dozen years ago. About seven years ago a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER was handed to me containing the first Liberal sentiment I had ever seen on paper. This brought me in close contact with a subscriber to the grand exponent of human rights. He was a quiet but truly Liberal old man, who has since moved to Dubuque, Ia. By hearsay I had put him down as a man to be avoided. I soon explained to myself his reputation. He was a gentleman, poor in worldly goods and rich in mind, but not a supercilious believer in ghosts. He kindly loaned me books, etc., until I became able to buy my own—in limited numbers. I do not conceal them, but circulate freely all I can lay hold of, neither do I hide my views regarding religion. Since exhibiting my sentiments without fear or favor I suffer less from calumny and invectiv than formerly, because backbiters and slanderers are quite sure to come to grief when meddling with one who is prepared to substantiate his assertions. I do not wish to be understood that things run as smooth as though I was yet a sheep in blood-washed (stained) corral. When at a safe distance they will yelp as lustily as ever. But sensible people are getting accustomed to such howls and pay little or no attention to them after a sufficient acquaintance with me. In fact, I hav many voluntary but timid informers, who dare not defend me openly or exhibit their own views in public. When Liberals are content with a self-imposed, modest position, they are looked upon as undecided moral cowards and legitimate game, easily subdued by professional bluffers and defamers. I face them, priest, preacher, and dupe, when they see fit to tackle me. I need little coaxing to take up an impending argument, while thousands of highly educated men and women, much more capable than myself, instead of demanding untrammeled freedom of conscience will dance obediently to the holy whistle, reaping contempt and scorn from friend and foe alike. Of course once in a while they snatch a morsel of soft soap with which to grease their vanity or greed.

I now enjoy the acquaintance of many Freethinkers who thrive in business by virtue of strict honesty, though they freely and openly antagonize the church in all its forms.

What puzzles me most is the fact that many apparently sensible people can not or will not see the almost endless string of contradictions, absurdities, and immorality contained in that venerated book. I cannot comprehend why people who would hesitate to invest ten cents in a pamphlet without first inquiring about it will complacently saddle themselvs, at greater cost, with a book which prohibits sound reasoning, and which is altogether at variance with human observation and experience. And not only do they unquestioningly worship an absolutely incomprehensible something or nothing, but will usually fly into a rage when an effort is made to lift them to a higher level. I firmly believe that most sincere believers do not study the Bible enough to know what it really does contain. The more credulous and ignorant are so overawed by priestly but unfounded threats of hell and damnation that they dare not think independently or compare the different features of the complex plot, while a few designing schemers simulate belief in mythology with intent to perpetuate their own sinecures. The plea that some divines are poorly paid carries no force with it. There are people in all classes who cling to a scheme or hobby in expectation of recompense in time to come though at present want stares them in the face. But I opine that but few, if any, D.D.'s suffer enough to justify their whining.

Priests and preachers are well aware of the fact that their flocks would melt away much faster than they do if free investigation were encouraged or even permitted, by means of which common people would become enlightened. If Christianity were true why do its votaries avoid free inquiry?

That the opportunities and facilities for salvation were not multiplied or improved by the introduction of the salvation scheme is clearly shown by the allegation that many Old Testament characters were admitted to the presence of the Lord without a mediator.

The scramble for that muchly advertised and boomed site called Abraham's bosom, Elisha's trip by means of a very queer outfit, and other things of similar importance (?), imply that people must hav been eligible as citizens in that unknown realm previous to J. Christ's execution. The Abe and Lazarus story also implies that the place across the street must hav been open for settlement at an early date, an ancient Jay Gould or the like appearing as one of its pioneers.

By the way, which of the two tales is true? The Old Testament gives the account of Elisha's start on his journey—wonder if he ever got there, and when, and what he did in case of needed repairs? The other end of the report is lacking. Maybe the inspiration machine ran down, or perhaps the narrator was under the control of a lying spirit, such as is mentioned in 2 Chron. xviii, 20. Contrary to the above, Paul asserts (John iii, 13) that only the son of man, J. Christ, went to heaven. I will leave the solution to holy nut-crackers.

It is stated that the deed (apple junketing) of one ignorant woman threw all humanity into sin, and that the death on Calvary was designed to undo the transgression. Did it fulfill expectations? No, because if it be true that we still labor under the burden of original sin, that it is still necessary or possible to earn salvation by means of prayer or the like, it is clearly shown that the death of a God, or one of his many sons, was entirely useless, and that man has to work out his own salvation despite vicarious atonement.

I believe that if the Bible contains anything noteworthy it must be the assertion that lying spirits exist, and I further believe that Bible writers had been, and Bible expounders are, under immediate and absolute control of them. I, too, am a believer, don't you see? Ask me no questions as to my knowledge as regards these spirits—belief is a one-sided thing. It leaves no room for knowledge of spirits, or gods either. Recently a clergyman (one of the diving or ducking kind) informed me, by way of sermon, that "we must not know God, that we lose him the instant we find him." Now, neither myself or other hearers could discover what the fellow was driving at, but it's all right anyway, the dear minister said it. My perverse vision is so much accustomed to natural light that it cannot perceive the beauty of a supernatural tallow dip.

During the late war, on a Sunday morning, one of our chaplains thanked the merciful Lord and commander of all armies for recent victories on our side, and for attendant killing of Southern men. After the close of divine services I visited the camp of some Rebel prisoners, where I listened to a similar harang; the only difference being a transposition of characters—that is, the Southerner thanked the "ruler and protector of all" for assistance rendered in killing Northern soldiers, or "Lincoln hirelings" as he expressed himself. These performances struck me as queer, but not till some years after did I see the joke. Was there a God who wheedled both armies, or cared nought for either, or were there two Gods, one Federal, the other Confederate? If the latter is the case, what became of the Confederate God? Did he vanish with Jeff Davis's assumed authority? If not, where does he abide? Could a Christian discover anything absurd in this two-edged divinity business, and would not an anointed D.D. or a sanctified dupe shed some light on these questions?

In the army I carried about me numerous charms which were to render me bullet-proof, and if sincere faith in anything is of the least value, those charms would hav proved themselvs efficient—which they did not—as my faith in them was unbounded. One day a missil found myself in its way, and without regard for my physical feelings or my charmfully silly faith, it passed right on, leaving this "Dutchman" with a lacerated hand, and a conscience badly shaken by so complete a failure of a never-failing protectiv. I also possessed similar rigmaroles for shying away sickness; Vicksburg's swamps, however, soon convinced me that my Christian medicin-man's preventiv came out second-best in a fight with malaria. For seven weeks I lay prostrate with typhoid fever, and came very near starting in search of Abraham's bosom. Well, I pulled through, but retained a souvenir in the shape of a useless ear, ever-tormenting rheumatism, heart disease, and a completely broken-down constitution.

One would now naturally conclude that my experience had by this time revealed to me the uselessness and absurdity of belief, but it did nothing of the kind. Instead of coming to my senses, though my confidence was somewhat dilapidated, I charged myself with some omission or transgression. I could not do otherwise. I had inherited and imbibed credulity, and a believer can readily find an excuse for the most nonsensical escapades imaginable. But the search for cause of the failure of my charms revealed discrepancies which, despite religious devotion, I was unable to explain away. This had a salutary influence on my mind. I began to criticise, became a skeptic, a doubter on the road to heresy, as I subsequently discovered.

I had heard and read that sickness brings people nearer to God. It certainly had the opposit effect on me. Since 1863 my health has steadily declined, and my dependence on an all-healing deity is so completely bursted that I heartily abhor the very thought of it in the presence of sickness, physical and mental defects, or when I contemplate the many life-destroying catastrophes brought about by uncontrolable causes or otherwise.

As a last resort in favor of belief I adopted fatalism. Because unable to harmonize even this very loose system of religion with the promptings of reason, I cut loose from all schemes which demand only faith (credulity), and offer no supporting evidence or facts of any kind.

Anent the Sunday question I advised a Holy Joe to start a breed of hens that would not lay eggs on Sunday, secure a monopoly on them, and make money out of his bonanza for the Lord. After making this a success he might turn his attention to the cut-worm, making it a Sunday-rest insect.

Some time ago I took dinner with a very pious man who, knowing my views in relation to suppliant wind-splitting (praying), intended to nonplus me in presence of his family and a visitor who is a sort of half-cocked doubter, or mule-Christian—either term will do.

After being seated he invited me to say something. I told him that though just a little out of practice I would endeavor to do the occasion justice in my own way and according to the dictates of my conscience, agreeing that my words would be found in scripture, or used in the best of families. Terms satisfactory, my face lengthened—crosswise—and I let loose thus:

"O Lord, we thank thee for the supposed beginning, and rejoice over the doubtful fact that in the beginning thou hast wisely foreseen the need of a devil; and as competition is the life of trade, business between thee and thy vis-a-vis has been very lively. We thank thee for thy skill in creating, or rather in transforming one of thy heavenly angels into a devil, who has proved a thorough success, for without his aid thy many houses would be empty on all days, and thy servants would be compelled to do honest work or starve, beg, or steal. Dear Lord, I will take back that last hint, for the reason that on that score they, thy agents, already excel. We admire thy truthfulness in transmitting, by means of thy book, the inclinations and deeds of thy worthies, notably Noah's spree, Lot and Abraham's love affairs, and the latter's attempted infanticide, Jacob's sheep trick, Moses's murdering propensity, David's and Solomon's polygamy, and much more important history of a similar nature, all showing the source of thy modern servants' morality. We offer thanks for thy 'lying spirits,' for venomous reptils, poisonous herbs, mischievous bugs and other insects, all thine own handiwork. Let us include sickness, railroad and steamboat accidents, mine and other catastrophes, all of which could not occur without thy permission, if thy book is true and its expounders understand it right.

"We beseech thee to be ever mindful of the passage in 2 John x, 10. O Lord, look down, or up, or sideways, or any other way the position of the earth might demand, and you will surely see the need of an authentic map of thy realm and of the so-called 'bottomless pit.' Forward, direct or through thine authorized representativs. Thy local agents are unable to furnish one, or any fact whatever concerning either of our future homes. Amen."

The effect must hav been powerful, judging by the commotion that followed. Mine host recognized the fact that the chances to celebrate a grand victory over an Infidel were exceedingly slim just then. In lieu of the expected triumph he ventilated his feelings and instructed his God as regards common-sense people by means of a very voluminous counterblast. O dear, how he did blow his fog-horn. Well, the old fellow finally exhausted all the wind and exorcism at his command, and silence reigned. I was not encored or eulogized, you bet. To my inquiry if it was wrong to speak of what is claimed to exist, or of that which does occur, he replied, "No, it's the wantonness and the combination of words with which you express your devilish Infidelity that is shocking."

He is an old army friend (comrade), and his wife the most tolerant Christian I ever met. She is almost a Liberal, else I should probably hav been ejected rather unceremoniously, because numerically I was seriously in the minority.

My lukewarm fellow-diner sneezed or snickered behind a large water-pitcher, I don't know which. Beyond this he remained as mum as an oyster. He lacked either sense or courage to take sides. Yours for humanity,

F. L. DAUBERSMITH.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Yesterday and To-day.

Yesterday, my heart was sore,
I thought he did not love me!
Life had naught for me in store,
Happiness was mine no more,
The wind was bleak upon the moor,
The sky was gray above me!

I met him coming o'er the mead
Homeward from the shearing!
His collie followed in his lead,
We loitered where the herons feed,
My heart was aching with its need,
Hoping, yet still fearing!

But oh! my heart is glad to-day,
Blue the sky above me!
Life is blossoming like May,
For, as we lingered on the way,
He touched his cheek to mine to say—
"All my life I'll love thee."

GEORGE HAMO,

Self-Prohibition.

I most heartily sanction and say Amen to Elmer W. Pride's platform, that excludes alcohol, tobacco, and so-called swearing, as presented in the Children's Corner under date of February 15th. I object to swearing, not in the orthodox sense, but because it is not refined and elevating. I had rather a man would swear when he means it than pray when he does not mean it. Many people are repelled and shocked at swearing in a certain form but they can lie every day in the year without any compunctions. People learn swearing from the pulpit. The preacher tells people God will damn them, and when they get mad or annoyed they call on him to do it, or to damn some one or something. Man and all nature swears in some way; for swearing is but the expression of our repulsiv resistance and reaction to whatever offends, annoys, and opposes us. So all the commotions and disturbances of the elements and forces on the earth and in the atmosphere are nature's methods of resistance, reaction—swearing. So swearing—not orthodox swearing—is not a sin in evolution's program. In this sense a man may swear and thereby progress or save his life.

In the use of alcohol and tobacco I can see little or no compensation; but, on the other hand, they are the greatest foes to man in a pecuniary, hygienic, vital, mental, and ethical sense. The two substances cost more money than all else that man eats or wears or provides for his mental and esthetical nature. They, directly or indirectly, immediately or remotely, destroy more health and life, produce more vice, crime, and imbecility, than all other causes.

I hav neither time nor space now to giv the unanswerable hygienic, physiological, chemical, and sanitary arguments, nor statistics, against the mind- and body- and brain-impairing, deranging, inflaming, and destroying character and nature of these great enemies of man.

Alcohol and tobacco in all their forms are very poor, bad, unnatural material out of which to produce human flesh and blood, tissue, organs, nerves, brain, and so-called mind, soul, spirit. Yet some—I hope the number is few—of our leading writers and lecturers advocate their use both by precept and example. The great, brilliant writer, peerless orator, and leader and oracle of the Freethinkers says tobacco is one of nature's best gifts to man. If so he should proclaim its use, as he does "liberty, for man, woman, and child." He has used it since he was ten and knows (?) its virtues. But even he, on this subject, is no authority for me.

Alcohol and tobacco are on the whole either a great good or a great curse to man—which? If the former, let all use them. If the latter, let everyone start on Elmer Pride's platform. A man may be healthy and long-lived, wise, good, learned, brilliant, eloquent, and a deep, clear thinker, and drink, smoke, and chew, but, other things being equal, would he not be better, and purer, and smarter in every sense if he eschewed tobacco and alcohol? Would he not be more acceptable to himself, to those who do not use them, and especially to clean, noble, and refined woman?

Surely it becomes Freethinkers and humanitarians to present their bodies as well as minds pure and healthful to the world. If their doctrins and principles are superior to the orthodox and priest-ridden world, so also should be their lives, their habits, their examples. Come then young and old, one and all, and say, or qualify yourself to say: "I do not chew, smoke, drink alcohol, or swear." I would add with emphasis, "Neither do I lie." PROF. J. H. COOK.

Points About Population.

There are 42,000,000 Australians.

There are more than 250,000 Swiss in the United States.

The growth of New York is marvelous. The natural increase of its population now exceeds 60,000 each year.

If all parts of the United States were as densely populated as Rhode Island the population of the country would be 945,760,000.

Nearly one-fifth of the entire population of the United States liv in the fifty chief cities, which hav a population of over 11,000,000.

A statistician says: "Few are aware of the vast number of people that can be placed on a small tract of ground. When we speak of millions of men we are apt to picture to ourselvs an almost boundless mass of humanity; yet a million men standing close together, each not occupying more than four square feet, could be placed on a patch but little more than a third of a mile square. A square mile will accommodate 7,965,000. The whole population of the world could stand on two townships."

Chats with Correspondents.

DR. AYRES, Hannibal, Mo.—We are in sympathy with the good ideas set forth in the Brotherhood of Moralists. The constitution seems good enough to liv by, and that is the thing needed in this world.

GEO. M. DAVENPORT, New York.—The story is good, and will appear after a while. We are crowded with articles, which goes to show the popularity of the Children's Corner. We trust you are well and happy.

PROF. J. H. COOK, Columbus, Kan.—We are glad to hear from you, and to know you are still able to write so keenly and vigorously. Yes, the mental telegraph is a fine means of communication. Your article on "Self-Prohibition" is timely. Thanks for your kindness.

MAGGIE GALLAGHER, Silver Plume, Col.—Read and think for yourself. Our reason is ours for exercise. Compare the teachings of Catholicism with the well-grounded facts of science, and then judge which is correct. Fear not. Be true and faithful to that which is right. Follow truth where'er she leads the way.

J. WATERS, West Sutton, Mass.—We are very busy every day, just now, visiting schools before the long summer vacation, which is now at hand, occurs. You are, no doubt, enjoying the loveliness of nature, that is now at her best. But the extreme heat detracts much from the pleasure of being out of doors.

Correspondence.

BUFFALO, June 13, 1891.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav become very much interested in history lately—that is, in ancient literature. Papa has a book in his library that I wish was in the hands of every "Cornerite" of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. It is Taine's "History of English Literature." What I care for most is the biographical sketches of the ancient and modern poets and the quotations from their most popular works. I hav read a great many biographical essays that hav been dubbed "dry" by my friends and schoolmates, and I also found difficulty reading them, so I hav undertaken to write out some myself. I hope they will not be dry and uninteresting for the Cornerites, if you think them worthy a place in the Corner.

Your true friend, IDA A. BALLOU.

P. S.—Perhaps you would like to know how my collection is progressing. Well, to speak plain, I am getting along finely! I hav just received a letter and card from Miss Craddock, and if all goes well I shall expect Colonel Ingersoll's and Miss Gardener's soon. George Remsburg undoubtedly has a fine collection, but I would not take $50 for mine. I. A. B.

TRICONISTA FARM, SALONICA, TURKEY,
May 25, 1891.

MY DEAR MISS WIXON: To-day I feel inclined to letter-writing, so I am going to write to you first.

Now we are getting accustomed to country life we do not mind it so much as we used to at the commencement. (I wrote and told you all about this farm in my last letter, but I got no answer.)

The country seems pretty safe; we hear of brigands now and then, so you see we hav to keep a sharp lookout. We hav a large iron door to our house and papa keeps the key in his bedroom at night. Two men sleep on the balcony at night and two men keep guard in the yard in the day-time, in case of a sudden surprise. The country is so beautiful, the woods so splendid, but we cannot go out walking far, as no one can be sure what might happen.

We hav lessons with mamma every day, but in two months father is going to get us a governess. I am so fond of music I practice every day. I play some duets with mamma. I wish I had some new music. Would you mind sending me a music-seller's catalog of songs and pieces, because I will hav some pocket-money in six weeks and will treat myself to some new music; we cannot buy music in Salonica, and my music is all mother's and is very old.

We are having hot weather here, but very fine for the crops. The boys are very busy just now making themselvs houses and ships with chairs, etc, making everything topsy-turvy. Lily and Nelson hav grown so big these last few months and are so rosy and well. We each hav a garden; the boys go in for vegetables and I for flowers. My aunt sent me some seeds from England. I must close, dear Miss Wixon, as I must write some more letters, and hoping you will excuse this letter and will answer at your leisure, with love believe me ever your loving friend,

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A NINETEENTH CENTURY NOVEL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroin. The narrativ is, in the main, a history of a working girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Price 25 cents.
